The Artist's New Year

By FLORENCE HARRIS WELLS

HE WAS an artist and had thought by traveling over the snow-bound prairies he could get an inspiration for the winter landscape he was planning. But it was proving a dismal failure, he admitted to himself, as this first day of the New Year was drawing to a close.

He had not chosen to travel this day. His destination should have been reached 24 hours earlier. But here he was and here he was likely to be for some time from the present outlook. All day the slow-moving train had plowed through the heavy snow, now fast becoming a land of ice from the sleety rain that was steadily falling.

To make matters worse, it was an immigrant train. Why Fate had caused him to pick this train he could not understand. A great way indeed to begin the year, with this melange of human beings, instead of at his own fireside. And he had deluded himself with the thought that he might get inspiration from a trip such as this, he sarcastically reminded himself. Sleet, rain and ice without — a chill gray background; while within it was infinitely worse — immigrants with gutteral voices—he didn't like immigrants. He didn't like their numerous children.

He had just come to this unusual conclusion—as a rule all childhood appealed to him—when a grimy little girl crept into the seat beside him and with shining eyes upturned to his, asked:

"Is it not beau-u-ti-ful, mister?"

The artist looked where the grimy little finger pointed—and got his inspiration.

The heavy clouds, grown thin, were dashed with scarlet and pink, making the black farm buildings stand out in silhouetted gracefulness against a heavenly sky. The last rays of the setting sun sent a glow over the gleaming ice-covered prairie that made it shimmer and sparkle with a mystical radiance.

He put his arm about the travel-stained little immigrant. She, too, had the artist's soul. Busy with his own self-centered thoughts, but for this child he would have missed the greatest inspiration nature from her bountiful store had ever set before him.

The New Year had brought much to him after all.

The New Year

I wonder what the new year brings—
A hundred little happy things,
A little burden, a little care,
A little hope, a load to bear,
A little love, the fewest fears,
A lot of smiles, not many tears,
A lot of pluck the whole day long,
A little prayer at evensong,
A day well spent, all joyful things,
All these I pray the new year brings.

"FARM MANUFACTURERS" MAKE MOST MONEY

Farmers who are manufacturers rather than sellers of raw products are the ones who make the most money out of farming, declared C. M. Long, chief of farm service in his discussion of the present dairy situation before the Purdue Farmers' Conference at Purdue University last week.

With low priced raw materials in the form of farm crops and with profitable markets on every hand for products into which they can be converted or manufactured, puts the farmer on a manufacturing basis. It spells C-A-S-H farming. However, greater profits from farming cannot be expected by the mere setting up of this machinery—the placing of the cow, the sow and the hen on the farm. These machines must be made to operate efficiently and economically, to convert pasture, hay, grain and other raw farm crops into milk, pork and eggs at a good profit, Mr. Long emphasized.

"The bulk of American farm crops does not find its way to market as such," Mr. Long said. Most of it is fed to livestock and is marketed in the form of butterfat, milk, eggs, pork and other animal products. About 80 out of every 100 bushels of corn produced is fed to livestock, which also consumes approximately 40 per cent of the wheat and 75 per cent of the oats crop. In addition to the vast amountof corn that is fed to hogs, these animals also consume around 25,000,000 bushels of barley each year. Poultry alone eat more of our 870,000,000 bushel wheat crop than is exported. Cattle and work horses do away with 96 per cent of the nation's hay crop, and it takes nearly 4,000,000 acres of corn in the form of silage to feed our milk cows. Therefore; the livestock farmer is not so much concerned with the price of corn of Chicago or the price of alfalfa at Kansas City as he is in the returns from butterfat, eggs, pork and broilers. His problem is based on the returns he gets for a ton of alfalfa when it is fed to dairy cows and converted into butterfat, for corn when it is converted into fat hogs and the price he receives for his grains and skimmilk when made into eggs."

The value of all dairy products produced in the United States in 1926 was given by Mr. Long as $2,750,000,000, a sum which is equal to the combined valuation of all the cattle, hogs and sheep, as well as their sires and dams, produced in this country last year. Had all these animals been taken away from the farm last year, there would now be no dairy and livestock business. On the other hand, the sale of two and three-quarter billion dollars worth of dairy products still leaves the cows, the source of all this tremendous wealth, to create a new fortune for cow milking farmers this year. If all the dairy products sold last year were paid for at one time with gold, all the gold produced in the United States since 1885 would be required.

Notwithstanding the fact that the income from dairy products last year increased 8 per cent over 1925 and 22 per cent over 1922, the volume of products decreased 1.2 per cent since 1925. The past year, therefore, was one of the most profitable, not only in the dairy industry, but in the allied industries of poultry and swine growing as well.

The demand for dairy products is increasing rapidly. There are indications that this demand is growing more rapidly than production is being increased. Not only are people in this country consuming more dairy products per capita, but each year the number of people is increasing at a rate which will require 25,000 additional cows by 1930 in Indiana alone to take care of this state's increased population, to say nothing of the additional cows required for herd replacement. The only possibility for a decreased demand for dairy production would be a general industrial depression, but no such severe depression is looked for in the very near future.

Milk production does not vary directly with the number of cows, but is greatly influenced in the flush season by the condition of pastures and in the feeding season by the abundance and cheapness of feed. Feeds were cheap last winter and spring, but the average condition of pastures was considerably below normal all summer. Concentrates and hay are less abundant this winter than last. Even if nothing like a shortage of feed developes, Mr. Long declared that the influence of this factor will be toward lighter production during the coming months as compared to the same months a year ago. This was one of the reasons brought out by Mr. Long to show that the dairy industry is not confronted with any grave menace of domestic over-production.

SCHOOL DAYS

SOMETHING TO THINK ABOUT

By F. A. WALKER

RESENTING DISCIPLINE

WHEN young men or young women, in the performance of their routine duties in the office, behind the counter, or "on the road," grow presuming and self-important, it is safe to predict they are riding for a fall.

People of this type, afflicted as they are with an overwhelming sense of superiority, take strange delight in "showing off"—in removing the shutters before anything is put in the windows.

In this gross display of egotism they unwittingly exhibit the limply-woven and haphazard stuff of which they are made.

It cannot be said that they are all inefficient or incapable, but they do lack in their make-up the sturdy, essential substance upon which to build solidly.

This regrettable thought of self dominates their weak mentality until it becomes an integral part of them, and governs in a large measure their mannerism, their intonation of voice and their haughty attitude towards those whose good-will and good opinion they should strive to cultivate.

This spirit of foolish pride, sad to relate, is becoming alarmingly noticeable among striplings just stepping on the threshold of real endeavor.

They rail against discipline, because they imagine it stamps them with a sort of commonality, indicative of their lowly position.

They have been so tried among the inconstant squalls and criticisms of their employers, so often urged to conform with rules and regulations intended for their betterment and the advancement of the business interest of the firm, that the whole world seemed forever scolding and calling them "to attention."

In this hapless mood they become disloyal, and like Tom Sawyer, explain: "Ah, if my 'boss' could only die temporarily!"

All of which is wrong, and which they themselves know is wrong.

The advice is for their good. It is intended to lift them from the rut and put them on solid ground where they can run the race in proper form, and take later in life their rightful place among the winners.

There is nothing so hot-headed, so plausibly foodhardy in the verdant youth of today as this growing inclination to resent discipline. It's the best disciplined, the willing to be guided, the faithful followers of their leaders, who win the big prizes of life, and rise step by step to wealth and fame. Think it over.

ALL GOOD THINGS

THE following is a dessert which will be wholesome for the children:

Make a custard with a quart of milk, a cupful of cream, a can of condensed milk, one tablespoonful of vanilla, a half cupful of sugar, and one crushed junket tablet dissolved in a tablespoonful of cold water. Warm the milk to lukewarm and mix all the ingredients; let stand in a warm place until thick. When cold, freeze, and when partly frozen add a half pound of chopped figs, which have been cooked with one-half cupful of sugar and three tablespoonfuls of orange juice. Finish freezing.

Fig Ice Cream.

Scald one quart of milk, add three teaspoonfuls of cornstarch mixed with a little cold milk and cook until thick. Cook slowly fifteen minutes. Beat the yolks of four eggs, add a half teaspoonful of salt and one-half cupful of maple sirup; beat into the hot mixture and cook until the egg is set. Add two cupfuls of hot cream and let chill; add one teaspoonful of vanilla and begin to freeze. When half frozen add one-half pound of chopped figs cooked until tender in boiling water, then mix with half a cupful of maple sirup, a little grated lemon rind and two tablespoonfuls of lemon juice.

Flemish Carrots.

Cut prepared carrots into thin slices and cook until tender in a little boiling water slightly salted. For one pint of carrots, melt a tablespoonful of butter, add a cupful of chopped onion, and one-half teaspoonful of sugar. Cover and cook until yellow, add one cupful of beef broth. Simmer twenty minutes and sprinkle with parsley.

Graham Cracker Cake.

Cream one-half cupful of shortening, add one-third of a cupful each of honey and sugar, add the beaten yolks of two eggs, one cupful of milk, two and seven-eighths cupfuls of rolled cracker crumbs mixed with three teaspoonfuls of baking powder, one-half teaspoonful of cinnamon, and one-fourth teaspoonful of salt. Add the stiffly beaten whites and bake in two layer tins about twenty minutes. Put together with jelly or jam filling and cover with chocolate icing.

THE BOY'S LINCOLN

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

LINCOLN, I love you most for this;
I never knew a boy to miss:
The glory of your story. He Could be the boy you used to be,
In his imagination. You
Were one he understood and knew.
Though history was often dim,
You were no mystery to him.
With you, because he understood,
He worked the garden, cut the wood,
Or drove the wedges for his sire.
With you he lay before the fire
And saw strange fancies in the blaze,
The dreams God grants in boyhood days,
Or on some little journey took
Along some well-beloved book.
He had the bruise, the blow, the fall,
Yet had a mother through it all,
A second mother, wise and kind.
Yes, every boy could somehow find Himself in Lincoln, could behold
Within himself the boy of old.
Could hear his voice, and touch his hand,
A boy a boy could understand.

Lincoln, for this I love you best:
You struck a spark in boyhood's breast
And lit in boyhood hearts the fire
Of high ambition, that desire
(What flags are folded or unfuried)
That yet must somehow save the world.
For, if a lad could be the lad
That Lincoln was, if boyhood had
That common kinship, knew the truth
Of Lincoln's dreams in Lincoln's youth,
Yes, felt his pain and lived his joy,
If Lincoln was another boy,
Then boyhood, making manhood's plan,
Could think of Lincoln as a man—
Could dare to dream his dreams, and know
A boy may rise, however low
To any heights, however high,
If he, like Lincoln, dares to try.
Lincoln, for this I love you most:
That boyhood loves you. Men may boast,
But this is greatness. And today,
Whatever orators may say,
In this your greatest greatness lies:
I see your dreams in boyhood's eyes.

How It Started

By JEAN NEWTON

"SOUR GRAPES"

"DID you hear Smith say he would not take a western managership? Sour grapes, I say!"

So frequently in common speech we hear this phrase used with reference to a person who tries to deprecate something which he cannot have. The expression comes to us from one of Aesop's fables, "The Fox and the Grapes."

According to this story, which has been traced back to the collection made by Pauedrus, the ancient Greek, a fox was strolling on a hot summer's day through an orchard full of luscious grapes. He saw, high upon a vine, a particularly ripe and delicious looking bunch, just the thing to quench his thirst.

He drew back a few paces and made a jump for it, but just missed it. Two or three times more he tried without success. Then he turned and left them, sneering: "Those grapes are sour!"

And so in our speech today, when people pretend to despise something that is beyond their reach, we think of old Reynard in the fable that is thousands of years old, and say, "Sour grapes!"

Lesson for January 30

THE CHRISTIAN OVERCOMING TEMPTATION

LESSON TEXT—Luke 4:1-13; I Cor. 10:12, 13.

GOLDEN TEXT—In that He Himself hath suffered being tempted, He is able to succor them that are tempted.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Obeying God Always.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—How Christ Helps the Tempted.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—How to Overcome Temptation.

Christ's temptation was Messianic. No one has ever been tempted just like He was—led into the wilderness by the Holy Spirit to be tempted of the devil (Matt. 4:11). While we are not tempted as He was, the devil uses the same methods on us. This temptation was not:

1. A preparation for His work, but rather its first conflict. In His baptism we have the symbolic act of the dedication of Himself to the work of redemption through the cross—the making full a righteousness.

2. It was not to see if Christ would stand fast, nor to see if He would fail under the most crucial test. He could not have failed.

3. It was to show Christ as an object upon which we may rest our faith with unshaken confidence. He came as the second man, the head of the new race. The temptation therefore was a demonstration of the inseparableness of the divine and human natures in the incarnation.

I. The Temptation of Christ (Luke 4:1-13).

1. The place (v. 1).

The wilderness of Judea. The first man, Adam, was tempted in a garden with the most pleasant surroundings. The second man, Jesus Christ, was tempted in a barren wilderness surrounded by wild beasts (Mark 1:13).

2. The method (vv. 2-12).

Christ as the world's Redeemer sustained a three-fold relationship—Son of Man, the Messiah and Son of God, therefore Satan made each one a ground of attack.

(1) As Son of Man (vv. 2-4).

Satan made his first assault upon Him as a man by appealing to the instinct of hunger. Satan urged Him to use His divine power and convert a stone into bread. Hunger is natural and sinless. Real human life experiences hunger. The temptation was in satisfying a right hunger in a wrong way. To have yielded in this case though His hunger was desperate, would have been to renounce the human limitations which He had taken for our sins. In the incarnation He became identified with humanity, so He chose to abide in fellowship with man.

(2) As Messiah (vv. 5-8).

Here the temptation was to grasp His rightful dominions by false means. The devil offered to surrender unto Him the world if He would adopt his methods—worship him. The force of this temptation was in the fact that the kingdoms of the world are Christ's by God's covenant with Him. God's method by which Jesus was to possess the world was the sacrificial death on the cross.

(3) As Son of God (vv. 9-12).

Here Satan tries to induce Christ to presume upon God's care. He quotes a Messianic Psalm to induce Him to an act. To do the spectacular thing in order to get notice is to fall into Satan's temptation. For Jesus to have placed Himself in danger in order to get God's special help in delivering Him would have been to sin.

(4) Christ's defense (vv. 4, 8, 12).

It was the Word of God. He met and repulsed the enemy with "It is written." Our defense is God's Word.

(5) The issue (v. 13).

Satan was vanquished.

II. The Temptation of Believers (I Cor. 10:12, 13).

1. Temptation is to be expected (v. 12).

From the appearance of Satan in the Garden of Eden on down through the ages men and women have been assailed by the tempter. These facts are God's admonitions unto us upon whom the ends of the world are come. Caution is always necessary. Overweening self-confidence is most perilous to those who rest in the security of their divine election while neglecting a life of holiness.

2. Divine help available (v. 13).

All temptations which come to us are those which are common to the race. No one should surmise that his temptation is peculiar. God is faithful and will not allow the temptation to go beyond the ability of the one tempted. He will provide a way of escape.

"I Speak From Experience" Says Oscar Hurst of Princeton

Well known drug clerk weak and rundown by indigestion, now hail and hearty again. Gains 23 pounds and enjoys old time vigorous life. Uses and recommends Tanlac

Mr. Hurst is a drug clerk and lives at the Pullman Hotel, Princeton, Ind. His everyday duties bring him in contact with all kinds of people and all kinds of medicine. Here is his own story of what Tanlac has done for him:

"What I went through for years," he said, "I never want to endure again. My stomach seemed to go back on me altogether. First, I had indigestion, sour stomach and bad taste in my mouth. Then came attacks of heartburn and dizzy spells. I practically quit eating, for the slightest morsel of food caused palpitation of the heart and difficult breathing.

"My weight dropped from 136 lbs. to 113 lbs., was weak, listless and discouraged. I became cranky and irritable; my nerves were jumpy and I had spells of depression. I began to give up hope of ever being well again.

"I tried all kinds of remedies without success. Even Tanlac at first didn't seem to help much. But after the third bottle I noticed a marked improvement. All the distressing conditions gradually disappeared and I began to recover my lost weight. Now I'm 136 lbs. and work hard every day, and feel tip-top in every way. I'm a new man. What I'm telling you about Tanlac is no hearsay: I speak from experience. You well know that when a drug clerk uses a remedy himself and recommends it, that remedy must have considerable merit."

Thousands of citizens in every state of the Union have had experiences similar to that of Mr. Hurst. If you're rundown from overwork, worry, or neglect, start building your way back to normalcy today. Get a trial bottle of Tanlac from your druggist. It is Nature's own remedy made from herbs, roots and barks, according to the famous Tanlac formula. Over 52 million bottles sold.

DR. W. B. CALDWELL AT THE AGE OF 83

Constipation! How to Keep Bowels Regular

To Dr. W. B. Caldwell, of Monticello, Ill., a practicing physician for 47 years, it seemed cruel that so many constipated men, women, children, and particularly old folks, had to be kept constantly "stirred up" and half sick by taking cathartic pills, tablets, salts, calomel and nasty oils.

While he knew that constipation was the cause of nearly all headaches, biliousness, indigestion and stomach misery, he did not believe that a sickening "purge" or "physic" was necessary.

In Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin he discovered a laxative which helps to establish natural bowel "regularity" even for those chronically constipated. Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin not only causes a gentle, easy bowel movement but, best of all, it never gripes, sickens, or upsets the system. Besides, it is absolutely harmless, and so pleasant that even a cross, feverish, bilious, sick child gladly takes it.

INFLUENCES ON VALUE OF EGGS

Eggs vary in size and color, but investigations show that healthy hens, fed normal rations, lay eggs that are consistently of good quality. However, there are many factors that influence the market value of eggs, most of which are within the control of the producer and dealer of eggs.

Eggs are not bought and sold by the pound, but the size of the eggs causes considerable difference in their value. "Extras" must weigh 46 pounds net per case of 30 dozen.

This is an average of slightly over two ounces per egg. "Extra firsts" must weigh 44 pounds per case. The proper selection of breeding stock is undoubtedly the biggest factor in securing eggs of good size, although the size is influenced to some extent by proper feeding.

Cleanliness has an important influence on the value of eggs. Dirty eggs deteriorate more rapidly than clean eggs, do not present as pleasant an appearance, are not fit for storage, and, therefore, do not sell for as high a price as eggs that are clean. Dirty eggs may be largely eliminated by providing plenty of clean nests which are well supplied with clean litter. On rainy days it may be helpful to keep the hens confined until 10 a. m., when most of the hens will be through laying for the day.

Some markets pay a premium for white eggs. A few markets pay a premium for brown eggs. Dealers seldom pay a premium for eggs of one color, as compared with mixed colors. In shipping eggs, it is necessary to take this characteristic of the market into consideration. Uniformity of color is always appreciated and this is one of the advantages gained by improving the flock through the use of improved stock.

Eggs may be of the same size and color but vary considerably in market value. This is on account of the difference in quality of the interior. Most eggs are good when they are first laid, but different methods of handling influence the quality to a large extent. Therefore, the problem of handling eggs is important as well as proper management of the flock.

Singing Hen Not Happy as Many People Thought

Singing hens have long been thought to be happy when, in fact, she sings only when all is not well in poultrydom. Hens, like human beings, are almost all very temperamental.

The singing of a hen must not be confused with clucking. Biddy's song starts softly, proceeds without break for as long as breath will allow, and often ends in a high, nasal intonation.

If the hen finds no suitable place to lay, she sings; when all the nests are full and she can't find one, she sings. Song gives vent to her feelings if hunger is troubling her, or thirst. She sings in strange surroundings like the small boy sent on an errand in the dark. Worry and shyness also bring song. She tries by singing to make herself look brave and at home at times when her self-assurance has been shaken.

Poultrymen who want to keep their flocks in perfect contentment will keep them from singing.

Rations Fed to Layers Are Lacking in Protein

During recent experiments at the Nebraska Agricultural college, it was found that rations fed to laying hens were commonly lacking in some form of complete protein like meat meal, skim milk, tankage, dried buttermilk, or liquid buttermilk. An addition of six pounds of high-grade tankage to a typical corn-belt ration increased the egg production from 59 in the check pen to 183 eggs per hen in the tankage-fed lot. Skim milk or buttermilk, when available at all times, may take the place of meat meal or tankage in the mash mixture, but it is necessary that each hen consume about 110 pounds of milk in a year in order to get the equivalent protein furnished by six pounds of tankage.

Separate Breeding Pen

Many seem to have acquired the idea that keeping a separate breeding pen means a considerable expense and much extra labor for the farmer. This is not the case or if there are such cases it is unnecessary. Maintaining a breeding pen simply means that the best birds in the flock are selected and placed by themselves during the breeding season. The breeding pen furnishes eggs for hatching during the hatching season. This means that the chicks will be much improved.

Importance of Rooster

The male is as important in poultry as in dairying. Be sure that he is out of a good flock. It does not matter whether or not he is a cockerel, or an old cock, as long as he has a good physical make-up, plenty of fight, and fully matured. Males show a preference for certain hens, and there should be plenty of males in the flock. The number of females and males, and the relation between them, depends upon breed characteristic, size of flock, and time of season.

KITCHEN TABLE IS PRIZE WINNER

Hard Work and Ingenuity Used in Building Device.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Left a widow, with three small children, a mother entered the kitchen contest in Albemarle county, Virginia, and won the prize for making the most improvement at the least expense. All the improvements in her kitchen cost only $3.70, most of which was spent for paint. One of the best things she did was to construct this kitchen work table, with a very little help from a carpenter, out of old lumber found around the place.

The rack for tins of supplies is set about two-thirds of the way from the rear end of the table, leaving a sufficient work space at the free end, where the high stool is placed, for mixing cakes and preparing other foods. The remainder of the table behind the rack is used for giving the children their meals, in the same way a breakfast alcove is used. Hanging from the ceiling is a rack for such small utensils as the egg beater, strainer, canning tongs, and so on.

This was originally a whip hanger in a country store. The table, stool and tins were all painted white. The photograph was taken by the United States Department of Agriculture.

Economical Meat Dishes Recommended for Table

Here are some economical meat dishes recommended by the United States Department of Agriculture: Ham hocks and sauerkraut, chuck steak, lamb stew with peas, potatoes and carrots; beef shank with vegetables, chuck pot roast, pork sausage and apples, swissed round steak. Many people do not know that forequarter cuts of meat from choice animals are usually much cheaper and far more palatable than hindquarter cuts from animals of inferior breeding, or which have not been well fattened.

Recipe for Preparing Cream of Spinach Soup

Cream of spinach soup is made from either spinach cooked for this purpose or from left-over spinach. Put a quart of milk to heat in the double boiler with a slice of onion in it. From half to one cupful of cooked spinach will be enough to combine with this amount of milk. A quarter to a half pound of fresh spinach will yield about this quantity when cooked. Whether the spinach was prepared previously or at the time of making the soup, all liquor from it should be saved and used with it. Some of the valuable mineral constituents of the spinach are dissolved in this liquor. Wash the spinach thoroughly, chop it and put it in a saucepan with one or two tablespoonfuls of hot water—just enough to keep it from scorching until the leaves are wilted and the spinach liquor develops. Salt it lightly. In about 10 minutes the spinach will be done. Mince it very fine or press it through a strainer and add it to the hot milk. Melt two tablespoonfuls of butter and blend with two tablespoonfuls of flour. Pour a little of the hot mixture on the flour and butter and add gradually to the soup. Season to taste, remove the slice of onion, and serve. If you prefer more onion flavor, mince the onion and cook it in the melted butter before adding the flour, then add the hot milk with the spinach.

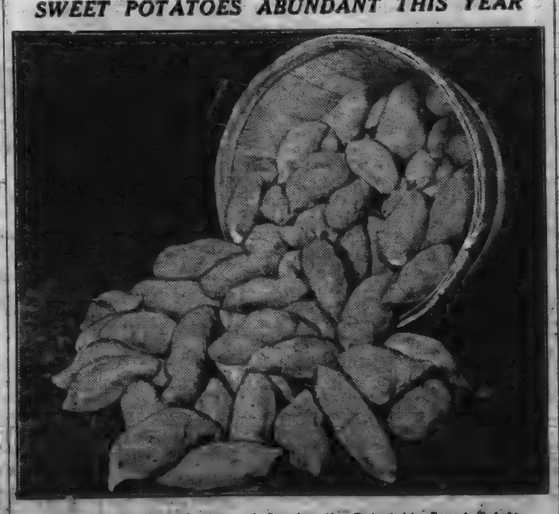
Lifting Laundry Water Makes Wash Day Hardest

Lifting laundry water in and out of portable tubs makes wash day the hardest of all in many rural homes. The latest publication on home laundering issued by the United States Department of Agriculture contains a hint for reducing this task to a minimum. Pipe the water to the tubs by means of a flexible rubber hose, if possible, and by all means siphon off the waste water with a hose when ready to empty the tubs. To make such a siphon, fill a short length of the hose with water, close the ends and invert it, placing one end under the surface of the water and the other at a lower level. Open without removing the shorter end from under the surface of the water. A faucet soldered into the end of the wash boiler facilitates emptying it.

Curing and Fermentation Applied to Vegetables

There is a distinction between "curing" and "fermentation" as applied to vegetables treated in brine. Curing refers to the changes which vegetables undergo in brine as a result of osmosis by which brine largely takes the place of the vegetable juices, with resulting changes in cellular structure. Fermentation relates to the action of certain bacteria in changing the sugar content of the vegetable juices into acids and other end products. In a weak brine (5 per cent or less) bacteria are not inhibited and the process is largely a fermentation. In a moderately strong brine (10 per cent) both processes go on about equally. In a strong brine (15 per cent or over) bacteria are inhibited and the process is almost entirely a salt curing.

SWEET POTATOES ABUNDANT THIS YEAR



There Are Various Ways of Serving the Delectable Sweet Potato.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

This is a sweet potato year. The United States Department of Agriculture says that in many localities sweet potatoes are cheaper to buy than white. So this is a good season to have sweet potatoes often on the menu in as many good ways as possible. Have them baked, boiled, fried, mashed or stuffed. Use them, if you like, in pie, much as you use pumpkin or squash. Here are several good recipes to add to those you have:

Candied Sweet Potatoes.

Select six medium-sized sweet potatoes, uniform in size if possible. Partially cook the unpeeled sweet potatoes in boiling water. Cool and skin. Cut in halves lengthwise, or in three pieces if the potatoes are large. Put in a greased baking dish large enough for just one layer, not packing too closely. Make a sirup by boiling one cupful of corn sirup, one-quarter teaspoonful salt, two tablespoonfuls or more of butter and one-half cupful of brown sugar.

Sweet Potatoes With Apples.

3 sweet potatoes, or about a pound.
4 apples.
½ cup sugar.
3 tablespoons butter.
Cold water.

Wash the sweet potatoes and cook them in their skins, in boiling salted water, for 15 minutes. Skin and cut into slices. Peel the apples, core and cut into slices. Place the sweet potatoes and apples in alternate layers in a buttered baking dish, and sprinkle sugar over each layer, also dots of butter. Add a little water and bake until the apples and potatoes are soft.

Baked Stuffed Sweet Potatoes.

Bake six medium-sized sweet potatoes and cut them in halves lengthwise. Scoop out the inside and season it with salt, pepper and butter, and moisten with milk or cream. Mash and beat until light. Refill the skins with the seasoned potatoes and brown in the oven.

Sweet Potato Puff with Marshmallows.

To two cupfuls of hot riced sweet potatoes add three tablespoonfuls of butter, one-half teaspoonful salt, pepper and one-half cupful of hot milk. Beat well. Then beat two eggs separately, add yolks to the potato mixture, cut and fold in the stiffly beaten whites. Place the mixture in a buttered baking dish and place a layer of marshmallows close together over the top and brown in a slow oven.

If Back Hurts Flush Kidneys

Drink Plenty of Water and Take Glass of Salts Before Breakfast Occasionally

When your kidneys hurt and your back feels sore, don't get scared and proceed to load your stomach with a lot of drugs that excite the kidneys, and irritate the entire urinary tract. Keep your kidneys clean like you keep your bowels clean, by flushing them with a mild, harmless salts which helps to remove the body's urinous waste and stimulate them to their normal activity.

The function of the kidneys is to filter the blood. In 24 hours they strain from it 500 grains of acid and waste, so we can readily understand the vital importance of keeping the kidneys active.

Drink lots of good water—you can't drink too much; also get from any pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts. Take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast each morning for a few days and your kidneys may then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for years to help clean and stimulate clogged kidneys; also to neutralize the acids in the system so they are no longer a source of irritation, thus often relieving bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive; cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink, which everyone should take now and then to help keep their kidneys clean and active. Try this; also keep up the water drinking, and no doubt you will wonder what became of your kidney trouble and backache.

ALTONA MAN ARRESTED FOR STEALING PONY

The unusual charge pending against Herman Kaellner in the DeKalb circuit court is that of sealing a Shetland pony, buggy and harness.

Kaellner, whose home is in Altona, was placed under arrest Wednesdaay night by Sheriff John C. Armstrong and Deputy Sherig Arden Morr on an affidavit signed by Chas. Carlin of Garrett.

The alleged theft was committed Dec. 24. Mr. Carlin places the value of the stolen property at $100.

Kaellner pleaded not guilty when taken before Judge Endicott Thursday afternoon and was remanded to jail under $1,000 bond.

F. M. Monroe made his first appearance on the street Tuesday, in a wheel chair, following several months confinement to his home with paralysis.

NIGHT CLUB AT FORT WAYNE HELD UP

Posing as federal prohibition agents in the process of making a raid, three bandits early Sunday morning gained entrance to the Bijou club, an exclusive night club at Fort Wayne, held up club members and escaped with cash and jewelry valued at about $5,000. The holdup occurred about 4 o'clock Sunday morning. Three bandits entered the place while the fourth sat outside in an automobile in which the robber gang sped away a few minutes later. Answering the doorbell, the doorkeeper was informed that the men there were "federal agents" who "came to search the place." They were admitted and went directly to the clubrooms. There they commanded the club members to "stick 'em up," drawing pistols as they did. The club members were lined against the wall and the bandits started to go through their pockets.

WINTER CIRCUS, SHRINE AUDITORIUM

"Greater and Grander than Ever!" That slogan fits the Big Shrine Circus which opens at the Shrine Auditorium, Fort Wayne, for six gala days starting Monday night, January 31st. "Greater and Grander" because it will surpass anything ever attempted by the Shrine, or in fact on a more mammoth scale than any indoor amusement event in the history of Fort Wayne.

Every act to be seen in the rings are brought to Fort Wayne from the winter quarters of the three largest circuses in this country. Everything you have seen in the big white tops during the summer season, you will see at the Shrine Circus. Elephants, a baby hippopotamus, tigers, monkeys, kangaroos and many other animals. And then, the acrobats, the strong men, the wire walkers, society high school horses, dogs and ponies and last but not least, an army of clowns in a series of jolly stunts that will keep you happy.

In organizing the Shrine Circus, the management has been prompted with a desire to present to the public a show which would have both the characteristics of Novelty and the stamp of Excellence. A single visit to the Shrine Circus will satisfy all of its genuine worth.

Only two matinee of the Circus will be given, Wednesday and Saturday are the days when you can see the big Shrine Circus in the afternoon.

VETERAN INSURANCE CHANGE URGED

Because of the inconvenience of the world war veterans in making loans through banks on their adjusted service certificate Congressman David Hogg of Indiana, has urged the Ways and Means Committee to report at once the bill authorizing the government to make loans direct to the veterans. This would do away with the present troublesome requirements and the money is already held by the government for that purpose. Mr. Hogg is earnestly advocating an immediate amendment of the original act.

Many congressmen have become interested in the bill introduced to double the tariff on onions. This is also pending before the Ways and Means Committe It is contended that because of the heavy importations the price in Indiana is below the cost of production. At one time last year onions sold in Spain for 15 cents per bushel whereas the cost of production in Indiana is near one dollar per bushel.

ILLEGAL FISHING CAUSES ARRESTS

Charged in affidavits with catching fish under the legal size, Richard Wallace, Schuyler Smith, Alonzo Reeder and Charles Zollers paid fines of $1 and costs in each case amounting to $15 in the court of pustice of the Peace E. A. McClintock Friday night in Auburn. Pickerel were caught by the four, it is alleged by Frank Leighty, deputy game warden, near the dam across the St. Joe river at Spencerville. It is claimed the men were fishing through the ice. The fines were paid.

Monetary Temptations

Temptations connected with money are indeed among the most insidious and among the most powerful to which we are exposed. They have probably a wider empire than drink, and, unlike the temptations that spring from animal passions, they strengthen rather than diminish with age.—W. E. H. Lecky.

Looking Back For 50 Years

Fifty years ago this year a national banking system was started in the United States.

Today Americans have on deposit and subject to check or drawing interest the unheardof sum of

If you do not own a part of that vast sum, you can still profit through the experience of others. You can still make your dollars wor for you—and a working dollar is the only dollar worth having.

Or you can do your boy or girl a wonderful favor by taking even one dollar and starting an account for them—and then teaching them how thrift and saving has made thee United States the most prosperous, the most contented, the happiest nation in the world.

VOL. XLI. ST. JOE, DeKALB COUNTY, INDIANA, THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 3, 1927 NUMBER 5

DIES VERY SUDDENLY IN THE WEST

Death came suddenly and unannounced to Charles S. Ricketts, of Lake Wilson, Minn., Saturday morning. Mr. Ricketts was assisting with the butchering and with out warning fell dead.

It was a terrible shock to the family and to the friends as they learned of his death.

Charles S. Ricketts was born in Concord township, DeKalb county, Indiana, January 24, 1858 and died January 22, 1927. To his first marriage were born three children: Mrs. Philip Gass of Los-Angeles, Cal., Ira Ricketts, who lives in Duluth, Minn., and Mrs. Josie Carlson of Willmar, Minn., who died seven years ago.

Mr. Ricketts was married again to Mrs. Ada Butler of West Union, Iowa, June 25, 1910. To this union were born two children: Gerald and Lila, who are at home.

Funeral services were held at the Methodist Church in Slayton, Minn., Tuesday afternoon in charge of Rev. Palmer of Lake Wilson and interment made in the Slayton cemetery.

Charles Ricketts has been a resident of Western Murray for nearly thirty years and had a wide circle of friends who extend sympathy to the bereaved ones.

Those from away who attended the funeral were: Ira Ricketts of Duluth, Minn., Glen Gass of Minneapolis and Mr. and Mrs. Ben Bump of Stone Lake, Wis.

WORTH COATS PASSED AWAY IN WEST

The following is a short account of the death of a former Newville township citizen:

George Worth Coats, son of Noyce and Rebecca Coats was born at Gravel Corners, Indiana, October 19, 1850. He passed away at his home in Ossett, Montana, on Monday, January 24, 1927, aged 76 years, 3 months and 5 days.

On April 20, 1882, he married Alice R. McCay of Auburn and to this union was born three children: George, (deceased,) Cassius W., of Mitchell, South Dakota and Helen Mary of Chicago.

He lived in Indiana in the vicinity of Newville until 1904, when he with his family moved to St. Louis, Missouri. In 1914 he moved to Montana, where he resided until he died.

"Behold what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God: therefore the world knoweth us not, because it knew him not. Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be: but we know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him: for we shall see him as he is. And every man that hath this hope in him purifieth himself, even as he is pure."

1st John 3: 1-3.

The body was shipped to Butler, arriving Friday evening and taken to the Harry Hendershot home. The funeral was conducted Sunday at the Newville U. B. Church, by Rev. Hubbartt, at 1:00 o'clock. Richard Rupp of Butler funeral director.

PENSION ASSURED MRS. ANN DILLEY

The congressional record, a copy of which arrives at The News desk each day, of Friday, bears information that not only pleases our citizens, but especially Mrs. Sarah A. Dilley. Page 2465 we read as follows:

"Be it enacted, that the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Sarah A. Dilley, widow of Vincent F. Dilley, late substitute, unassigned, tenth congressional district, Indiana, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month."

The report is that Congressman David Hogg has succeeded in getting pensions for nine people through at this time. Numerous times Mrs. Dilley has made effort to get her pension since Mr. Dilley died. Back pay will eivdently acompany this passage. Her pension number will be H. R. 8233.

HAROLD BAKER WINS CASH PRIZE

As the result of club work among the boys at school, Harold Baker has won a cash prize as a potato grower of merit.

At the county show last fall he was awarded second place and he then showed his samples in the B. & O. advanced class at Purdue, and his return showed he was awarded eighth place, with a cash prize of $8.00.

His yield was 91 bushels on one fourth of an acre. This is a worthy recognition for a youngster to receive and will be an inspiration to go on and try for a greater yield another year.

Buy Known Lumber!

FOR years Long-Bell lumber products have been trade-marked and nationally advertised and today no building material trade-mark stands higher with the industry—no lumber product promises more permanence or durability than the products marked with this name.

Men are behind it—men in woods and mills and offices—men skilled in lumber production and distribution—all with one kindred aim: To make this trade-mark stand always for unsurpassed quality and uniformity in lumber. Confidence must surely guide a man in his buying of lumber . . . confidence in the dealer who sells it . . . confidence in the company which makes it . . . and this mark points the way to maximum construction value!

For these reasons our stock of building material includes Long-Bell trade-marked lumber.

JOHN ULM HEADS INSTITUTE NEXT YEAR

Cold Weather Hurt Attendance Last Week—Splendid State Speakers

Last week, on Wednesday the 26th., at the high school gymnasium, was held the first session of the Tri-township Farmers' Institute. Owing to the severe cold weather, but few people were in attendance at the first session, Wednesday A. M., consequently no forenoon session was given. It seems that farmers are unhappy in their selection of dates for their institutes in this section; many will remember that last year, at Spencerville, they experienced bitter cold weather, and on many other years, before that, the same thing occurred.

Wdnesday, P. M. found more people assembled, and Ed Storer, President of the association called the meeting to order. Program was opened by a song by audience, "Carry Me Back to Old Virginny," under leadership of C. A. Woodcox. This was followed by a practical talk by Mr. Woodcox on the subject of "Landscape Gardening." Mr. Woodcox gave a number of good practical ideas on this subject, and can point with reasonable pride to some of his own work in this vicinity. This talk was to have been given in forenoon program, but due to reasons afore mentioned, the forenoon and afternoon programs had to be doubled and some numbers were of necessity omitted. A chorus by boys and girls of Spencerville high school, was very nicely rendered. This was followed by a demonstration of corn grading by two boys of Spencerville high school. They explained the system, point by point, that is observed in grading field corn. Following this was a musical reading by Mrs. Catherine Bowser. This was very cleverly given and received much applause. Mrs. Bowser responded with another number entitled, "Just Smilin'."

Merritt Sechler's subject was "The Production of Pork." Mr. Sechler divided hogs into three classes, and went into the merits and demerits of each class. He has been considered a successful young farmer, and not altogether of the book variety, therefore his words can be given some weight.

P. T. Ulman's discussion of the corn borer next followed. This is a subject of much interest to farmers in general, as yet the borer has not made much headway in this section of the state, and people are curious to know more about the subject. Much opposition is being developed in some quarters, against any and all proposed measures for its control. This, Mr. Ulman contends is due to a lack of understanding of the real gravity of the situation. It has been contended, by not a few people, that the borer is no new thing, that it has been with us for many years. It is true, says Mr. Ulman that a variety of worm, bearing a close resemblance to, and being allied with, in species, the European corn borer, has infested the Eastern states for many years, but a close study of its habits, and of the characteristics, (physical of the worm itself,) shows it to be less harmful than the newer pest. Then, too he states, parasites play upon this imitation, or relative worm, that keeps its numbers down. As yet, no parasite has been discovered which preys upon the true corn borer. It will take time to develope such a predatory parasite. Mr. Ulman then told his hearers how to combat the propagation of this new enemy, by plowing, by shredding fodder and otherwise rendering his chances for propagation less likely. Questions were answered by Mr. Ulman, to the apparent satisfaction of all those interested.

The subject of "Corn Fertilization" was handled by E. E. Stinson. This subject Mr. Stinson said was difficult of explanation, to do the subject justice. He said, "One should be out in the fields to demonstrate. His talk was short. Exercise by grades 3 and 4 of grade schools followed Mr. Stinson's talk. Then a reading by Virginia Shull. All were rendered in a pleasing manner.

ST. JOE TO ENTERTAIN REGIONAL CONTEST EVENT

Arrangements have been perfected for the regional and the final county literary and musical contests for DeKalb county high schools.

Seven events, three literary and four musical, will constitute the program for the contests this year.

The three regional contests will be held on the evening of March 19. The Auburn-Garrett contest will this year be held in Garrett. The contest for Ashley, Corunna and Spencerville will be held in Corunna. The contest for Butler, St. Joe and Waterloo will be held in St. Joe. The local superintendent of schools will act as chairman at each of these contests and with the heads of the contesting schools will select the judges and arrange he other necessary details.

The winers of the various events will compete in the final county contest to be held in Auburn, Friday evening, Marah 26.

Many of the high schools will hold preliminary local contests for the selection of the school's representatives for the various events.

Parent-Teacher Association

The 30th Birthday Anniversary of the National Congress of Parents and Teachers occurs on February 17, 1927.

It is the responsibility of the million members of the Association to make the event memorable and inspiring.

The Parent-Teacher Association is a recognized influence in the educational, religious, philanthropic and social world and is of untold value in protecting, enriching and beautifying child life.

Fully appreciating this truth the officers and program committee of our local P.-T. A., desire to make our next meeting unusually beneficial. The date is Friday night, February 11th., at 7:30 o'clock, in the new gymnasium. Every family in Concord township should be represented.

Our local committee has been very fortunate in securing a speaker who is nationally known in religious work, Dr. E. D. Stone of Baltimore, Maryland. Dr. Stone will be one of the principal speakers at the DeKalb County Sunday School Convention February 10 and 11 at Butler and will come to us free of charge. This is a great opportunity to hear something worth while and one that you cannot afford to miss. Following is the complete program:

20 MINISTERS MEET IN MONTHLY SESSION

The DeKalb County Ministerial Association held its monthly meeting Monday morning at the Eckhart Public Library in Auburn with the Rev. G. F. Hubbartt, the president, in the chair. The devotions were in charge of the Rev. B. M. Bechdolt, Methodist minister at Garrett.

In he business session the president announced that he had appointed the Revs. H. M. Morgan, B. M. Bechdolt and P. A. Hubbartt as the committee on program for the year. The committee on the present temperance situation in the state legislature reported that it had no fear as to the attitude that Messrs. Ridenbur and Shank will take on any attempt to weaken the Wright law. The date of the coming County Sunday School convention was announced and statements of the plans for the County Council of Religious Education were made and endorsed. On motion of the Rev. W. M. Elliott of Garrett, the secretary was instructed to write the state senator and representative that the body favored the bill now before the legislature permitting the excusing of children two hours per week from the public schools that they might attend schools of religious education.

The association considered itself greatly favored by having Dr. Milford H. Lyon, well known evangelist, present as speaker of the mornin. Dr. Lyon was introduced by his son-in-law, the Rev. H. M. Morgan, ad hen took as his subject, "The Place of Evangelism in the Modern Church."

GRAVEL ROADS IN BAD CONDITION

An appeal to truck and motor bus operators to co-operate in the saving of stone and gravel roads in the frequent thaws, has been issued by the state highway commission. In appealing to the motoring public John D. Williams, director of the commission, pointed out that proper precaution and judgment exercised now will put the roads back in shape for normal traffic in a few weeks, but if they are seriously damaged it may take months before they can be repaired.

Road officials pointed out that the gravel and stone surfaces can be ruined if subjeced to overloads when soft. They point to the heavy cost to he taxpayer if extensive repairs are made necessary by destructive overloading.

WHICH LAW DO YOU VIOLATE?

A large number of dogs are still roaming the streets of St. Joe and Spencerville in spite of the request and order of the state board of health to muzzle or tie dogs in order to wipe out the epidemic of rabies which has been pervalent in Indiana for nearly a year. This is a serious matter and should be looked after. America's greatest fault today is, that we all violate the particular law we do not want to obey, although in the aggregate, we are law-abiding.

By Giving The Eyes Needed Attention

Many a person has increased the volume and value of his work. When this result is so easy to secure, and when the rewards are so sure, isn't it surprising that so many neglect their eyes? But thousands of folks are below par in efficiency just because their eyes do not function as they should. We can help such people.

BOLERO AND BLOUSE FEATURED; SHAWL IS NOW RIVAL OF SCARF

ACCORDING to information from those who create the styles it is the expressed intention of the mode to adopt a "feminized styling" in preference to mannish conventional effects. Incoming spring frocks bear flattering testimony that this ambition is being most happily realized. The new gowns also emphasize the fact that the bolero and the blouse are playing an important part in this fascinating feminizing-the-mode movement.

A third element also enters into the scheme of the soft graceful silhouette, namely the full skirt, either plaited, gathered or pin-tucked at the waistline.

One cannot fail to be impressed with the unsophisticated youthful styling of the bolero model shown to the right in the picture. There is feminine charm in the cunning bolero, the full skirt and the novel sleeve puffs. Two style points well worth taking note of in regard to this model are, first, the cashmere fabric of which it is made, and, second, the use of pin-tucks in its development. Soft cashmeres are registered for a successful career during the coming season. As to tiny tucks they enter not only into the styling of spring frocks, but into the making of the cloth coat as well, for the coming season.

So popular are boleros fashionists are introducing them into frocks for every occasion, ranging from the dainty ginghams for morning and porch wear, to the formal evening gown of georgette or taffeta. Not that there is any monotonous repetition in the now-so-stylish bolero treatments; indeed, the possibilities for versatility seem endless.

To the blouse the mode assigns a new role, that of entering into the scheme of the compose costume, which, according to all signs, is to be the leading thought for spring. If the blouse is of plaid or print then the skirt over which it is posed will be of a solid color matched to a predominating tone in the design or vice versa. For instance the blouse in this picture is in jungle green. Its plaited skirt is related to it in that the background of its material is the identical green of the overblouse.

With the invasion of the fanciful shawl into the realm of fashion, the time-honored scarf encounters a rival. Not that the shawl is usurping the place of the scarf, but it satisfies that "something different" call of the mode. Then, too, as an accessory to the evening costume it is the very essence of grace and picturesqueness. So henceforth and until further notice it is up to milady to choose between a scarf and a shawl.

There are shawls and shawls. The kind which interests the mode are huge squares of loveliness. Of cloth, of gold or silver, of rare brocades are they, else of richly embroidered and wondrously befringed crepe de chine.

Some of the shawl creations which enwrap women of fashion cost a fortune—and they are worth it. However, one need not necessarily spend a big sum of money in order to become the owner of a beautiful evening shawl. Why not make one's own shawl at comparatively a trifling expense! Buy a square of double width georgette or chiffon, the ombre shaded kind is the prettiest, such as American beauty shading to a delicate pink. Make a narrow hem, either rolled hemstitched or machine stitched. Then tie deep fringe entirely around the square. One can get silk floss especially intended for fringing.

Sometimes if just a simple shawl is preferred, such as graces the figure seated to the left in the picture, a border of printed georgette may be hemstitched about a square of plain fabric.

When buying a Spanish shawl, the proper thing to do, according to fashion's whim, is to purchase a fan to match it. That is the roses embroidered on the shawl are repeated on the fan through the medium of hand painting. To display these beautiful sets of fan and shawl to their fullest charm, one must be gifted with a touch of coquetry. The rivalry between the Spanish shawl and those of gorgeous metal brocade is keen.

A scarf to match the dress is considered in ultra-smart fashion. The one in the picture is of black chiffon velvet and it is finished with a glittering crystal fringe tassel.

The latest thing in sports scarfs are the futurist silk prints. These are either oblong or in large kerchief squares.

The Man with Three Names

by Harold MacGrath

COPYRIGHT BY THE BELL SYNDICATE INC.

That detective was clever, he reflected. He had worked upon the simplest line imaginable; taken Cathewe's photograph and gone the rounds of the New York banks, and day before yesterday a teller and a cashier had recognized it. The son of Digby Hallowell!

When the dinner came to the coffee and cigar, the butler withdrew, and Mansfield sloped comfortably in his chair.

There is magic for some in coffee and tobacco. The stimulant is negatived by the narcotic; the thinking machine moves smoothly. There came into Mansfield's head a plan for the reconstruction of Bannister, through Betty.

To give the girl a free hand without creating a revolution. Somehow that appealed to his sporting blood. Cathewe out of the way, the spark in the powder-room would be extinguished.

But what did the child mean when she said she had the man in the hollow of her hand? Well, that puzzle would be explained away in the morning. She was her father's daughter. Under that grace of form, under that gentle tenderness and charity there was reinforcement of steel.

* * * * * * *

Cathewe was anxious to have a little chat with Nancy before her guests began to arrive. He had telephoned her to this effect, and she had made the appointment at half after six.

"George Cottar, what in the world have you to say to me that's more important than my new dress?" she began.

"You've been puzzled regarding my conduct in relation to Miss Mansfield. Haven't you?"

"Yes. Are you going to tell me that you came here because you'd fallen in love with Betty—somewhere else?"

"I didn't suspect you were so keen, Nancy. But you've hit upon the truth. Mansfield told me I might pay court to his daughter upon the condition that I come to Bannister and become a force. I shan't go into those details now; some future date, perhaps."

"Do you want me to help you?" She reached over and laid her hand on his. "As between two friends?"

"Nothing but magic or black art could help me, Nancy."

"I'm not so sure," she replied, recalling that peculiar punctuation mark in his manuscript.

"It is not possible, Nancy. I came here because I loved her, at first sight, to find myself hoist 'twixt the devil and the deep blue sea. I had to fight her father. I had elected a certain way to go."

"'Loved I not honor more,'" quoted Nancy, softly. "Or is it that you fear your fate too much?"

"You are making fun of me?"

"No, Brand. I am very sorry. I understand. A miracle must happen."

"And there ain't no sech animal. The power of Mansfield's will had lain upon this town until it was pretty bad in spots. So I undertook to hammer into the public mind just how baneful this influence was. I don't suppose he himself realized to what depth he had fallen. I didn't awaken him. He has given me thunder for thunder. But contact with the beautiful mind of his daughter softened him gradually; and your father tells me that now Mansfield loves his daughter. And she is redeeming him.

"And I know positively that I have never been pointed out to her—as I shall be presently. I'm not going to hide any longer. So I have laid the dream away."

Nancy's heart gave a great bound. The bouyancy of hope! But she knew that there was a miracle close at hand. It rested upon her own lips. And yet why be silent and render all three miserable?

"A queer mess all around. The impulse of the moment is invariably a plunge for me. Love isn't something you may direct. You cannot say you will love this or that person."

"No," said Nancy.

"The bolt is blind. Often we love where we don't want to love. And that is my misfortune. I wrote her letters, Nancy. I do not know human nature. There is always something fascinating in the unknown. So I wrote her love letters, unsigned, to keep myself in her thoughts until I fulfilled the conditions of the bargain. Nancy, Bannister is going to be my home. It is the way out I've been seeking. No one shall rob the poor any more and leave them without redress. Oh, I know. It sounds like a boy's dream. But I have the power, Nancy, tremendous power for good. And most newspaper—There goes the bell! "If you don't mind," he said, "I'll run away into the greenhouse. I want to fend off the denouement as long as possible. I wonder what in the world I'd have done without you, Nancy."

"Nonsense! You're a nice boy, and any girl ought to be pleased to have you around. I'll send for you."

The greenhouse had once been a long, rambling side porch. There were no orchids or potted orange trees; pansies and garden pinks and geraniums and a few roses. This was the doctor's playground.

There was an incandescent lamp at each end of the greenhouse; but where Cathewe sat there was only the dim light of the winter stars.

He heard a door close, then a light scurry of feet on the cement floor. An intrusion. He stood up. A woman was approaching the spot where he stood. No doubt she believed herself alone. She paused suddenly to inhale the perfume of the pinks. When she raised her head he saw who it was.

* * * * * * *

When the limousine drew up to the curb before the Maddox place, Betty did not alight at once. She stared through the window at the little house across the way. She wondered if, with a mother like that, she would have been the victim of her present unhappiness. She did not want laughter, jests, dancing; she wanted to sit beside that beautiful and remarkable woman while she played.

Upon entering the house she threw her arms around Nancy and kissed her; and Nancy complimented her gaily upon the beauty of her gown. And both of them were passing through that singular phase of life which crystallizes the outlook and makes for misanthropy or tender philosophy.

"And she believes I am happy!" thought Betty.

"What shall I do?" thought Nancy. "How shall I act? To tell her that Brand wrote those letters would only add to the confusion, since he has built a Chinese wall between them."

Betty at once became encircled. Laughter began to bubble up in her. She wanted to be alone. It was so funny! She had set forth to wreak vengeance upon mankind for her hurt, and she could not begin even on these!

She could not remember how she reached it, but reach it she did—the door to the greenhouse. She remembered there were camp-chairs somewhere; and she walked down the little alley between the boxes and tubs, peering right and left. Raising her head, she saw the white expanse of a dress-shirt, quite close.

"I thought I was alone," she said.

"You say that with a shade of resentment. I was here first."

"Goodness! The ant-man!" She laughed. There was a note of hysteria in the laughter.

For a little while they stared at the stars—without seeing them.

Here, beside him, like this! And now he never could tell her; she would never know. In an hour or so she would learn the truth; and by her faith in her father she must hate and despise Brandon Cathewe.

Pits; no matter which way he turned he dug them. He became aware of a new twist in the many-faced irony of this adventure. He had risen to power in Bannister by the leverage of her father's misdeeds. Without this capital, the Herald would never have been roused from its moribund state.

Here, her shoulder almost touching his—the woman he loved! And the god of irony had whisked her as far away actually as if she had been transplanted upon Jupiter.

"Jupiter!" he said aloud, unthinkingly.

"And what about Jupiter?"

"Oh, I only want to go there and come back."

"With what?"

"A dream that has, I suspect flown that far away."

"We do waste a good deal of time—wishing for things we cannot have."

"Do you?"

"I have, naturally, being human like everybody else. What kind of a dream?"

"The most beautiful of all dreams."

Silence.

Still that baffling reserve, she thought. But this time he should not escape. Before they left the greenhouse she intended to ask him point-blank what his name was. A mystery here was utter nonsense.

"Your mother has fascinated me," Betty said suddenly.

"I am quite sure the fascination is mutual. She has done for you what she never does for strangers. You see, I am more or less familiar with her moods. Somehow you touched the flame and passion in her. She sensed the musician in you. You sing."

"You were there?"

"Yes, in the study. I apologise for not making my presence known. But I wanted to hear more of your singing, and was afraid you'd stop if I appeared."

"I shouldn't have minded—after the first song."

The door opened, and the Maddox itinerant butler—the caterer's son—announced that dinner was served. As they reached the door, Betty turned upon Cathewe swiftly.

"I am Miss Mansfield, as you know And you are—?"

Nancy herself saved the situation. She caught Betty by the arm and drew her aside. She turned to Cathewe.

"Miss Stoddard is waiting for you." He nodded and hurried off.

"Betty, here is something I want you to read." Nancy put into Betty's hand a sealed envelope. "Under no circumstances open it until you are home. After you read it, telephone me what you think of it."

Betty folded the envelope and hid it in the bosom of her gown. She went into the dining room, angry and confused. Once seated, she saw that her unknown cavalier was directly opposite.

"Mr. Morrison, who is the gentleman opposite?"

"You don't know him? He is Brandon Cathewe, the editor of the Herald."

"I had pictured him quite a different sort," she said, evenly. "Will you present him before we leave the room?"

"If you wish it"—distressed.

The introduction took place after the other guests had left the dining room.

Early Newspapers Met Opposition of Church

The first newspaper was produced when written accounts of the imperial armies of Rome were sent to the generals in command in all parts of the provinces.

In 1566 the first official news sheets were published in Venice. They were written by hand and exhibited in public places. People paid the small coin of a gazzetta to read them. Hence the name. The church opposed the enterprise, and Pope Gregory even prosecuted the editors.

The oldest form of newspaper in England was in the beginning of the reign of James II—the so-called News-Letters, written by hand, and sent by post to subscribers in the country. In 1709 the first daily paper, the Daily Courant, was issued.

The oldest of the London daily papers, the Morning Chronicle, appeared in 1769. The Morning Post is the oldest of existing morning papers. Founded in 1772, it was followed about 1788 by the first daily evening paper, the Star.

The Times first appeared in 1788 as a continuation of the Daily Universal Register. Its originator and owner, Mr. John Walter, succeeded in 1814 in printing the Times by steam.

In 1845 the Daily News was founded, with the help of Charles Dickens. It was the first paper to lower its price from 6 pence to 3 pence, (12 to 6 cents).

The Right Thing!

Do you know why we shake hands? In early days man lived alone save for his woman back in the cave. He fought the wild animals alone and dragged home his loot alone. Men warred on one another for the most part. When primitive man was too weary to fight he would drop his club upon meeting another man in his path and hold out his empty hand to show that he was unarmed. And the extended hand warmed into the hand-touch, then the handshake.

Today's form says that a person coming into a group does not offer to shake hands. It is up to the members of the group to make him welcome by offering the hand, if they care to.

THE PRACTICE OF CHRISTIAN STEWARDSHIP

LESSON TEXT—Matt. 25:14-30.

GOLDEN TEXT—Thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things. Enter thou into the joy of thy Lord.

PRIMARY TOPIC—The Story of the Three Servants.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Three Stewards and How They Kept Their Trust.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—What It Means to Be a Steward.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Scope and Spirit of Christian Stewardship.

Stewardship here includes oneself and substance. Stewardship in money is only a small part of our responsibility. This parable like that of the ten virgins is associated with the second coming of Christ. In both instances the unpreparedness for His coming on the part of the people is exhibited. In that of the ten virgins their unreadiness consisted in their failure of inward life—absence of the Holy Ghost. In this of the talents it consisted in their failure to properly use the gifts which had been entrusted to them. The first was failure to watch; the second was failure to work. By talents is meant whatever gifts and powers one possesses as gifts from God, whether of nature or grace, such as strength, reason, energy, knowledge, influence, time, money, ability to speak, sing, etc.

I. The Distribution of the Talents (vv. 14, 15).

1. It was a sovereign act. He called his own servants and distributed to them his own money. As the One who created us and absolutely owns us. He has assigned us our places and given us our several powers, intending that we put them to the best possible use.

2. It was an intelligent act. "According to his several ability." The God who made us knew our ability to use gifts, therefore has made the distribution upon that basis.

3. It was a purposeful act. The talents were given to be traded with. They were not given to be used for one's own gain and profit, but as stock in trade for the enrichment and glory of the Master.

II. The Employment of the Talents (vv. 16-18).

1. All the servants recognized that the talents were not their own—that they were responsible to the Lord for the use made of them.

2. Two servants used their talents. The five-talented man put his to use and gained five more. The two-talented man put his to use and gained two more. This shows that God's gifts can be increased. The exercise of any gift increases it. The faithful use of what we have in the place we are will prepare us for greater usefulness and honor.

3. The one hid his talent. The fact that one possesses but one talent should not discourage him, but should make him strive harder. God does not reward according to what we possess, but according to our faithfulness. The crime of the one talented man was not that he had but one talent, but that he hid the talent which the Lord gave him.

III. The Accounting for the Talents (vv. 19-30).

1. Its certainty. There is a day coming when we all must give an account of our stewardship.

2. The time. This will be at the coming of the Lord. If we have done well, we shall then have praise. If we have been unfaithful, we shall then be cast out from the presence of the Lord.

3. The judgments announced.

(1) Reward of the faithful. (a) Praise—"Well done." We all like to be praised. From childhood on through life commendation is pleasing. (b) Promotion—"Be thou ruler over many things." Promotion is desirable to all. (c) Entrance upon the joy of the Lord. The five talented man and the two talented man received the same praise and the same promotion.

(2) Punishment of the faithless. The one talented man lied when brought to account. The talent when dug up was not the same as when it was buried—it was not of the same weight. Gifts unused are lost. (a) Reproach—he was called slothful and wicked. To be called lazy is a reproach which even the lazy man dislikes (b) Stripped—the talent which was given to him was taken from him. (c) Cast out—he was condemned on his own ground. The very fact that he knew the character of the Lord should have been an incentive for him to have exerted himself.

Pray More

If God's children would learn to pray more before making ventures, they would not need to pray so much after they are made.—Echoes.

The Cross

In conversation, the cross is the will; in sanctification, the cross is the affections.—Echoes.

The KITCHEN CABINET

In every circumstance of our lives lies the stirring knowledge that one's own case, however strange, is far from being singular.—Laura Spencer Porter.

GOOD PUDDINGS

A pudding that is good and simple to prepare is the following:

Lemon Tapioca Pudding.—Soak two tablespoonfuls of pearl tapioca in one cupful of water for three hours. Turn a pint of boiling water over it and cook until soft, adding a pinch of salt. Beat the whites of two eggs until stiff, turn over them the boiling tapioca, beating all the time. Add one cupful of sugar, the grated rind and juice of two lemons. Serve cold with whipped cream.

Maple Tapioca Pudding.—Soak six tablespoonfuls of pearl tapioca overnight. Drain, add four cupfuls of hot water and two cupfuls of brown sugar. Dissolve and bake in the oven until it begins to thicken. Let cool. Add one teaspoonful of vanilla, a pinch of salt and a pint of whipped cream. Serve in sherbet glasses with whipped cream on top. This will serve twelve.

Caramel Blanc Mange.—Soften one and one-half tablespoonfuls of gelatin in one-third of a cupful of cold water. Caramelize one-half cupful of sugar, then add a scant half cupful of water, boil until a thick, smooth sirup. Let the sirup cool a little, pour over the softened gelatin; when dissolved, strain into three cupfuls of cream. Add one-fourth of a cupful of sugar and a pinch of salt. Stir until the sugar is dissolved. Serve ice cold.

Apple Fluff.—Grate one large, good-flavored apple, adding one-half cupful of sugar while grating. Beat the white of one egg until stiff, add apple and beat stiff. Serve with the following custard: Cook one cupful of rich milk, one egg yolk, two tablespoonfuls of sugar until creamy. Flavor to taste and cool on ice.

Fruit Salad Dressing.—Use the juices of the fruit sweetened with honey, making a most tasty sauce.

A Few Salads.

Our greatest chefs agree that the salad is a most important factor in the dinner or luncheon menu. They may either make or mar the meal. The following are some you may enjoy trying:

Mexican Salad.—A nice tart salad is especially good, served with a fish or meat course. As a sandwich filler, or an accompaniment to a molded jelly, or with cider jelly, this makes an excellent salad:

Chop fine one cupful of celery, one-half spanish onion, one cucumber and one green pepper. Mix with the following dressing: Three tablespoonfuls of butter, one tablespoonful of sugar, one teaspoonful of cornstarch, three-fourths of a cupful of cider vinegar, one teaspoonful of salt and one-half teaspoonful of mustard with one beaten egg. Melt the butter, add the dry ingredients, then slowly the vinegar, and cook for five minutes. Pour slowly over the beaten egg, stirring constantly. Return to the double boiler to cook for a few minutes. Chill thoroughly before serving.

Potato Salad With Cheese Dressing.—Add to a well-beaten egg one-fourth teaspoonful of salt, one-half teaspoonful of cornstarch, one teaspoonful of mustard and one-fourth cupful each of vinegar and water. Cook over hot water until thick, then add one neufchatel cheese. Cool, and pour over sliced cooked potatoes. The addition of celery and chopped sweet pepper makes an improvement.

Polish Salad.—Shred one pound of cooked game or poultry, moisten with oil and cider vinegar, season with pepper and salt. Allow it to stand for three hours to marinate. Arrange on a bed of lettuce and garnish with four cooked egg yolks passed through a wire sieve. Chop the whites and use as a garnish.

Cheese Jelly Salad.—Mix one-half cupful of grated cheese with a cupful of whipped cream, season to taste with salt and pepper and add one tablespoonful of gelatin dissolved in a scant cupful of water. Mold in large mold or small molds. When the jelly begins to harden, cover with grated cheese. Serve with French dressing to which grated cheese is added. Tomatoes stuffed with cream cheese jelly and served on lettuce with French dressing are both savory and quickly prepared.

Celery Salad.—Fill the tender stalks of white celery with seasoned cheese, cut into inch lengths and serve on lettuce with a French dressing.

Drink Water If Kidneys Bother

Take a Tablespoonful of Salts if Back Pains or Bladder is Irritated

Flush your kidneys by drinking a quart of water each day, also take salts occasionally, says a noted authority, who tells us that too much rich food forms acids which almost paralyse the kidneys in their efforts to expel it from the blood. They become sluggish and weaken; then you may suffer with a dull misery in the kidney region, sharp pains in the back or sick headache, dizziness, your stomach sours, tongue is coated, and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges. The urine gets cloudy, full of sediment, the channels often get sore and irritated, obliging you to seek relief two or three times during the night.

To help neutralise these irritating acids; to help cleanse the kidneys and flush off the body's urinous waste, get four ounces of Jad Salts from any pharmacy here. Take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days, and your kidneys may then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for years to help flush and stimulate sluggish kidneys; also to neutralize the acids in the system so they no longer irritate, thus often relieving bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive; cannot injure and makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink.

Quick Relief From Coughs and Colds

It Is Exceedingly Dangerous to Let Coughs and Colds Develop. Easy to Check Them.

For more than fifty-five years Porter's Pain King has stood in the front rank of home remedies for the relief of colds, coughs, croup, hoarseness and similar ailments.

Porter's Pain King is made of pure, wholesome ingredients, perfectly harmless and amazingly effective. By merit alone it holds an honored place in hundreds of thousands of American homes the year 'round.

Right now is a good time to read the circular wrapped around every bottle. Many families who have this good old-time liniment in the house suffer needlessly because they do not know all of its many uses. Porter's Pain King is more than a remedy for colds. It soothes aches and pains, soreness, swollen joints, tired muscles, lame back and rheumatic misery. It heals burns, scalds, cuts, chapped hands, frost-bitten feet. Why not use it today?

Made and guaranteed since 1871 by The Geo. H. Rundle Co., Piqua, Ohio. Sold by dealers everywhere.

Knew the Rest

A story is related of a mayor who, in the presence of the prince of Wales, lost the thread of his oration.

"Not only do we welcome your royal highness as a representative of his majesty the king," said the mayor, "but we, we, we—" Then he began a frantic search for the next page, which he had displaced in his nervousness.

"We, we," he began again. The prince prompted him. "We welcome you for yourself," he said, in a voice that reached farther than the platform, and the audience howled with delight.—From "H. R. H.," by Major Verney.

Paper Buildings

Paper and seven other ingredients which are being kept secret are used in a new cheap building material invented by a Serbian sculptor, Yovan Peshitch. The product is lighter than brick and is said to be fire and water proof, fire merely softening it a little. Its only limitation is that it is unsuitable for buildings of more than two stories.

There are some 230,000 superannuated officers and officials on the Japanese pension roll, which amounts to about $60,000,000 annually.

BE SURE OF Your VISION

So great is the percentage of those having defective vision and so frequently are the ill-effects attributed to some other cause, that you can not afford to merely guess that your eyes are normal. Even if you are now wearing glasses, changes may have occurred in your eyes that make new glasses necessary. Some common indications are: Headache, Pains in the eyeball, Pains at base of the brain, A pressure at top of the head, Eyes smart, and Burn, Subject to dizzy spells. If you are wearing glasses they may need changing and if you are not, it may be you should be wearing them. GARRETT SUFFERS HEAVY LOSS BY FIRE

A fire that destroyed the Boston Clothing and Shoe Store and damaged neighboring business houses early Saturday morning entailed the greatest financial loss in the history of fires in Garrett. The damage amounts to perhaps $75,000 to $100,000, most of which is covered by insurance.

Only the walls of the Boston store building remain and there is nothing left but ruins of the large stock of dry goods, clothing and shoes. The building is the property of Karl Moyer and Mrs. James Moyer of Detroit, and the stock was owned by Louis Magids, who operated the store. The building was valued at $20,000 and the stock at more than $30,000. W. W. Sharpless's law office on the second floor was also burned out.

The J. A. Moore & Son furniture store adjoining on the south caught fire from the Boston store and the upper part was reduced to ruins. Part of the furniture was removed to safety, but smoke and water created havoc. The building is owned by Mrs. James H. Greene of Pittsburgh.

The drug store at the northwest corner of Randolph and King streets owned by J. S. Patterson, adjoining the furniture store, and the apartment of the Patterson family on the second floor were damaged by smoke. Heavy loss from smoke was sustained by the Garrett Fruit Co., owning the building and ice cream parlor adjacent to the Boston store on the north. Next door to that is C. H. Heinzerling's hardware and next is the J. A. Meyer department store, both of which were considerably damaged by smoke.

The Garrett Fruit Co's. building caught afire, but the blaze was extinguished before it had gone far. However, the furniture in the B. P. O. E. lodge rooms on the second floor suffered from water and smoke.

The millinery stock of Miss Mathe rear of the furniture store also suffered from smoke.

Plans to reuild will be made as soon as the insurance is adjusted. Karl Moyer, with his son, Maurice, arrived from Detroit Saturday afternoon. The insurance on the Moyer building was $11,500 and Mr. Magids carried $30,000 on the contents. Mrs. Greene had $3,500 insurance on her building and the damage will probably be twice that amount. The insurance carried by J. A. Moore & Son, will approximately cover their loss. The furniture stock that was saved was moved to a vacant room in the Masonic by the firm until the Green building is repaired.

Mr. Sharpless moved his office temporarily to the P. L. DeVita law office in the I. O. O. F. building.

OBITUARY

Geary William Horn, son of Darius Kohler and Mary Jane Horn was born February 20, 1877, DeKalb county, Indiana, and died January 25, 1927, aged 49 years, 11 months and 5 days. He has spent the greater part of his life in this community

At an early age he went to Harvey, Ill., to learn the painter and paper hanging trade. He followed this line of work for four years in the suburbs of Chicago.

But he longed for a better education and took a course in Anatomy and Psychology at Nevada, Missouri, later going to Valparaiso where he graduated in the class of 1906 at the Polk School of Piano tuning. After taking a post graduate course in Chicago he returned to Valparaiso and became an instructor and lecturer on Piano tuning and player regulation in that institution. He followed this line of work until the death of his father in 1919. Then he returned home to assist in the care of his mother and do the farm work, but in a short time his health gave away and for a few years his suffering was great. He fought a brave fight and finally he seemed to have regained his former strength and vigor.

He was a constant student burning the midnight oil at times delving into the great problems and mysteries of life to give them a logical solution. He had the eye of an artist and a highly trained ear. The ear standard being the rate of vibration. He loved the beautiful and his many friends will remember him by his accuracy, speed and honesty in any thing he undertook.

His passing away was a great shock to his friends and the community. He leaves one sister and many friends and relatives.

Funeral was held at the home Friday at 1:30 P. M., Rev. A. K. Mumma, officiating. Roscoe Walter, funeral director. Burial at White City.

FINAL SCORES OF TOURNAMENT

Auburn an Garrett high schools played together in the finals in the DeKalb county basketball tournament in the community hall at Spencerville.

This was decided on Saturday afternoon when the McIntosh high school cagers defeated the Butler high school five 16 to 12 in the semi-finals.

The two teams in the county which have not played each other this season and the teams which fought it out out last winter for the couny championship and again in March in Auburn in the semi-finals in the sectional tourney, opposed each other and deecided the championship for the season of 1927.

Other results of the tournament were:

Friday night 7:30 game, Spencervillt 19; Waterloo 15.

Friday night 8:30 game, Garrett 28; Ashley 18.

Saturday morning 9:00 o'clock game, Butler 40; St. Joe 12.

Saturday morning 10:00 o'clock game, Auburn 33; Corunna 20.

Saturday afternoon 2:00 o'clock game, Garrett 27; Spencerville 14.

SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTION AT ST. JOE

Another Concord Township Sunday School convention has become history, and the township officers and various committees in charge of the programs of the day, feel so far as this one day is concerned the convention was a success. The far reaching results can only be determined by the amount of future good which will come to the Sunday Schools and community, by the Sunday Schools and individuals putting into practice the things which were taught at the convenion.

The convention opened at 9:30 with Sunday School in all three churches. The adult division met in the M. P. Church, Mrs. Hattie Widney, superintendent; childrens' idvision at the Christian Church, John Crothers, superintendent; young people at the Lutheran Church, Miss Lucille Curie, superintendent. The total attendance was 117, total collection, $11.48.

The church service began at 10:45 with a song service led by C. A. Woodcox. Rev. McKnight had charge of the devotional, he reading the scripture lesson, H. C. Borthwick offering the prayer. This was followed by an address by Mr. Hartwell Gosney of Fort Wayne. Mr. Gosney used as the theme for his address, Second Timothy 2: 15—Study to show thyself approved unto God, a warkman that needeth not to be ashemed, rightly dividing the word of truth. The morning session closed with a song and benediction by Rev. McKnight.

The afternoon program opened with a song service again led by C. A. Woodcox. The Girls High School Glee Club, directed by Miss Gallahan, composed the choir and furnished two special numbers. The girls made a splendid appearance in their dresses of purple and gold, the high school colors, and much favorable comment was made about them. Little Miss Virginia Shull gave a Riley reading in her usual pleasing manner, which was much enjoyed by all.

The business of the convention was then taken up. Secretary-treasurer's report was then taken up, and the following departmental superintendents reports: Adult, J. R. Shilling reports 13 organized classes in Concord township with a total enrollment of 205; Home Department, superintendent, J. R. Shilling reports an enrollment of 23; Educational superintendent, Mrs. Arline Koch reported through Rev. McKnight that plans are underway for a Daily Vacation Bible School for St. Joe and community this coming summer. Miss Helen Monrow and Mrs. Nora McDonald, childrens and educational division superintendents of the county were present and gave short talks. Miss Dorothy Ginther, accompanied by Mrs. F. B. Leighty, played a violin offertory, and the meeting closed with a benediction by Rev. McKnight.

The evening service was in charge of the young people of the township, Miss Gallahan song leader. The Girls High School Glee Club again made up the choir and favored the audience with a special number. Paul Fetters had charge of the devotional using a portion of the 16th chapter of Luke, having first given a short talk on the parable of Lazarus and the rich man. Readings were given by Miss Dorothy Fetters and Max White, both were well given and enjoyed .

Miss Annise Harding, young peoples superintendent of the county, brought the evening message on "A Four Fold Person." The evening session closed with benediction by Rev. McKnight.

The morning session was in charge of Stanley Means, township president, the afternoon in charge of Ed Storer, vice president, the evening in charge of Donald Ramsey, young people superintendent.

The total attendance for the day was 506, total offerings $22.32.

The next township convention will be held at the Concord M. P. Church. The township officers hope to make this convention the best ever. An all day meeting during early fall is what is hoped for, and plans are already underway for this convention.

A workers conference was held at the M. P. Church Saturday evening at 7:30. The attendance was not as large as had been hoped for, but seventeen workers were present and a good meeting held. The county workers were unable to be present because of bad weather, so the township president asked the county president, F. B. Leighty to conduct a round table, which he did. Several local Sunday School problems were brought up and discussed and a profitable meeting held.

WIDNEY HEADS STATE COUNTY AGENTS' ASS'N.

Mr. B. V. Widney, Whitley county agricultural agent, was elected chairman of the Indiana County Agents' Association at a meeting which was held at Lafayette last week. It has been the custom in years past that only those agents who are recognized as the most competent in the state are ever chosen for this position, so the honor that comes to Mr. Widney is shared by the people of this community.

Exceptional strides have been made in the organization of club work and the furthering of better agricultural methods in this county, under the direction of Mr. Widney. He is a particularly splendid leader, a thoroughly experienced farmer and a scientifically trained agriculturist. It is the combination of these qualities that has made him such a pronounced success in his field. In addition to other qualifications mentioned, Mr. Widney is an indefatigable worker.

During his residence here, Mr. Widney has promoted many lines of activity. One of the first things that he urged was a more widespread growing of alfalfa in this county is still far behind most other counties in this part of the state, it has made remarkable gains in the past few years, and much of the credit is due to Mr. Widney. The value of the crop was thoroughly expressed a few days ago by a farmer who said that he was offered $20 per ton for his alfalfa hay, and $12 per ton for exceptionally good timothy hay. This point is mentioned simply to show that Mr. Widney's suggestions are profitable as well as practicable. The dairy industry has also been fostered by him, and he has made strenuous efforts with the splendid co-operation of farmers in this county to better the quality of seed used in various crops.

Mr. Widney has been particularly successful in his boys' and girls' club work. The poultry industry has also been given a great deal of attention, and it is universally agreed by farmers that dairying and poultry perhaps produce a more steady income than any other branch of farming activity.

The recognition of Whitley County's agricultural agent is a compliment to the trustees of Whitley county, who were responsible for employing Mr. Widney.—Columbia City Evening Post, January 17, 1927.

OFFICERS NAMED BY FARMERS' MUTUAL

The annual meeting of the Farmers' Mutual Fire Insurance company of DeKalb county was held Saturday in the assembly room of the court house. The organization, effected in 1878 is made up of DeKalb county farmers and has in force insurance amounting to $10,834,380.00, which will reach the eleven million dollar mark by Tuesday of this week, it was stated by the secreary, Philip Carper, Saurday.

For the fifth time Noah Lung of Auburn was eleced the president and for the twenty-fifh consecutive year, Philip S. Carper of Jackson township was elected the secretary, Mr. Carper having served in this capacity twenty-four years.

Henry S. Clair of Auburn was named vice president; Perry A. Foote of Richland township, treasurer and Charles H. Bangs, also of Richland township, actuary.

Three members were elected to the board of five directors, Albert N. Thrush of Butler township township and Byron C. Platt, of Auburn. The other members are Samuel High of Jackson township and Charles S. Arford of Stafford township.

LEVI TREESH, AGE 81 YEARS, IS DEAD

Well Known Corunna Resident Was Prominent in Church and Sunday School Work

Levi W. Treesh, one of the early settlers of DeKalb county, died Friday morning at 4 o'clock at his home in Corunna at the age of eighty-one years from complications after an illness which confined him to the house for three weeks.

Mr. Treesh was a pioneer in the work of the Sunday School and the church and will be remembered by the older generation in DeKalb county as a teacher of vocal music. He conducted old fashioned singing schools and has the reputation of having sung at more funeral services than any other man in the county.

He was born January 10, 1846, in Stark county, Ohio. At the age of seven years he came with his parents to DeKalb county where he was reared on a farm and attended the district schools. He remained at home until he enlisted in Company A., One Hundred and Forty-Second Indiana Infantry, serving in the armies of the Cumberland and Potomac until the close of the war, when he was honorably discharged June 28, 1865 at Nashville, Tenn.

Mr. Treesh, a democrat, in politics, was elected Justice of the Peace for Richland township in the spring of 1884. He was a Sunday School superintendent for five years and was a president of the DeKalb County Sunday School association.

He was one of seventeen children of Michael Treesh and wife and he was the last survivor. When a very young man he married Margaret Ober. Mrs. Treesh died in 1906 and in 1908 the deceased was married to Martha Endrey of Altona.

Mr. Treesh is survived by his widow and two sons, Jesse Eugene Treesh of South Milfird and Earl Leroy Treesh of Toledo, also by three daughters, Mrs. John Mrs. Oraa DeLong of Corunna and Vera Treesh living at home.

The deceased was an active member of the Corunna M. E. Church which he attended up until the time of his sickness three weeks ago. The funeral was conat Corunna at 2 o'clock Sunday afternoon, the Rev. R. R. Detwiler of Fort Wayne assisting the local pastor, Rev. D. K. Finch, Burial was made in Sedan cemetery.

NEW FISH AND GAME BILL PASSES INDIANA SENATE

Provides New Closed Seasons and Changes in Licenses

Indianapolis, Jan. 28.— The Bradford-Steele universal license law and fish and game code bill passed the Indiana senate Thursday forenoon by a vote of 41 ayes and 6 noes, and was sent to the house of representatives for action.

Federal regulations on migratory birds are incorporated in the bill and trapping of game is made to come under the fish and game license privileges. At present trappers are not required to have a license simply to trap. The universal aspect of the new license contained in the bill means that every one above the age of eighteen will be required to have a license to hunt, fish or trap except on his own land, and fishing in one's own county is permissible without license.

Under the new license the nonresident license fee will be raised from $1 to $2.50 and like all resident licenses, will be made to expire at the close of the calendar year instead of extending to a year, from date of issuance as licenses do at present. Mussels are to be protected under the measure with a closed season from March 1 to July 1. This is largely for the protection of fish spawning beds that would be disturbed by mussel fishers in that season. A license also would be required of mussel fishermen, $5 for residents and $25 for nonresidents. The bill also provides for a commercial fisherman's license to be used in the Wabash river where it forms the state boundary line.

The season for taking black bass of both species, rock bass, silver bass, crappie, bluegills, greengills, yellow perch, pike perch, piket and pickerel is to be closed from April 15 to June 16 under the new law. The bag limtis of game fish calls for six of all kinds of black bass and silver bass combined twenty-five on rock bass, crappie, bluegills, red eared sunfish and yellow perch, and six a day for pike pickerel and pike perch or wall eyes. The length limit called for is eleven inches on black bass and silver bass, six inches on rock bass and crappie, five inches on bluegills and red eared sunfish and fifteen inches on pike perch, pickerel or pike, and seven inches on yellow perch.

Under the bill the season for rabbits will be closed from January 10 to October 1 and the daily bag limit will be ten a day. Sale of wild rabbits caught by hunters would be prohibited in the closed season. Farmers having trouble with rabbits, however, would be permitted to kill them under permit. The squirrel season would be shortened one month to extend from August 1 to November 1 instead of to December as at present. The daily bag limit on squirrels would be five a day. Protection for red squirrels would be withdrawn under the bill.

In a generaal way the bill calls for a change in the present game laws so that they will conform to the federal regulations as to open season and bag limit, except that only fifteen wild ducks and six wild geese or brant may be lawfully killed in a day.

SCHOOL DAYS

SOMETHING TO THINK ABOUT

By F. A. WALKER

WASTING TIME

JUST what are you doing for yourself in the hours apart from those you give to your employers?

If you would once stop and seriously consider the inestimable value of these golden bits of time, which are yours to do with as you please, there is a likelihood that you would put them to better use.

In one way or another, young people unencumbered with any other burden save their own, are apt to fritter away time in aimless amusement. The quest of goodly fellowship, without regard to where it may end, and the pernicious habit of idling seem, unfortunately, to be the dominating purposes in the lives of the thoughtless.

They flit about like butterflies, drifting on the winds, sipping honeyed sweets often tainted with poison.

These flexible friendships which you make are so agreeable while they endure, you quite forget the steady passage of time as you keep pursuing them, wasting the most precious years of your life, in which character is formed into beauty or ugliness.

Friendships are agreeable, but they are often insincere, and for this reason it becomes incumbent upon you to consider them in an attitude of selfishness!

You must give due thought to yourself before you are left destitute, incompetent and unqualified to extricate yourself from the humble position you have occupied all these years, which by a stroke or two of fate may leave you stranded and forlorn in old age.

You, who are young and hopeful, are wondering whether these words are for you. They seem in some way to lean their weight upon you, but in the hunt for amusement, you throw them off.

"Tomorrow," you promise, "I'll think about them. But not today. I'm having too much fun. I'll make good, somehow."

So you think.

So thousands of others have thought who have gone before you!

When they awoke to a realization of their position they found their lances broken and their shields eaten by rust, unable to compete with men who had been using their spare moments advantageously, disregarding the call to play.

And so it will be with you unless you mend your way.

And so it will ever be with those who think the world will wait for them while they romp and lark and gambol.

"It is not idleness that is plentiful, but courage that is rare, that wins!"

GIRLIGAGS

"It was a sensible young man I was with last night," says Fapper Fern. "When he tried to kiss me I cried, 'Don't! Stop It!' and he didn't."

How It Started

By JEAN NEWTON

"THE SAMPLER"

SEEING or perhaps owning one of the lovely old strips of linen or silk embroidered in almost every stitch known to pliers of the needle called samplers, you have doubtless wondered about its significance and the origin of its strange name.

Because samplers fit in so well with the furniture of the period, or perhaps because so many of the old ones treasured in this country are the handiwork of early American homewives, they have come to be regarded as "colonial." The fact is, however, that together with other manners and customs samplers were simply transplanted from the other side, brought by the industrious women who found in their exquisite stitching the self-expression for which colonial life afforded scant outlet.

The earliest known sampler is one dated 1648 which is now in a museum in London. It is elaborately embroidered in the needle-point and gros-point which are today so popular with the woman of fashion for decorating her hand bag and other accessories. It is to the sampler, incidentally, that the modern petit-point and gros-point are said to owe their origin.

How this strip of embroidery came to be named a "sampler" is by no means the least interesting part of its story. We learn that the craze for fine needlework in the Seventeenth century was met with a great scarcity and costliness of books of pattern. Therefore, designs were worked onto pieces of materials which were called "samplers."

SAWS

FOR THE GOOSE—

IF THE last apple is sour, the whole box was sour.

A woman oughta be allowed to begin countin' her age from the day she was first kissed.

The reason us women don't like to tell our age ain't on accounts the way it feels to have people know we're thirty, but the way it's gonna feel to have 'em know we was thirty, ten years ago.

FOR THE GANDER—

The beauty of bein' able to tickle yourself is you can laugh whenever you feel like.

By doin' it yourself you can gen'rally keep other people from laughin' at you, praisin' you and bein' sorry for you.

The best joke in the world ain't funny enough to laugh at, if you made it up yourself.

Flyers Under Handicap

In dying at extreme altitudes, the pilot is more likely to fail than his machine, according to an article by Lieut. John A. Macready, world famous flyer, in Liberty. "The mind of the pilot," he says, "does not function normally at extreme altitude, and his readings and calculations cannot always be relied upon when he gets into the regions where the air is very light. For this reason, a large number of instruments are used to record what happens during a flight at altitudes above 30,000 feet. Eleven instruments provide a permanent record of everything that happens within the engine, within the supercharger, and also of the outside surrounding conditions."

The Days When I Was Young

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

THE snows of many winters have drifted down to earth,
The suns of many springtimes have melted them to mirth;
The ice has strung her garlands where once the apples hung—
Yet not a thing has ever changed since days when I was young.

My boy, the very changes were always still the same:
November took the bluebird, and yet the robin came;
I heard him come returning, I heard his carol sung—
The robin sings the same today as days when I was young.

A little while we sorrow, a little time we grieve,
When brown the meads and marshes and when the bluebirds leave,
But still in God's high heaven a star of hope is hung—
And spring will come the way it did in days when I was young.

For when this earthly summer has faded into mist,
When I go down the river to keep the final tryst,
I know that I shall find them, the folks to whom I clung.
The loved it hurt so much to lose in days when I was young.

For surely if the Father can give the earth the spring,
Then he can give the springtime to any other thing;
And in some lovely springtime, again my loved among,
I know that God will give me back the days when I was young.

Mother's Cook Book

When you get to know a fellow, know his joys and know his cares,
When you've come to understand him and the burdens that he bears,
When you've learned the fight he's making and the troubles in his way,
Then you find that he is different than you thought his yesterday.

HERE ARE SOME SOUPS

A DISH of nourishing soup is always welcome, especially on a chilly day or night. The following are a few variations:

Cabbage Soup.

Put a piece of bacon or salt pork into a kettle, cover with water and cook an hour, then add a whole cabbage, a few carrots, onions, some turnip, a stalk of celery and a bay leaf. Cook at least another hour and a half and serve hot.

Milk Soup.

Toast thin slices of bread until they are crisp and brown. Bring to the boiling point one quart of milk, adding a pinch of salt and sugar. Beat the yolks of four eggs with a little water. Remove the milk from the fire and add the eggs; stir a moment, then turn the mixture over the bread in the soup tureen.

Chestnut Soups.

Cook a pint of chestnuts until soft in milk to cover, then put through a sieve and season well with salt, pepper and a bit of onion juice. Serve with whipped cream over the top.

Clam Bouillon.

Wash and scrub half a peck of clams, changing the water several times. Put into a kettle with three cupfuls of cold water, cover tightly and steam until the shells are well opened. Strain the liquor, cool and clear. Reheat to serve.

POULTRY FACTS

HEN EGGS STAND HEAVY PRESSURE

That an ordinary hen's egg will stand heavy pressure was proved in an exhibit which the poultry department at the College of Agriculture at Ithaca displayed at the New York state fair.

A 16-pound steel sledge hammer was arranged so that it came down on the egg once a minute, being raised and lowered automatically. The egg was placed on a scale which registered the pressure; extra weight was applied and the egg stood the weight of 23 pounds, or all that the scales would register. A special trial was made when still more weight was applied on the handle of the sledge, and it is estimated that the egg stood more than 50 pounds pressure before it broke.

The purpose of the demonstration was to show the pressure that an ordinary egg would stand, and to show why it was desirable to produce eggs with strong shells. Strong shelled eggs ship best, and evaporate least; this prolongs their freshness, and pleases the consumer, because a greater proportion of them reach the market in good condition.

"This is the first time such an arrangement has been used to demonstrate the strength of the shells of hen eggs," according to C. K. Powell, in charge of the exhibit. "Usually, the breaking strength has been tested by pressing the eggs between two hardwood blocks."

Breaking strength of eggs indicates, to some extent, breeding and feeding of the hens. Minerals must make up a part of the ration, and, in this connection, it is said that cod liver oil aids in the assimilation of the minerals by the birds.

Tobacco Dust Useful to Destroy Worms in Flock

Placing 2 per cent of tobacco dust in the mash is a common remedy for removing worms from poultry. Then once each week give epsom salts to the flock at the rate of a pound per hundred birds. The salts can be given in the drinking water or in the amount of wet mash that the flock will eat quickly, allowing as even a distribution of the medicine as possible.

Some poultrymen are using the commercial worm capsules with good success, as it insures every bird receiving the proper share. Keep the droppings removed from the houses, and distribute them as far as possible from the poultry houses and range. This helps to keep down the infestation of worms.

Laying Hens Need Good, Palatable Grain Mash

A good mash should be fed to laying hens, according to G. L. Stevenson, head of the department of poultry husbandry at South Dakota State college. The mash used at State college consists of one-fourth part of oilmeal to one part each of bran, middlings, tankage, ground oats and cornmeal when it is not too high. Ground barley is now being used in place of cornmeal. Two pounds of charcoal are also mixed with each 500 pounds of meal, and about one-half pound of salt is mixed per 100 pounds of meal. The salt makes the meal more palatable.

Poultry Hints

Let the breeding flocks have the range when you shut up the hens for winter eggs.

Watch the water supply. Poultry should never be allowed to drink frozen water.

For hatching eggs breed from the best of the late-laying hens, rather than from the pullets.

Be on guard for the first sign of colds or roup in the poultry, and to separate the afflicted from the rest.

It is not well to force heavy egg production through feeding where birds are to be used for breeding pens.

It is a good scheme to plow or spade up the poultry runs each spring in order to get rid of worms that cause gapes in chickens.

Nature's way of resting her feathered family is to let them rear a family. Turkeys and chickens are both better for the season of rest.

Turning hens out of the warm henhouse on a chill wintry day, or with a cold wind blowing, or with snow or ice on the ground, opens the way to wheezing roup before midnight.

If you shut up the pullets they may lose their appetite. Coax them along with frequent grain feedings and a moist mash once a day.

Cement makes the best floor for a poultry house. When properly built it is economical, easy to clean, rat proof, durable, and free from dampness.

Breed only from birds producing eggs of a uniform size and as near chalk white in color as possible. Trapnest pullets during first winter and mark birds producing poor type eggs.

Would Seem That Daudet Is Peeved

Quotidien, a Socialist daily, and l'Humanite, a Communist daily, in Paris recently had the carelessness to gibe about the big royalist demonstrations throughout France.

At Nimes 35,000 people shouted with one accord the old "vive le roi" and in Bordeaux there was even a greater concourse, unmistakably enthusiastic about the idea of the king's return.

The above-mentioned papers jeered a little at these meetings and they ridiculed Daudet, the royalist chief. "Daudet thinks that France can be saved only by a king and the king's fellows," said the papers.

And this is a translation of Daudet's answer:

"Just wait awhile, Muscovite buffoons and bandits, and you will see the king's fellows at work. Once we get started nothing will stop us till every one of you dangles from lampposts, you d—d slaves of putrid democracy, you rascals without honor, humanity or sense of justice."

Demand for Rubber Shows No Dimination

Christopher Columbus, on his second voyage, found the natives of the island of Haiti playing with rubber balls and reported the discovery of the elastic and resilient substance, which since then has been adapted to many uses. But it was not till the last century that rubber was utilized extensively, when Goodyear, after long years of patient and costly experiment, found a way to overcome its stickiness when subjected to heat.

Since then the demand for it has increased steadily and greatly, and at the present time the supply is so far short of the demand that companies are organized to cultivate rubber trees in all parts of the world, and speculation in the shares of the companies has frequently been a sort of craze.

More than one-half of the rubber production of the world is used for automobile tires. As the supply is inadequate, the price has continually increased. Even rubber of a poor quality sells for a good price.

Volcanic Zones

There are volcanoes in the Atlantic, though not in such numbers as in the Pacific basin. Volcanoes are limited to certain regions in the earth. Probably the most important belt of volcanoes is that bordering the Pacific ocean. Another broad belt, however, borders the Mediterranean sea and extends westward into the Atlantic ocean. Narrower belts are found in both the northern and southern portions of the Atlantic on the margins of the Caribbean sea. Bands of active volcanoes are found wherever mountain ranges are paralleled by deeps on the neighboring ocean floor. These are the zones of the earth's crust which are undergoing the most rapid change of level at the present time.

Farmers in Co-Operation

At the end of 1925 co-operative farm associations reporting to the Department of Agriculture had on their membership rolls 2,700,000 producers. In view of the fact, however, that some farmers belong to more than one association, and allowing for inactive members, it is estimated that approximately 2,000,000 farmers in this country are now engaged in co-operative marketing. The total business of these associations for the year 1925 amounted to approximately $2,400,000,000.

MEAT CAKES FOR YOUNG CHILDREN

Savory Dish Enjoyed by the Whole Family.

One of the best meat dishes to have when there are young children in the family is broiled meat cakes. Everyone else will enjoy them, too, so it is unnecessary to cook something else for the grownups.

For a family of five, you will need about a pound and a half of lean beef. Many persons prefer the round for meat cakes, but lean meat from the less expensive cuts, such as steaks from the fore quarter, is satisfactory. From whatever part of the carcass the meat comes, have it cut off fresh and ground twice. Various kinds of seasonings may of course, be added, but for children the meat itself with melted butter and salt added just before serving gives flavor enough. If you have an abundance of eggs, a yolk or two added to the meat gives a richer flavor and increases the food value. This is not at all necessary, however, and excellent meat cakes can be made by simply shaping the finely ground beef into rather flat cakes and broiling them quickly in a pan, rubbed with just enough suet to keep them from sticking, or broiled over a gas flame or over hot coals. In forming the cakes be sure not to pack the meat together too firmly, for this will make the cakes hard when they are cooked. Be sure also not to overcook the cakes. If they are rare inside when served they will have more flavor and juice.

For very small children, scraped beef is better than ground beef. This is generally prepared by scraping off the more tender part of a thick piece of round steak. This scraped meat may then be formed into cakes and broiled, or broiled on bread in the following way. Toast the bread on one side. Spread the meat with butter and broil quickly for a very few minutes directly under a gas flame.

Corn Bread Always Liked for Breakfast or Dinner

Crisp crusted corn bread for breakfast or dinner is always liked. To make it you will need the following ingredients:

2 cupfuls corn meal	1¼ teaspoonfuls salt
2 tablespoonfuls of butter	Soda or baking powder, depending on whether you use sweet or sour milk
2 tablespoonfuls of sugar, if desired
2 eggs
1 cupful milk, sweet or sour

If using sweet milk, mix all the dry ingredients together, including two teaspoonfuls of baking powder. Then add the milk and well-beaten eggs and at the last stir in the melted butter. If using sour milk, follow the same general method except mix together a scant teaspoonful of soda and a tablespoonful of cold water and add this to the batter just before the melted butter is stirred in. Bake the corn bread in a shallow heavy pan or in muffin pans if preferred.

Quick Bread and Cakes

In making quick breads and cakes allow in general one to one and one-half teaspoonfuls of baking powder for each cupful of flour. Butter cakes that have a great deal of egg white may, however, need less. Popovers and sponge cakes are the exception and require no baking powder at all.

Loosely Fitted Sleeve Proper for Fleshy Arm

The loosely fitted long sleeve is the most becoming for fleshy arms. A tight sleeve on a large arm does not make the arm appear smaller but rather emphasizes its size. It is also uncomfortable. Loose sleeves which are open at the wrist are graceful as well as comfortable. Trimmings and construction lines which follow the length of the arm such as bound slashes, bands of material, rows of buttons, etc., are aids in making the arm seem longer and more slim. Peasant type sleeves, or those gathered into a tight cuff with a puffed effect, should never be worn by the stout woman. In fact, it is best for her to keep the sleeve as simple and graceful as possible.

Long vertical lines from shoulder to floor are most becoming on the figure that has large hips in proportion to the waist and bust. These lines may be stripes in the material, bands or rows of trimming, rows of buttons, tucks, etc. The best effect will be gained by keeping them toward the center front and center back rather than at the underarm seam. The hip line should be kept as straight and as free from trimmings as possible in order that the eye may be attracted to some other part of the dress. The surplice front gives a longer effect than the straight front.

To Remove Scorch Stain From Any Cotton Fabric

To remove a scorch stain from a cotton fabric moisten the stain with water and place in the sun. For more serious cases the following procedure may be used: Moisten a piece of cotton cloth in hydrogen peroxide and place over the stain. Cover with a dry cloth. Iron with a medium hot iron. If the hydrogen peroxide soaks through the dry cloth, replace with another cloth. Be very careful to see that the hydrogen peroxide does not come in contact with the iron, as it will rust the iron very rapidly. Brown stains will then be left on any garment which the iron touches. For the same reason, do not iron the fabric from which the stain has been removed until the hydrogen peroxide has been well rinsed from it. This method must be used carefully on colored fabrics because the dyes may be bleached out. However, it can be used successfully on any kind of white fabric.

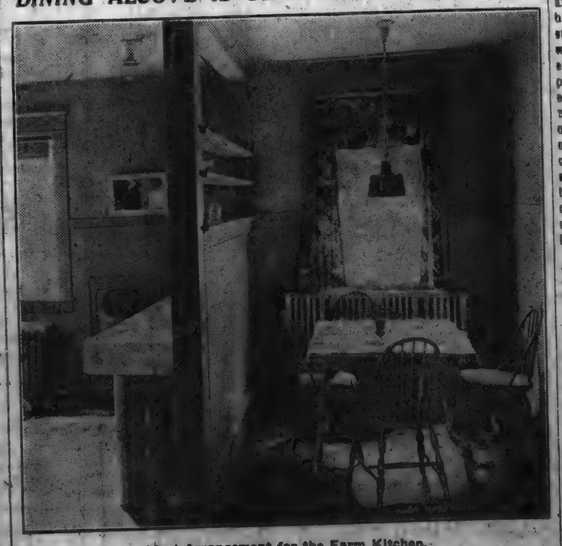
Fish as Brain Food

There is no foundation for the widespread notion which still exists that fish is particularly valuable as a brain food. The idea seems to have originally gained headway because fish was supposed to contain relatively large proportions of phosphorus. However, there is no experimental evidence to warrant the assumption that phosphorus is any more essential to the brain than nitrogen, potassium, or any other element which occurs in its tissues. Moreover, meat furnishes about as much phosphorus as fish and there are various other foods, for example cheese, peanuts, oatmeal, chocolate and graham flour, which pound for pound contain much higher proportions.

Value of Proteins

Cooking as ordinarily employed in the preparation of foods does not impair the nutritive value of the proteins. Many proteins are rendered more digestible by cooking. If cooked at too high a temperature, some may be made more difficult to digest.

DINING ALCOVE IS USEFUL AND CHARMING



Ideal Arrangement for the Farm Kitchen.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Here is an ideal arrangement for the farm kitchen where, for the sake of convenience and warmth, the family eats as near as possible to the center of food preparation. By the half-wall that creates an alcove in one end of the room, the less attractive kitchen equipment, such as stove and sink, is screened from view. The pleasant warmth of the kitchen stove, however, is utilized, and in northern climates this is often very necessary in winter time.

Simplicity and charm are combined in the alcove itself, with its plain, light-colored walls, painted furniture, gay curtains and good, practical lighting. Above the half-wall, air circulates, and soiled dishes may be passed easily within reach of the person at the sink, although no extra walking is necessary. The sink is one of the best types, made in a solid unit with two drain-boards; below it is a dust closet with a tray to a cellar receptacle, for easy disposal of sweepings. This attractive kitchen has many other conveniences: garbage incinerator, linoleum floor covering, light over the sink, towel drier, kitchen cabinet, and even a mirror that reminds the homemaker to keep herself as trim and charming as her surroundings. The picture was taken by the United States Department of Agriculture in Dalton, Mass., after the owner had participated in a kitchen improvement contest instituted by the extension agent.

DAIRY FACTS

SILO REQUIRED FOR DOZEN COWS

The silo on the dairy farm is indispensible where the owner has as many as ten or twelve cows, and the cost is small as compared with the value.

There is an increasing use of silos in North Carolina because silage furnishes during winter that feed which nearest approaches summer pasturage at its best. Silage is a succulent feed when pasture is not available. It makes possible a cheaper ration, gives a greater feed value to an acre of corn and keeps up the milk flow in winter.

"Forty per cent of the feeding value of corn is in the stalks and leaves, and these are saved when converted into silage," says H. H. Gordon, extension agricultural engineer at State college. "The average cow will consume 30 pounds of silage each day and the dairyman should have three tons of silage per cow, or enough to carry her for six months. To figure the acreage required to produce this amount, one should figure a ton of silage for each five bushels of corn. Land producing fifty bushels of corn per acre will produce ten tons of silage."

Mr. Gordon states that when feeding from the silo begins at least two inches should be removed each day to prevent spoiling. Therefore the number of cows to be fed determines the diameter of the silo. Less than 15 head of cattle will require a silo 10 feet in diameter; 15 to 25, not over 12 feet in diameter, and 25 to 40 head, not over 14 feet in diameter. It is not advisable to build a silo over 14 feet in diameter, and should the herd require more silage another silo should be constructed.

A wooden silo costs about $2 to $3 per ton capacity; a concrete silo, from $5 to $6 per ton capacity, and a hollow tile silo, from $10 to $12 per ton capacity. Bills of material and instructions for building silos may be obtained free of charge on application to Mr. Gordon at State college, Raleigh, N. C.

Heavy Milkers Require Rest Between Periods

Heavy milkers need the longest rest between lactation periods and dairymen should utiline this resting time to build up physique and to lay down reserve rather than diminish the feed of the dry cow. In former times farmers were afraid of the fat cow at calving time. But the dry cow ceases to give milk because she is doing something bigger. Heavy milking takes more from the cow's body than ordinary feeding puts on. And she needs a certain amount of overweight in reserve to enable her to hold up through the next milking period. Feeding a good cow well is putting money in the bank, and it comes back with interest. Modern research contradicts distinctly and emphatically the belief that dry hay is good enough for the dry cow, and the short-sighted meanness of milking a cow as long as possible before her next calving.

Dairy Specialist Warns Against Inferior Cattle

E. A. Gannon, dairy specialist of Purdue university, has just issued a timely warning with reference to the importation of inferior dairy cattle. The present demand for dairy cows has made business especially good, he states, in some sections for the trader who deals in inferior cows. As a general rule these cows are undersize, in poor condition and not good producers. He mentions one man who purchased four head, three of which were unprofitable producers and the fourth of which had to be sold on account of udder trouble. He recommends that any dairyman who wishes to increase his herd can find good cows from clean, healthy herds and owned by reputable men. This is good advice in any community.

Production of Butter Increased in Minnesota

Not only has the butter production of Minnesota greatly increased during the last few years, but the dairy cows and creameries have become more efficient. In 1920 the number of dairy cows in the state was 1,359,000, and the butter output 120,000,000 pounds. In 1925 there were 1,563,000 dairy cows, or an increase of only about 15 per cent, whereas the butter production in the same year was 245,000,000 pounds, or 100 per cent larger than in 1920. The peak in number of creameries in Minnesota was reached in 1915, when there were 865. After ten years of enormous expansion in creamery butter making, however, the state now has fewer than 800 creameries.

Economical Production

The most important thing in economical milk production is the cow. The second important consideration is the feed and care which she receives. No matter how good the individual cow may be, she will not give good returns unless she has the feed that is necessary to maintain her body and keep that body working at maximum capacity. If a ration that is otherwise plentiful does not contain enough protein, then a portion of the feed will be wasted.

W. H. Stearn Gains 15 lbs. Appetite Keen As Razor

Respected Indianapolis carpenter suffered agony for six years. Could not eat or sleep. Weak, wornout and discouraged. Now, at 67, enjoys good health, exudes good cheer, enthusiasm and energy. Gives full credit to Tanlac

Mr. W. H. Stearn lives at 1211 No. Oakland Avenue, Indianapolis. At 67 years he works steadily as a journeyman carpenter, meeting the competition of men half his age, and holding his own with the best. But for six years he had a different story to tell. Here it is, in his own words:

"I was so rundown from indigestion that my system was completely shattered. When a big contract obliged me to speed up and work overtime, my day's work almost killed me. Sometimes I was actually too weak to raise my hammer or pull my saw. My head and back ached terribly, and when I tried to bend over my head whirled and I was too weak to stand on my feet. Constipation and sluggish liver bothered me and my hand trembled from nervousness. At night I tossed and rolled in bed. Though my work demands plenty of food, my appetite was shot to pieces and I hardly ate enough to keep body and soul together.

"Tanlac helped me so that I now eat and sleep normally again. I'm as energetic as a man of 35 or 40 and don't have to ask odds of younger men. My appetite is like the keen edge of a freshly honed razor and I digest my food like a boy back from the skating pond. The old dizziness, weakness, aches and pains never rack me now. I give all credit to Tanlac for my present fine health, and recommend all other sufferers to try it."

You can profit from Mr. Stearn's experience. If overwork or neglect has left its mark on you, get a trial bottle of Tanlac. It is nature's own tonic and body builder, made from herbs, roots and barks. Your druggist has it; start in on Tanlac today. Over 52 million bottles already sold.

HOME EDUCATION

"The Child's First School is the Family"—Froebel
Issued by the National Kindergarten Association

INJUDICIOUS PRAISE

Lenora Bailey

Mrs. Lee was visiting the studio where her five-year-old daughter, Virginia, was beginning the study of instrumental music. Virginia had been asked to join in some simple little songs and had done very well.

"Oh, what a lovely voice you have, Virginia; you can certainly sing," gushed Mrs. Fields, the owner and conductor of the studio.

"Isn't she fine? She ought to have little lessons in vocal work," raved Faye, Mrs. Fields' grown sister.

Virginia twisted with pleasure and complacency and remarked, "Yes, I think I do sing real well."

""Of course you do," agreed the ladies.

The thoughtful mother took her little daughter out of the studio as soon as possible. On the way home, Virginia asked if she had heard what had been said. To this the mother responded: "Yes, I think it is so nice of them to say such kind things about my little girl. Of course you know, dear, they wanted to make us feel happy so they were extra generous."

The child was thoughtful for a few minutes and then said, "Well, I do think I can sing better than any of the other children around here. Mother, don't you think I should begin to take vocal and dancing lessons?

"No, indeed, dear; not for quite a while."

"But, Mother, Faye said I was a born dancer and Mrs. Fields told me I was the most graceful child in her classes, unless it is Dena, and, Mother, I can do better than she can even if she does feel so smart and big."

"Listen, dear, Mother will tell you when she wants you to do those extra things, so let us not worry any more about them."

After a short silence: "Mother, Faye thinks I won't ever amount to anything the way you are raising me."

The mother was absolutely nonplussed for a few moments. She felt really more than vexed that a child so young should have been exposed in this way, especially since she had had to help Virginia constantly because of a natural tendency to think too highly of herself and her ability. She was sorry to see the unaccustomed frown of irritation on the young face and wondered how Mrs. Fields,, herself a mother, could take such an attitude toward a child or permit her sister to do so. "Does Mrs. Fields carefully consider and weigh all her actions and those of her children as I do?" she questioned. "We were both students of Child Psychology, yet I cannot see that she applies any of her knowledge either in training her own children or in dealing with mine." But she pushed the annoying thoughts quickly and resolutely aside and looking down she asked, "And what does Virginia think?"

It was the child's turn to be nonplussed. Then meeting her mother's loving gaze, a new spirit of loyalty was born.

"I'd rather have you for my mother," was her somewhat irrevelant reply.

THE KENTUCKY MINSTRELS

The next important event on the entertainment calendar is the "OLD KENTUCKY MINSTRELS" promoted by the St. Joe Choral Society and will be on the boards Saturday, Feebruary 12th.

The Choral Society does not feel that they are lowering the dignity of their organization in presenting this show. From start to finish, it is clean, wholesome fun. It includes all the "Trimmins" of the up to date minstrel—fun, frolic and frivolity, jokes, songs and comic sketches—catchy interims, an uproarious farce comeedy, "Mrs. Black's, Pink Tea" by a cast of colored ladies and concludes with a concert of southern melodies and plantation songs by the entire company.

Detailed program will appear next week and as the proceeds will be turned over to the fund for chairs for the new gynasium, it should be patronized by all interested in our new school building.

Watch for further announcements.

OLD ROMANCE IN MODERN TOGS

The rather flowery, but delightful old poet and romancer, Bulwer Lytton, used the phrase, "perfumed light stealing through the mists of alabaster lamps," as a simile for romance. It does sort of fit the charm of Venice and the magic of Italian nights. Margaret Turnbull's novel, "Alabaster Lamps," which is to be printed as a serial in The News, has some charming Venetian scenes, which may account for her selection of the title. But the romance is not confined to foreign shores. Indeed, there is much more of it in the the simple lives of whimsical, lovable folks in a small town in Pennsylvania where the main incidents of the tale occur. The only reason that Venice figures in teh story is becanse two American go-getters had to pursue "the only two women in the world" to that port. It is mostly pretty high-geared, but very real romance, in which drowsy lagoons and blue-black nights are merely incidental.

The program was made up of pictures furnished by the County Agent, E. E. Stinson, The Corn Borer, The Hoosier School Master and a one reel comedy.

The musical part of the program was furnished by the Choral Society, som special numbers being rendered by Miss Gallahan, Mrs. Jean Curie and Donald Kinsey. These numbers being well received as this organization is one that the community is proud of.

One hundred and two children were admitted free.

Thursday, January 27, A. M.

Duett by Bruce Koch and Inez Kinsey, "Juanita" opened this session. Was given in a pleasing manner.

Mrs. Pierce gave her address that was intended for the afternoon session at this time. It was, "Clothing for Health and Happiness." Mrs. Pierce showed the relationship that exists between good clothes and good health. Dwelt on the importance of good quality. Select pattern then goods. She described methods by which adulterations can easily be detected. Goods do not necessarily need to be heavy and cumberson to be comfortable, as was once the case. At the conclusion of Mrs. Pierce's address, Margaret Hamilton gave two readings one being a response to an encore.

"Poultry for Profit on a General Farm," was the subject handled by Mr. Shierling. Mr. Shierling, like Mrs. Pierce reversed the order of his subjects giving the subject allotted to the forenoon, in the afternoon, and vice versa. Many good things were said in Mr. Shierling's talk in regard to feeding and to the care of poultry, far too many to enumerate here. Questions were answered by him at the close of his address to all those particularly interested in the poultry question.

Thursday, P. M.

A playlet by the schools, was the opening number of the last session of this year's institute work. It was a clever little skit. A business session was next in order. First the nominating committee made its report, as follows:

President, John Ulm.
Sec.-Treas., Merritt Sechler.

Secretary's report was then read by John Ulm

The award of prizes to winners of the corn grower's contest was next made. Awards were as follows:

First prize, Frederick Laub, $4.00.
Second prize, Howard Beams, $3.00.
Third prize, Albert Baltz, $1.00.

The other awards made to another class of growers, were:

1st., Floyd Pfaumer, $3.00.
2nd., Ira Moore, $2.00.
3rd., Ray Farver, Ribbon.

During award of these prizes, Merritt Sechler makes motion that this association go on record by adopting resolution to co-operate with state in regard to fighting corn borer.

Mr. Shierling then took the floor, to address the audience on the subject, "Dairying a Major Project on the General Farm." Mr. Shierling brought out many good points, giving importance to the selection of a good sire, right breed and type. It would be impossible, in the space alloted here to enumerate all the good points of Mr. Shierling's address. He is a fluent, pleasant and forceful spaker, and interspersed through his talk, is a vim of subtle humor.

A comic skit by two school children, Helen Storer and Basil Sheffer, followed this address. Prof. Case, of the township high school, outlined a plan for corn club work for the ensuing year, which was formally adopted. It was as follows:

Two classes are represented, 1st., Boys and Girls, as are now enrolled in club work. 2nd., All others as are in any way connected with this work. First prize is Club Round-up, a trip to Purdue University. The second, a trip to International Live Stock Show, at Chicago.

A quartet, composed of Prof. Case, Harvey Hull, Merritt Sechler, and Roy Koch, was well received.

Mrs. Pierce followed, with the address which was to have been given in the forenoon session, "Rural Community Life and Its Possibilities." This address was a fitting climax to the series, being, as it was a practical and moral question. Two points were particularly emphasized, our success rests upon our home, church and our schools. Parents must keep in touch with their children or lose their respect. They must keep pace with important current events, that their children do not need be ashmed of them, and go elsewhere for companionship. For encouragement Mrs. Pierce illustrated her talks by giving examples, that came under her own observation. This completed the program for this year. Next year's session will probably be held in Spencerville.

Flowers in Sick Room

There is a theory that growing plants absorb certain elements from the air and for this reason it is not considered advisable to have them in a sleeping room. The effect would probably not be seriously detrimental in a sick room, provided the flowers did not have a heavy odor and there were not too many plants.

Looking Back For 50 Years

Fifty years ago this year a national banking system was started in the United States.

Today Americans have on deposit and subject to check or drawing interest the unheardof sum of $60,000,000,000

If you do not own a part of that vast sum, you can still profit through the experience of others. You can still make your dollars wor for you—and a working dollar is the only dollar worth having.

Or you can do your boy or girl a wonderful favor by taking even one dollar and starting an account for them—and then teaching them how thrift and saving has made thee United States the most prosperous, the most contented, the happiest nation in the world.

DEAN C. W. JOHNSON HEADS NATIONAL BODY

Is Second Pacific Coast Man To Be President of American Pharmaceutical Ass'n.

New Year's was a notable occasion for Dr. C. W. Johnson, dean of the University college of pharmacy, as on that day he received notice by telegram of his election to the presidency of the American Pharmaceutical Association. Election in the Association is by votes mailed in by the 6,000 members. This is the second time in its seventy-five years of existence t hat the organizationhas chosen its president from the Pacific Coast. Dr. Johnson has been a member of the Association since 1903.

Dr. Johnson's inauguration will take place at the Association's seventy-fifth annual meeting in St. Louis next September. The dean came to the University of Washington 24 years ago, to organize the college of pharmacy, which is now considered one of the finest of its kind in the United States, particularly since the establishment of a four-year course.

He already has served as vice president of the Association and has twice been president of the Washington State Pharmaceutical Association. By enactment of the state legislature in 1909 he was appointed state chemist, a post in which he has rendered invaluable service by obtaining pure food and drug enactments, both nationally and within the state.

SUDDEN DEATH OF MRS. M. T. BISHOP

Being in her usual health, enjoying her evening meal and joking with those at the table, retiring for the night without the slightest indication of being sick, Mrs. M. T. Bishop passed away Tuesday morning at 4:30, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. H. C. Hathaway at Auburn, where she and her husband have been making their home for the past couple of months.

During the morning hours she became restless and sick and Mr. Bishop wanted to call Mrs. Hathaway, but she insisted she would be alright, and at 4 o'clock he finally did call and a physician was sent for at once and found she had suffered a stroke of appoplexy and at 4:30 she passed away.

The body was returned to her St. Joe home Wednesday forenoon and will lie in state at the home until Thursday afternoon when the funeral will be held at the Lutheran Church.

No flowers, is requested by the family.

RELIGIOUS MEASURE DEFEATED 24 TO 21

Part time religious instruction for Indiana public school pupils failed to get approval of the senate today by the narrow margin of three votes.

Upon third reading, the bill introduced by Sen. Fred M. Dickerman, Repn., Indianapolis, calling for two hours of religious instruction weekly for each pupil, under auspices of various sects, was defeated 24-21.

Senators opposing the measure argued against it on the grounds that it would be reverting to the old order of uniting church and state.

Proponents deplored present day morals among youth and said religious education was the remedy.

DIES AFTER ANNOUNCING CURE FOR TUBERCULOSIS

Portland, Ore., Feb. 4.—Just a week after he had announced what he proclaimed a positive cure for tuberculosis, Professor Emile F. Pernot, internationally known for his bacteriological research, is dead at his home here. Death was due to double pneumonia. Professor Pernot was born in New York, and was sixty-eight years old.

Professor Pernot announced a week ago that after ten years of scientific investigation and tests he had proved definitely that a cure for tuberculosis had been found. He had made arrangements for an extensive test to be held here, using a herd of tubercular cattle. The tests, it is believed will be carried on despite Professor Pernot's death.

REPORT OF COUNTY NURSE FOR JANUARY

Two Classes for Home Hygiene and Care of Sick Organized in DeKalb County.

Miss Marion Sweeney, county nurse, makes the following report of her work during the month of January:

During the month of January forty classes in "Maternity and Infancy" were conducted throughout the county by Dr. Dorothy Teal and Miss Nancy Gibbs, R. N., from the Child Hygiene Division of the Indiana State Board of Health. That the classes were both beneficial and appreciated is shown by the attendanceee of six hundred and ninety women. Classes in "General Hygiene" and "Infant Care and Feeding" were attended by the high school girls. During the last week moving pictures on "Posture" and "Preventing Diphtheria" were shown to general school assemblies throughout the county.

Raymond Bright from the Visual Education Department, Indiana State Board of Health, spent two weeks in the county, Clarence Green, County Superintendent of Schools, being responsible for this good work. Talks on the prevention of contagious diseases and especially diphtheria immunization was stressed. Health pictures were shown in all the town school assemblies and many of the township schools and community centers also had this opportunity.

At the DeKalb County Medical meeting which was held in January it was decided that the "Schick test" be given in all the schools in the physicians as a group to eliminate diphtheria in this county. Consent slips have been distributed to the Auburn schools. After having been returned signed by the parent they are being tabulated according to school and grade for a permanent record to be used in re-checking the results. Two hundred and twenty-five consent slips have been returned and twenty-five children have had the toxin-antitoxin, diphtheria immunization some three years ago and others more recently. I am pleased to have this information and hope the good work will continue.

A class in "Home Hygiene and Care of the Sick" has been organized in Newville and Franklin. Troy, Wilmington and Stafford townships will unite for a class at Buler.

Thirty-eight classes and lectures were attended with the state departments this month, also seven evening classes and three Parent-Teacher meetings at which talks were given.

Two schools in the county received pennants from the National Tuberculosis Association for 100 per cent health work. They are St. Joe school, grades three and four, Miss Pauline Wasson teacher, and Jackson township school No. 8, Miss Joyce M. Rhoads, teacher. A number of the schools are working for the pennants the last semester.

A second series of form letters were sent to sixty-five teachers of township and consolidatd schools this month. Mrs. Doria Tracy of Auburn, volunteered her service which was much appreciated.

Four hundred and ninety-four miles were traveled and many trips made by the state department.

Three defects of division were corrected as a result of the eye inspection which was made in December.

WM. CURIE IS APPOINTED GUARDIAN

Upon petition of John P. Hart, a guardianship for Franklin P. Hart of St. Joe, was established Friday in the DeKalb circuit court. Franklin P. Hart is seriously ill and the purpose of having a guardian is to provide care for him. William Curie was appointed and he qualified by filing $1,000 bond, with A. Culbertson and John Hart as sureties.

Buy Known Lumber!

FOR years Long-Bell lumber products have been trade-marked and nationally advertised and today no building material trade-mark stands higher with the industry—no lumber product promises more permanence or durability than the products marked with this name.

Men are behind it—men in woods and mills and offices—men skilled in lumber production and distribution—all with one kindred aim: To make this trade-mark stand always for unsurpassed quality and uniformity in lumber. Confidence must surely guide a man in his buying of lumber . . . confidence in the dealer who sells it . . . confidence in the company which makes it . . . and this mark points the way to maximum construction value!

For these reasons our stock of building material includes Long-Bell trade-marked lumber.

WAXING OR VARNISHING IMPROVES LINOLEUM

Tables and Floor Covered With Linoleum Varnished to Resist Water, Soap, Grease and Heat.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Waxing or varnishing is said to improve the appearance of linoleum and to make it last longer. Wax should be used on the inlaid and plain kinds and varnish on the printed ones, for wax sometimes tends to soften the printed surface. If either of these finishes is applied, the linoleum is then cleaned and cared for like a wood floor so finished. If not given a special finish linoleum should be swept with a soft brush and dusted with an oiled or dry mop. Occasionally it should be cleaned more thoroughly with a cloth wrung out of suds made with luke-warm water and neutral soap, rinsed with clear water, and wiped dry with another cloth. Only a small space should be wet at a time, and a linoleum-covered floor should never be flooded. Strong soaps and cleaning powders that contain alkali injure linoleum and should never be used on it. Whenever any kind of cleaning powder is used on a particularly dirty spot care should be taken to remove any trace of the water in which the powder was dissolved.

LAYER CAKE IS UP TO STANDARD

Good Old-Fashioned Method of Mixing Is Favored.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

At least twenty-five times a year, counting only every other week, most housekeepers make a layer cake. What with birthdays, and holidays, church fairs and community picnics, the number is probably much more. While there is nothing strikingly new about the recipe below, it is a good standard rule that has been tested by the United States Department of Agriculture and it may be depended on for a fair proportion of the total number of cakes you make in the course of a twelvemonth. The ingredients given are for a simple foundation cake suitable for layer cakes that are to have filling or icing. The amounts given will make two thick or three thin layers. When you start to make your cake measure out all your ingredients first, grease your tins, and then begin mixing. You will work faster and with less chance of omitting something important. While cakes may be put together with fairly good results by what is called the muffin method—mixing all the liquids in one bowl and all the dry in another, and then combining the mixture—most of us prefer the good old-fashioned method of mixing a cake, beginning by creaming the sugar and fat together and ending by folding in the fluffy, stiffly beaten egg whites.

Here is the list of ingredients: 1 cupful milk; 3 cupfuls flour, soft wheat; ½ cupful fat; 2 to 3 eggs; 4 teaspoonfuls baking powder; 1½ cupfuls sugar; ¼ teaspoonful salt; ½ teaspoonful flavoring. Place the fat in a warm place until it becomes soft, though not melted, so that it may be combined easily with the sugar. This is just as satisfactory and much quicker than the laborious method of creaming together the cold fat and sugar. After the fat and sugar have been thoroughly combined stir in the beaten egg yolks and add alternately the dry ingredients, which have been mixed and sifted together, and the liquid. At the start add only a small quantity of liquid. If too much is added it dissolves the sugar, and the fat separates into large masses that must be combined with the other ingredients by beating, thus making useless the work of combining the fat and sugar in the beginning. Add the flavoring and fold in the well-beaten egg whites. Pour the batter into lightly greased, floured pans, taking care that it is spread evenly. The oven should be about 375 degrees Fahrenheit. Turn the layers out on a wire cake cooler. Ice when sufficiently cool.

If hard-wheat flour must be used, seven-eighths of a cupful of it may be taken for each level cupful of the soft-wheat flour.

To make an orange icing that will be hard outside and soft underneath, put one cupful of granulated sugar with one egg white, a pinch of salt and four tablespoonfuls of orange juice into the top of the double boiler. Begin to beat with a rotary beater and continue beating it over the hot water until the frosting is thick enough to spread. Add one tablespoonful of grated orange peel and spread with a knife or spatula dipped in hot water. This amount must be doubled if you wish to frost the sides of the cake as is often done.

For chocolate frosting start the sugar, egg white and 4 tablespoonfuls of water, in place of orange juice, in the double boiler as before. While beating it, as soon as the mixture is hot, begin adding unsweetened chocolate in small pieces, which will gradually melt, until you have added 2 ounces. Flavor with ½ teaspoonful of vanilla and spread.

To Make Prune Souffle Use Cupful of Thick Pulp

Prune whip or souffle requires one cupful of thick prune pulp. To get this thick pulp soak one-half pound prunes overnight, or for several hours, in a pint of water, then cook until tender in this same water, remove the stones, and rub the pulp and skins through a colander. Add a half cupful of sugar, and heat this until the sugar is dissolved and the pulp thick. Stir this constantly to keep it from sticking and burning. While this is cooling beat the whites of five eggs stiff, using a wire whisk. Add one tablespoonful of lemon juice to the prune pulp and fold this in small amounts into the egg whites until thoroughly blended. This can be served in this form as prune whip or it can be baked into a souffle made from the yolks. Turn into a deep glass or earthenware baking dish which has been buttered. Set the dish in a shallow pan of water and bake for 50 minutes in a very moderate oven—250 to 275 degrees Fahrenheit. The result should be a high, fluffy, delicate souffle which holds its shape well and does not fall on cooling. It may be served hot or cold, with or without cream, or, better still, a custard sauce made from the egg yolks.

Some Valuable Sources of Efficient Protein

It is frequently asked why the term efficient or adequate protein is given to certain proteins and what foods supply them in the ordinary diet. The United States Department of Agriculture explains that proteins are one of the chief constituents of all plant and animal cells. Plants are capable of building proteins from the chemical substances furnished by soil and air. Animals cannot do this, but must rebuild the tissue cells from the proteins in their food. The animal body is, however, able to break down the complex plant proteins into the simple units that comprise them and then to rebuild these units into its own characteristic body proteins. There are many such proteins, and all do not contain the same essential units, or amino acids. For this reason certain protein foods may not supply all of the amino acids for the animal in question, and are therefore not adequate for nutrition until supplemented by a protein furnishing the particular amino acids that are lacking. Meat, milk, eggs and fish are valuable sources of efficient protein in man's diet.

Eating Fish and Milk Together Not Harmful

The idea that it is harmful to eat fish and milk together is entirely erroneous. If fish is fresh or properly preserved there is no reason why it should not be eaten with milk. Fish and milk are frequently cooked together and eaten in the form of chowders or milk gravies. Creamed fish on toast or served with potatoes is a favorite dish and is often given to children. Certainly if these two articles of diet are not harmful when cooked together they will not be when eaten at the same meal. Superstitions about two foods being incompatible are most likely to arise when one of the two foods is particularly liable to spoil. This applies to the superstition about shellfish and milk. Or it may arise in connection with foods that are eaten on picnics or other festal occasions when people either overeat or do not observe the ordinary precautions in taking care of food materials.

The color of canned salmon indicates the variety rather than the quality. There are several kinds of salmon and these vary in color after canning from a bright red to almost white.

CHAPTER IX

—10—

"Mansfield Comes Home."

Betty and Cathewe stood alone, facing each other for a moment.

"Suppose we return to the greenhouse?" she suggested.

He led the way, closing the door gently. "I have tried to avoid this moment, but it was inevitable."

"Why do you hate my father?"

"I do not hate him. We have different ideals."

"I was just beginning to like you!"

"And now?"

"Oh, I don't know! Something dreadful seems to have happened to me. Has my father ever wronged you or yours?"

"No."

"Then why do you attack him?"

He was silent.

"I love my father, and he loves me. He will not stoop to defend himself from calumny. Different ideals! My father has made this city prosperous. What have you, an outsider, done?"

"Not an outsider, just an outcast," he answered.

"Well, I'll give you a surprise. After January first you will no longer direct the policies of your despicable newspaper."

"And what miracle will happen to prevent me?"

"It has already happened. At this moment I control the majority of the stock." The level quality of her tones was Mansfield-ian—cold and implacable.

As he was trying to comprehend the significance of this there came a series of rumbles like thunder in the distance. The greenhouse trembled, and there was the crisp tinkle of falling glass. Instinctively both of them wheeled and stared through the glass at the sky in the east. They saw it grow lurid then sharply ruddy.

"The munitions," he gasped. And ran toward the door.

* * * * * * *

When the cub reporter fell in a faint on the paper-littered floor of Cathewe's office, Cathewe became affected by a strange tightness in his throat. He fell to musing upon the elusive human attribute called loyalty.

"Say, chief," he whispered, "there's something I've got to tell you."

"Well, what have you done?"

"The other day they sent me on a fake interview with Mansfield. Of course, I was kicked out. So this morning I cut out all the news stories and editorials concerning him and mailed them to Miss Mansfield, with an unsigned note that everything was true. Well, the moment I dropped the stuff in the post office, I got cold feet. I tried to get it back, but there was nothing doing. I'm horribly sorry."

"So am I," said Cathewe, gravely.

"All right; I'm fired."

"No. What you did tonight squares that. You're going on the payroll at twenty a week. There's a taxi for you below."

Cathewe called to the city room for someone to help the boy to the cab; and as soon as this was done, the harried editor fell to pacing.

The old man of the sea was still on the shoulders of Digby Hallowell's son, he thought. He would have to start all over again, somewhere, somehow, thanks to the efforts of Miss Mansfield. He would sell the little home and turn back the proceeds to his mother. And what would she do—return to Florence or follow his future fortune?

"Ah, Matthews!" he cried, as a man about his own age came in. "Give me the gist of it. I've been holding up the editorial page for two hours."

"Five dead and forty-seven injured. The biggest story that ever struck this town, Mr. Cathewe, and there is a phase to it I just don't know how to handle. I want your view first."

"What is it?" asked Cathewe.

"Mansfield and that stunning girl of his. That girl goes sailing out there in her dinner gown and turns her big limousine into an ambulance, and makes twelve trips to the hospitals.

"The place was totally wrecked. Four tanks of T. N. T.—you know we had four separate fields of them; so that if an accident happened to one field, the others would be immune—the four fields exploded simultaneously. The girl is in the city hospital—"

"Hurt?"

"No. Just watching at the side of her father's cot. Seems Mansfield was out there inspecting the work on the pipeline when the place blew up. He wasn't touched, but he hung around, giving orders."

"But the hospital!"

"I'm coming to that. What he did was as brave a thing as might happen in France. One side of his face will be badly scarred and his left hand crippled. Dashed into a blazing shack for three Slav kiddies that had been deserted by their terror-stricken father. Coming out, the door frame fell upon him. But he staggered through, into the safety zone. He was badly burned, but the kiddies escaped with nothing more serious than singed hair."

"And then?"

"Not a sound from that crowd! First-off, that struck me as rather hard and cruel. But I get the rights of it shortly. Stunned. When they awoke, he was on his way to the city hospital. Looks to me, chief, as if our capital has suddenly been wiped out. We can't jump on the old freebooter hereafter."

"Thank God for that!" said Cathewe. "I'd like nothing better than to [illegible] there and shake his good [illegible]

"Then the lid is off?"

"Squeeze all you can out of the story. Let the town realize that Dunleigh Mansfield has come home."

"Here's the real climax. The girl carried eleven men to the Good Shepherd. When she got there with the twelfth, there wasn't room. So she had to take the man to the city hospital. She saw to it that the man was given the best aid obtainable. When they had got him all swathed up in cotton, she chanced to turn toward the next cot—and there lay her father!"

Cathewe caught his star man by the shoulders and pushed him from the room. He himself had work to do. He sat down and wrote the editorial which was talked about long after the fire was forgotten. This editorial was headed: "Mansfield Comes Home."

CHAPTER X

The Truth.

Betty, who had slept in the chair beside her father's cot, spread out the Times and with heavy eyes scanned the black headlines.

"Daddy!" she cried exultantly. "You're a hero! The whole town is talking about your deed. Listen." She began reading the account.

"What paper is that?" he asked.

"The Times."

"Get a Herald and see what that paper has to say."

She obtained one and opened the newspaper to page four. "There is an editorial here," said Betty.

"Read it to me."

When she had done—with a voice that had been strong at the beginning but which presently lost its resonance and broke frequently toward the end—the paper slipped from her hands to the floor and she stared across the row of cots.

"Not an Outsider, Just an Outcast!" He Answered.

"I don't understand," she said, addressing nobody in particular. "Daddy, I bought the controlling interest in the Herald yesterday morning. And last night at Nancy's I told Mr. Cathewe that his successor would be appointed in January."

The light in Mansfield's eye broke into many little points, and the lids worked rapidly. "Betty, you have met him?"

"Twice, accidentally. He remained unknown until last night. He—he said he warred against you because your ideals were different."

"That was sportsmanlike. What do you propose to do with the paper?"

"I don't know now. I don't suppose I had any plans mapped out for the future. I just wanted the attacks against you stopped. He says you have come home. What does he mean by that?"

"I'll mull it over and tell you what I think of it this afternoon. You run along home, and climb into bed. You're about done, honey. And I'll be rested, too, when you get back."

"I am tired. But there is something I—must tell you—before I leave. For more than three years I have been receiving letters. Love-letters, daddy. I can speak now, because the affair has come to an end. When I go up to the house I shall destroy those letters."

"A writer—with a little money," whispered Mansfield, his gaze directed toward the ceiling.

Betty arrived home and went to her room. As the maid was helping her to undress, a crumpled envelope fell to the floor. Betty suddenly recollected that it was the letter Nancy had given her. She started to rip open the end, but desisted. Both her body and mind seemed drugged.

"Call me at one promptly," she said, as her head touched the pillow.

Four hours later she awoke, refreshed and saw the mail on the bed stand. She reached for it. Fate decided that she should open the large envelope first. Newspaper clippings. She caught a single line in the top clipping—"The Lord of Polygon Hill Is Always Safely Within the Law."

One by one Betty read them, now burning with fury, now cold with implacable hate. She came to the last clipping. It was the story of an inventor whom her father had betrayed and permitted to die a pauper; a terrible narrative of the ruthlessness of business, of the callosity of self-interest. And yet she knew it could not be true.

The truth! To whom might she go! Not to her father in his present critical condition. . . . Maddox! She flung herself out of bed and ran to the extension telephone. Yes; he could give her a few minutes, but he was hard pressed. Finally he arrived.

She pushed him into a chair and laid the clippings on his knee. "Read them," she said.

He pretended to glance over them. "Yes; all these things are true, little lady. But what your father did last night cleans the slate, in the eyes of God as well as man. You baby! Don't you dare sit in judgment on your father at this moment."

"And I—I have misjudged Brandon Cathewe?"

"I'll tell you. A few hundred years ago he would be wearing a surtout with a cross on it and he would be outside the wall of Jerusalem. I loved that boy. I wish God had given me a son like him. And your father admires him secretly. He tried to avoid you because he didn't want you to know him as he is. It would have made you doubt your father. You have met his mother. He couldn't be very bad with such a mother. He misjudged you, too. He thought you had deserted France, that you were only a giddy butterfly."

"Whereas—I am an ant. Who is he, really? From where does he come?"

"There's only one way to find that out. Go to his mother."

"Go to his mother," repeated Betty, dreamily. "But I am keeping you from your patients!"

"I'm mighty glad you called me in. I don't know who could have mailed you those clippings, but he's done a fine service for us all. Good-by, little lady. And remember!"

After the doctor had gone Betty remained motionless for a space. A new thought had occurred to her. Brandon Cathewe. She would give him back his newspaper. Having come to this decision, she returned to her room. It was then she espied once more Nancy's letter. This time she opened it.

She had to approach a window to decipher this scrawl: "From George Cottar to Nancy Maddox, his friend."

It came to her, upon this second perusal, that the handwriting though in pencil, was strangely familiar. Then she came upon a little cross where a period should have been.

There fell upon her senses a roaring like the falling of mighty waters. Until this died away, she was powerless to move. When she could impart mobility to her feet, with her heart fluttering wildly she ran to the precious Florentine box. She opened a letter and laid it beside the sheet of manuscript. The same hand had written them both.

Immediately she flew out of the house and rushed off to Nancy's.

"Oh, Nancy! Where can I find him?"

"You want father?"

"No, no! I want George Cottar—the man who wrote these letters!"

Nancy led the way into the living room and stopped only when she reached a window from which the street was to be seen.

"What do you see from this window?" she asked.

"From here? I seem to be very stupid, for I don't see anything."

"See, then, that temple of fine dreams and music—the little white house with the picket fence. For the man who wrote those letters to you, and George Cottar, and Brandon Cathewe—they are one, Betty. Why don't you go over?"

"All right, I will," answered Betty and with the impetuosity of ardent youth she again dashed out of the house.

Betty crossed the street, opened the gate and latched it behind her, and approached the fateful door.

Mrs. Cathewe came forward and, with that interpretative insight which was the quality of her genius, gathered the girl in her arms.

When they were seated upon the divan, Betty locked her fingers tightly and began.

"I did not know until last night that he was the editor of the Herald. I was very stupid through it all. Then last night at Nancy's the truth came out. I was hard and bitter to him. I did not know then that my father—"

A hand flew toward her lips. "You shall not say it!" cried Mrs. Cathewe. "Your father was magnificent last night. You should have heard sonny praise you both. He was happy over it."

"Happy!"

"Yes. A phase of his task has come to a happy ending. We can leave Bannister now, content."

"Leave Bannister?—because I told him that after January he—No, no! He shall have his newspaper back."

"Did—did he ever tell you about some letters he wrote to me?"

"Yes. Between sonny and me there are no secrets."

"Did he mean what he wrote?" asked Betty, miserable with shame.

Lesson for February 13

MAKING OUR HOMES CHRISTIAN

LESSON TEXT—Eph. 5:22-6:4.
GOLDEN TEXT—Let us love one another for love is of God.
PRIMARY TOPIC—The Child at Home.
JUNIOR TOPIC—Obedience at Home.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Unselfishness in the Home.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—How to Make Our Homes Christian.

I. The Importance of the Home.

The oldest and most important institution in the world is the family. It is the foundation stone upon which all other institutions are built. In the measure that the home is kept pure and strong will the church, society and the nation be pure and strong.

II. The Makers of the Home.

The foundation upon which the home is built is marriage, and the makers of the home are the man and the woman united in holy wedlock.

III. The Obligations of the Members of the Home.

1. The husband (Eph. 5:25-32).

(1) The husband is to love his wife (v. 25). Observe—

a. The measure of this love is the love of Christ for His church. Christ loved the church so that He gave Himself for it. His was a self-emptying love. The obligation enjoined then on the husband is to manifest that self-emptying love toward his wife.

b. The purpose of this love (vv. 26, 27).

The purpose of the husband's self-emptying love is the perfection of his wife's character.

c. The ground of this love (vv. 28-30).

After all, the ground of the husband's love for his wife is his own self. He that loveth his wife loveth himself.

(2) The husband is to be joined unto his wife (v. 31).

When the time comes for a man to establish a home, he leaves his father and mother and is joined to his wife. This results in the creation of the new unity of society.

2. The wife (Eph. 5:22-24).

She is to be subject to her own husband. This is not an arbitrary matter, but it is according to the divine arrangement. It is to be "as unto the Lord." It is important to inquire as to what kind of subjection is enjoined. In order to understand this, we must grasp the figure which the apostle introduces of Christ and the church. Christ's loving the church is without ulterior motive, as true love "seeketh not its own." Since Christ gave Himself for the church, He thus lifted the church into union with Himself and became to it Lord in the power of His love. The church responds to this love by lovingly recognising the Lordship of Christ. Just as the church graciously comes under the guidance and direction of Jesus Christ does the wife respond to the love of her husband. Headship of the man is the divine order. Headship never suggests "boss-ship" nor governorship. Observe with reference to this subjection—

(a) The motive (v. 22). "As unto the Lord."

(b) The ground (v. 23). "The husband is the head of the wife."

(c) The extent of (v. 24). "In everything."

3. The children (6:1-3).

The divine purpose in the union of the male and the female in the bonds of holy wedlock is the propagation of the race. When God pronounced His benediction upon the first pair He said, "Be fruitful and multiply."

(1) Obedience to parents (v. 1).

The ground of this obedience is the fact that the parents stand in the place of God to the child.

(2) Honor the parents (v. 2).

Obedience to parents is limited to the period of immaturity. When the children take their place in the establishment of new units in society they are no longer under obligation to obey their parents. Two gracious promises are attached to this commandment, that it may be well with thee and that thou mayest live long on the earth.

4. The parents (v. 4).

Doubtless the word "fathers" was intended to be inclusive of the "mothers."

(1) Provoke not your children to wrath.

This doubtless means that in the exercise of parental authority there should be avoidance of irritation.

(2) To bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord.

Nurture doubtless means to educate and admonition means discipline.

Religious Instruction

It is time that we give attention to the religious instruction of the children of America.—President Harding.

When Souls Are Saved

There never was a spirit-filled church but that there were souls saved for the kingdom.—J. H. Suter.

God Gives Strength

It is at the point where we are just about to faint, that God gives us strength to go on.—Echoes.

The Kitchen Cabinet

(©, 1927, Western Newspaper Union.)

A slender acquaintance with the world must convince every man that actions, not words, are the true criterion of the attachment of friends. That the most liberal professions of good will are very far from being the surest marks of it.—George Washington.

FOR DINNER

A nice soup for a nourishing dish for dinner or luncheon is:

Split Pea Soup—Soak a half pound or less of split peas over night; in the morning put to cook in water to cover. In a separate kettle place one or two pig's hocks, add plenty of cold water and put to cook. When tender add the peas and season to the hocks and simmer until well-seasoned through.

Chili Stew.—Take one and one-half pounds of round steak, one and one half tablespoonfuls of butter, one and one-half tablespoonfuls of olive oil, six tablespoonfuls of chopped onion, four cloves of garlic, one and one-half tablespoonfuls of worchestershire sauce three teaspoonfuls of chili powder two teaspoonfuls of salt, three cupfuls of tomatoes, and one and one-half tablespoonfuls of flour.

Fruit Salad.—Dissolve a package of lemon gelatin as usual, add half cupful of finely diced celery, a cupful of diced apple, a few almonds shredded, one-half a green pepper cut into fine strips, a bit of pineapple finely cut or a pear or two, either canned or fresh. When the gelatin is beginning to thicken stir in the prepared fruit and vegetables. Set away to mold and serve on lettuce with a rich dressing.

Glazed Onions With Steak.—Cook small even-sized onions until soft, but firm enough to hold their shape. Make a sirup of one cupful of sugar and one-half cupful of stock; cook to the soft boil stage, add the onions, and continue to cook for two or three minutes. Remove the onions when the sirup begins to brown and place the onions around the steak on a hot platter.

Emergency Salad.—Cut a few bits of cheese into neat cubes, chop six or eight olives, break a few walnut meats into pieces, add a few seeded and skinned grapes, an orange and a sour pickle, all sliced thin. Mix all together and fill lemon shells with the mixture. Serve on paper doily covered plates.

Banana and Apple Salad.—Line a bowl with lettuce. Slice three bananas and four apples, mix well and place on lettuce. To one-half cupful of peanut butter add one-fourth cupful of French dressing and pour over the salad.

For the Family Meal.

A good nourishing drink which you need not fear to give to the little people in the family, is barley coffee. Prepare it by roasting until a deep brown, then grind it and use it as coffee, adding a tablespoonful to a cupful of water. Serve with sugar and cream. This is a nourishing drink to serve fever patients when recovering.

Fruit Cake.—Take one cupful of bread sponge, one cupful of currants, one cupful of dates, one and one-half cupfuls of sugar, one cupful of figs, one cupful of raisins, one cupful each of figs and citron, one cupful of flour and one-half cupful of shortening. Mix all together with the bread sponge. Dissolve one teaspoonful of soda in a tablespoonful of water, then add one teaspoonful each of cloves and cinnamon. Let rise for three hours or until light. Bake one hour in a moderate oven.

Fruit Salad.—Remove the skin and seeds from a cupful of white grapes. Cut three bananas into small cubes and cover with lemon juice. Cut six oranges into small pieces and mix with the salad dressing. Arrange in nests of lettuce and garnish with mayonnaise dressing.

Steamed Chocolate Pudding.—Beat one egg, add one-half cupful of sugar, one cupful of milk, two tablespoonfuls of melted butter, one cupful of flour, two teaspoonfuls of baking powder, and one square of chocolate melted in one tablespoonful of water. Steam twenty minutes. This makes eight small puddings.

Sauce for Chocolate Pudding.—Separate the whites and yolks of two eggs and beat well, add one-fourth of a cupful of sugar, a teaspoonful of vanilla and a pinch of salt to the beaten yolks, then fold in the beaten whites; cook over hot water until steaming hot. Add the vanilla after taking the sauce from the heat.

St. Joe won two games of basket ball last week on the local floor. Friday evening Woodburn was defeated by a score of 12 to 17 and on Saturday evening Auburn second team was beaten by 19 to 20. Both games showed marked improvement on the part of the locals and when they have had sufficient practice, will equal any of the high school teams in the county.

A new measure in the Indiana legislature would give banks in cities with population less than 35,000 right to close on Wednesday afternoon during June, July and August. That's some legislation to be sure. But two hours a week was refused the school children in which religious instruction might be given. Which of these two bills means more to our state? You decide this. Senator Shank stood pat on the religious education bill, feeling that it would mean more to our future state than all the other bills combined.

Mrs. Chas. Coburn is on the sick list.

DRAWING THE LINE

We are glad to print letters from our readers, in fact we welcome them. But occasionally we receive one that does not bear the name of the writer, and which usually seeks to criticize some official or institution. Once again we must state that such letters had best be left unwritten. No newspaper will print that which reflects on the character of any citizen, or that which might injure the welfare of our schools and churches, or their officials. If you have a helpful criticism to make, or a good suggestion to offer, we will be glad to print it, and you will be glad to sign your name to it because you are not ashamed of it. But don't ask us to print something you are ashamed to have the public know who wrote it. We want helpful letters—we're always glad to get them. But harmful ones will not get any farther than the waste basket.

DR. W. B. CALDWELL AT THE AGE OF 83

A Child's Laxative Which Mothers Can Rely On

To Dr. W. B. Caldwell, of Monticello, Ill., a practicing physician for 47 years, it seemed cruel that so many constipated infants and children had to be kept "stirred up" and half sick by taking cathartic pills, tablets, salts, calomel and nasty oils.

While he knew that constipation was the cause of nearly all children's little ills, he constantly advised mothers to give only a harmless laxative which would help to establish natural bowel "regularity."

In Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin mothers have a regulating laxative which they can depend upon whenever a child is constipated, bilious, feverish or sick from a cold, indigestion or sour stomach. All children love its pleasant taste.

Buy a large 60-cent bottle at any store that sells medicine, or write "Syrup Pepsin," Monticello, Illinois, for a FREE SAMPLE BOTTLE and just see for yourself how perfectly it cleanses and regulates the bowels of infants and children.

In Later Years of Life

Good Elimination is More Than Ever Important.

As we grow older, there is apt to be a gradual slowing up of bodily functions. The kidneys are the blood filters. Proper function cleanses the blood stream thoroughly. Sluggish function is apt to permit some retention of uric acid and other poisons. This tends to make one tired, listless and achy—to have drowsy headaches and dizziness and perhaps a tonic backache. That the kidneys are not functioning properly is often shown by scanty or burning passages. Elderly people recommend Doan's Pills in this condition. This tested diuretic is endorsed the country over. Ask your neighbor!

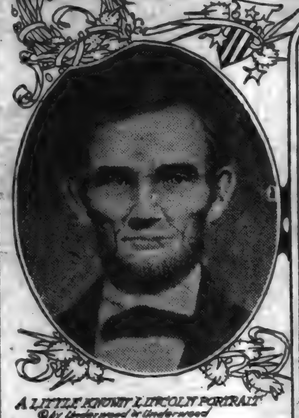
LINCOLNIANA, 1927



A LITTLE KNOWN LINCOLN PORTRAIT
© by Underwood & Underwood

The above little-known portrait of Lincoln is from a sketch made by Freeman Thorp in 1861 and shows Lincoln at the age of fifty-two. This is said to be the only portrait of the war President drawn entirely from life. Years after Lincoln died, Thorp, who was the painter of four Presidents, studied the existing pictures of Lincoln, but found none so true to life as his penciled sketch. With his vivid memory of the President as he had known him in 1861 he painted the above portrait.

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

ABRAHAM LINCOLN is undoubtedly the most written-about American, not even excepting the immortal George Washington. Although more than sixty years have elapsed since he passed from the stage of history, through all these years there has been no let-up in the number of books, magazine and newspaper articles and stray bits of information which have been presented to a public, apparently always eager for more light upon the personality and career of this simple Illinois backwoodsman who rose to a position of world importance. In fact the mass of new information about Lincoln seems to grow instead of diminish as time passes and, if 1926 is any criterion, the year 1927 will see an even greater amount of Lincolniana added to our national history.

In the past few years iconoclasts have been busy turning the searchlight upon the lives of our great with the professed desire to "tell the whole truth" about them, including those "truths" which will show that they were much less great than popular opinion has believed them to have been. Through all this idol-shattering, the great figure of Lincoln has stood virtually untouched, the stature of his greatness undiminished. Apparently any new "truths" about him which may be revealed by the historians cannot change in the least, either, the verdict of history upon him. Least of all can they change the love for him of the common people, whom, as he once said, "the Lord must love, because he made so many of them."

The accessories to the Lincolniana of 1926 proved again that the amount of new material, in the sense that it is not widely known, about him is seemingly inexhaustible. Outstanding among them, perhaps, were Carl Sandburg's two-volume study of "Abraham Lincoln: the Prairie Years," and the publication of the further researches of the indefatigable Rev. William E. Barton, whose two-volume "Life of Abraham Lincoln" of 1925 was his third important contribution to fresh biographical material. Incidentally, it might be added that one bibliography of Lincoln material lists some 2,680 books and pamphlets!

Sandburg's biography, which is wholly devoted to showing Lincoln in his times before he went to the White House, is perhaps as "understanding" a one as has ever been written, because, as another man of their type, the late Stuart Sherman, in writing a review of Sandburg's work, pointed out, "they are good companions, the two of them, and mutually illuminating—Illinoisans both, plain people, admirable story tellers, rationalists, Jeffersonian Democrats both, both non-professing Christians — Lincoln perhaps the completest specimen that has appeared in the Western hemisphere, and both poets withal, made melancholy at times and gentle-hearted by asking themselves what folk remember 'in the dust, in the tombs.'"

But it is to Rev. W. E. Barton that Americans are most indebted for clearing up many mysteries about Lincoln. Barton is a historian who has sought to "tell the truth" about Lincoln, but he is no iconoclast. He has dispelled legends which have grown up in the amazingly short time of half a century, but the Lincoln which he depicts is none the less admirable nor lovable. If anything, he is more so of both and Barton's Lincoln demonstrates all the more clearly that Lincoln needs no myths or legends to enhance his fame.

Among the many interesting revelations made by this biographer are those about the five sons of Mrs. Lydia Bixby, who were the inspiration for the famous Bixby Letter which was delivered to the Boston mother on Thanksgiving day, 1864, with a Thanksgiving dinner and a considerable sum of money. The inspiration for this letter was a statement from the War department to President Lincoln that Mrs. Bixby was the mother of five sons, four of whom were killed in battle and the fifth died of wounds. The facts which Barton has brought to light are these:

Two sons, Charles N. Bixby and Oliver C. Bixby, were killed in battle, the former at Fredericksburg and the latter in the Crater fight before Petersburg. But they were the only Bixby sons who were killed in action. Another son, Henry C. Bixby, was captured at the battle of Gettysburg but was paroled in 1864, returned to his home, discharged from service and lived until 1871. Edward Bixby, a boy of eighteen, who was supposed to have died of wounds, grew homesick and deserted to the enemy in 1862. After the war he changed his occupation, became a sailor and is known to have been living with his mother in 1871. He died in Chicago in 1909. George Way Bixby, supposed to have been killed at Petersburg, was captured by the Confederates there and a fellow prisoner who returned to Boston reported that he had deserted to the enemy, but later records state that he died in prison. Although he is known to have been living as late as March, 1865, his final fate is unknown.

So of the "five sons who died gloriously in the field of battle," as Lincoln wrote to their mother, only two actually did die thus, one was a known deserter and another may have been. But for all that Lincoln's letter was written under a misapprehension and for all that the Bixby sons may not have been deserving of all the honor it gave them, the fact remains that this letter still stands as a classic of English prose and, as Barton has said, the facts in the case can "detract nothing from the noble and sympathetic spirit of Abraham Lincoln."

The latest Lincoln legend that Mr. Barton has dispelled is in regard to the sleeping sentinel, sentenced to be shot, whom Lincoln is said to have pardoned. The story book version of the affair has Lincoln riding out at dawn to stop the execution, sitting down in a tent with the boy, looking at the photograph of the young soldier's widowed mother and hearing the boy's grateful offer to mortgage the old farm and repay the President for saving his life. Then it has the boy, mortally wounded in battle later, delivering a long oration to his comrades, uttering a prayer for Abraham Lincoln and sending a dying message to the President.

The only thing the matter with the story, says Barton, is that it is all wrong. William Scott of Company K of the Third Vermont, who had been detailed as one of three soldiers guarding the chain bridge over the Potomac, was found sleeping on his post on the night of August 30, 1861. He was court-martialed and sentenced to be shot Monday morning, September 9. The sentence, however, was a bluff and intended by Brig. Gen. William F. Smith, commander of the brigade, to "throw a scare" into the brigade and impress upon these volunteers the stern necessities of military life. The bluff worked and a four-page petition, signed by the most of the regiment and begging clemency for Scott, was presented to the brigade commander. Upon General Smith's recommendation General McClellan issued a pardon.

Lincoln had little or nothing to do with the case. It is true that he was concerned about the case and "simply as a matter of form" made the request to McClellan that Scott's life be spared. He let the fact of his request be known to impress upon the soldiers the seriousness of Scott's offense, for when the pardon was read before the regiment, the warning was uttered that nothing short of the President's request had saved this soldier and that the President was not likely to do it again.

Nor did the dramatic tent scene take place. The "widowed mother" did not exist. Both of Scott's parents were living at the time. Part of the story about Scott's later career is true—that part which tells of his death. He was mortally wounded at the battle of Lee's Mill April 16, 1862, and died the next day. But he did not deliver a dying oration nor a prayer for the President. The surgeon who attended him has stated that he was in a comatose condition to the moment of his death.

Although Lincoln was not directly responsible for saving the life of this sleeping sentinel, there was a similar case later in the war in which he did exercise this clemency. In January, 1864, Henry C. Fuller of Company C, One Hundred and Eighteenth New York volunteers, was sentenced to be shot for falling asleep at his post. One of his comrades, Rowland C. Kellogg, happened to be writing to his father, Congressman Orlando Kellogg of New York, at the time, and in a postscript to his letter told of the sentence that had been passed upon his friend "Hank." Orlando Kellogg had first known Lincoln when both were in congress in the '40s, and during the Civil war they had renewed their acquaintance and become fast friends.

Immediately upon receipt of the letter, Congressman Kellogg went to the White House, even though it was late at night, to plead for Fuller's life. According to the story, he told the President that "the boys of the One Hundred and Eighteenth didn't go to war to be shot that way." Lincoln decided to save Fuller's life and issued the necessary papers which were carried back to camp by Chaplain Charles L. Hagar, who had brought young Kellogg's letter to the congressman. The chaplain arrived just in time to prevent the execution.

THE BIXBY LETTER

Executive Mansion
Washington, Nov 24, 1864

To Mrs Bixby, Boston, Mass

Dear Madam,

I have been shown in the files of the War Department a statement of the Adjutant General of Massachusetts that you are the mother of five sons who have died gloriously in the field of battle. I feel how weak and fruitless must be any word of mine which should attempt to beguile you from the grief of a loss so overwhelming. But I cannot refrain from tendering you the consolation that may be found in the thanks of the republic they died to save. I pray that our Heavenly Father may assuage the anguish of your bereavement, and leave you only the cherished memory of the loved and lost, and the solemn pride that must be yours to have laid so costly a sacrifice upon the altar of freedom.

Yours very sincerely and respectfully,
A. Lincoln.

WILLIAM SCOTT

Extremes of Zeal

St. Bernard, St. Francis and Savonarola are said to have injured their health by over-enthusiastic fasting and other ascetic practices, while Martin Luther, after starving himself in the monastery to the point of emaciation, went, after his break with Rome, to the opposite extreme and suffered the consequences of high living. He drank wine, as he put it, "to spite the devil," that is, the devil in the form of monasticism. He meant well, however, for he said: "We ought to do our part, and take care of our bodies; but when we are tempted, abstinence is a hundred times worse than eating and drinking."—Scientific Monthly.

Not for Father

This story of a girl and a pipe is told in a downtown cigar store:

"I wish to buy a pipe," she said to the young woman behind the cigar store counter—"for my father."

She chose a pipe of a type already "broken in" and went away apparently satisfied that her father would like it.

Later on, when a young man had taken the place of the girl behind the counter, the fair customer returned with the pipe.

"What's the matter? Didn't your father like it?" the youth queried.

"I didn't get it for my father," she replied. "And I like it well enough, but the darned thing won't draw."—Pittsburgh Post.

The DAIRY

STUDY MADE ON COSTS OF MILK

Additional facts on what it costs farmers to produce milk in the large milk-producing centers of Illinois have been obtained by the college of agriculture, University of Illinois in Washington, Clinton and Madison counties where 13 farmers, most of whom were producing fluid milk for St. Louis last year, made 10 cents above all expenses on every 100 pounds of milk produced.

These farmers kept 145 cows which cost them an average of $142 a cow and produced $150 worth of products during the year, according to Karl T. Wright of the college farm organization and management department, who summarized the records which the farmers kept in co-operation with the institution. These 145 cows produced 974,789 pounds of milk during the year, or an average of 6,723 pounds each, at an average net cost of $1.85 a hundred. Most of these farmers have been keeping a daily record of each cow's production and have disposed of low producers, so it is evident that the average farmer in this territory produced milk at a loss.

The feed cost ranged from 91 cents to $1.67 a hundred pounds of milk produced, while the man labor cost varied from 30 cents to 86 cents when figured at 25 cents an hour. In other words, the feed cost for the year for each cow varied from $67 to $109 and man labor cost from $22 to $47, which shows that there is much room for improvement. While the feed cost a cow was $67 in the one case and $109 in the other, it amounted to 59 cents a hundred for milk produced in the first case and 48 cents in the last. This shows that cheap production comes not so much from low cost a cow as it does from high efficiency of the cow. A farmer can secure low feed and labor cost on each 100 pounds of milk produced only after he has carefully selected efficient high-producing cows, which he cares for as efficiently as possible.

On these 145 cows, feed made up more than 61 per cent of the costs, and man labor nearly 24 per cent. Charges for use of building and equipment, interest on investment in cows, insurance, veterinary and miscellaneous, made up the 15 per cent.

One of these farmers spent 91 hours taking care of each cow, while another spent 276 hours, and furthermore the production of milk was 500 pounds less in the last case. There seems to be very little connection between time spent and the production per cow. It required 156 hours as an average for all the farmers to care for each cow throughout the year.

Since feed and labor made up 85 per cent of all costs, it behooves the farmer to watch these two items closely, as any reduction he can make in them will greatly increase his profit, Wright pointed out. The efficient, high-producing cow is the most important single factor in getting profits.

Prevent Pneumonia

Like lots of other ailments of calves, pneumonia is much easier to prevent than to cure. It is most likely to occur in cold, damp weather. However, it is not so much the result of cold weather as of damp stalls, dirty, wet surroundings and poor ventilation. To prevent this trouble be sure first that the calf has warm, dry quarters with plenty of clean, dry bedding. Clean out the pens and stanchions regularly and above everything else keep them dry. The calves should have plenty of room to exercise.

Full Feed for Cows

When a good dairy cow is fed a full ration of balanced feeds she will use about half of the feed to maintain her body and the other half for producing milk, but when this same cow is fed a three-fourths ration she needs the same amount to maintain her body and can use only one-third of her feed for producing milk. When fed a half ration she needs all her feed to maintain her body. This fact shows the importance of full feeding good cows.

Dairy Notes

One beauty of poultry is that it coordinates so nicely with dairying.

Cool the milk to 50 degrees F. and hold at this temperature as nearly as you can.

It is a mistaken idea to think that legume hay—no matter how good—makes silage unnecessary in the cow's ration. The two are essential.

Apples or apple pomace may be fed to dairy cows as a substitute for corn silage.

Skim milk or buttermilk which comes from creameries that fail to pasteurize thoroughly, is a constant source of danger in spreading the disease to live stock.

In many dairy barns individual drinking fountains are being placed at the stall heads, so that stabled dairy cows can drink as much and as often as they please.

SIMPLE SATIN HAT NOW IN FAVOR; COLOR-TRIM IDEA WINS APPROVAL

NO LONGER is millinery reckoned by seasons. Modern woman scorns the calendar when it comes to buying a new hat. "When the spirit moves," and it moves very often in this day and age, she betakes herself to the milliner of her choice, and asks to see the latest arrivals in headgear. It's at this time of year when winter hints of leaving and spring promises to come, that the "urge" to discard the old for the new becomes insistent. Certain it is that millinery displays are never more enticing than during midseason.

There's a vast range of ideas to choose from for one's "first hat"—the sort which breathes of spring yet is not untimely even if snow still whitens the landscape. We are hearing much of felt with straw ornamentation, also belting ribbon with straw combinations. These and other similar types are in most excellent fashion for midseason. Another mode of interest to the woman of fashion who seeks smart simplicity in her between-seasons chapeau, is the close-fitting satin hat.

Hats for Immediate Wear.

Of stunning style are the satin models in this picture. Clever lines give to these hats "a dash and a go" which no amount of "fuss and furbelows" could accomplish.

No, that is not a feather trim on the satin shape at the top of the group. It is a plume-like effect of black monkey fur.

Close-fitting hats which come down over the ears like an aviator's cap are the newest of the new. The effectiveness of this type is bespoken in the little satin cap to the left in the picture.

Stitching done in silver thread, adds a charming touch to the satin toque to the right in the picture at the top of the column.

Forecast for spring is the return of the African drape, and here you see it in the embroidered satin model below to the left.

Stitching, this time in multi-color and describing deep points, distinguishes the last little hat in this group which also is of satin.

What's new in children's coats? The very latest is two and three-tone effects achieved by inter-working the same fabric in several colors. Not only for children but for grown-ups as well, a styling wherein color complements color is being linked up with thoughts of coats and dresses for spring.

The charming little coat in this picture, which, if you please, bears a Paris label, carries out the new color-trim idea most attractively. For this model, rose-colored wool velours is inset into a foundation of red wool velours. In coats of twill or flannel, the tendency is to exploit fabric effects in an ornamental way. For instance, a coat of navy charmeen has a long tuxedo collar and cuffs of lighter blue self-fabric, scalloped along the edges.

Many and novel are the developments along the line of thought of fabric effects for trimming. One sunning spring coat is bordered all around, also collared and cuffed with a banding composed of three strips of the broadcloth, each of a different color. There is a clever pocket also in this tri-color compose.

Sometimes fabric incrustations are applied in the form of scalloped side panels with a deep scalloped yoke to match. A pretty navy coat interprets color contrast in that it is slashed here and there so as to reveal a lining of bright red.

When facings, bandings and insets are not of a contrasted or blended solid coloring then they are apt to be of bright plaid, for gay plaidings are forespoken as very popular for spring juvenile cloaking. Plaid taffeta used as trimming is one of the popular themes for spring. A coat of suede like cloth with collar, cuffs and pocket taffeta-lined is charming for the little tot.

Juvenile Coat From Paris.

In harmony with color exploitation are smart ombre novelty woolen materials. These are often made in straightline with narrow belts of leather and there is apt to be a collar and pocket of calfskin. Quite a sophisticated styling, to be sure, for youth but then that is as it should be for stylists declare the general tendency in coats is to duplicate grown-up fashions.

POULTRY

GOOD CARE COUNTS WITH HEN FLOCKS

Summarizing a year's reports of 31 Minnesota poultry record flocks in 19 counties, Cora E. Cooke, poultry specialist with the agricultural extension service, University of Minnesota, finds that one location is about as good as another in Minnesota for keeping poultry; that there is no one most profitable breed; that improved feeding more than pays for itself in increased returns; that good housing is essential to good returns, and that Minnesota farm flocks are an asset to the farm business.

Also the records seem to show that increased annual net returns can be expected from a high egg production, a low feed cost, and the selling of poultry and eggs to advantage, especially for breeding purposes.

Six breeds are represented in the 31 flocks. The average number of eggs laid per hen was 128 and the average feed cost per hen for the year was $1.95. The average net return per bird was $2.53. In the ten flocks having the highest production, the actual feed cost was $2.04 per hen as compared with a cost of $1.86 in the ten lowest producing flocks. Figured in terms of a dozen eggs, the high-producing flocks did the best with feed costs amounting to only 15.04 cents per dozen eggs, while it was 25 cents a dozen in the low producing flocks. The average was 18 cents a dozen. In other words, it costs more to produce more eggs, but the increased production brings a greater return.

Rooster Needs Special Feeding and Management

The rooster should have special feeding and management so as to keep up his vigor, vitality, constitution and activity, says H. A. Bittenbender, head of the poultry husbandry department at Iowa State college.

"Care must be taken in the selection of roosters, but even after the proper males have been put into the flock, it is entirely possible to ruin the chances of getting a large number of fertile eggs," says Mr. Bittenbender. "First, have the right proportion of females in the flock. Generally we can use the following guide: For Mediterranean breeds, in the early part of the season, one male to 14 females, and as the season advances increase to 25; for American breeds one male to ten females early in the season and one to 15 later; for Asiatic and English breeds, in most cases it has been found best to use a lesser number of females than of the American breeds."

One good method of managing the rooster is to keep the hens that are not laying in a pen by themselves, and as they come into laying, put them into the breeding pens. In this way it is possible to insure a greater percentage of fertility from the ones that are laying during the earlier part of the season. It is not necessary to have a trap nest in order to do this.

Wintering Turkeys Not a Very Difficult Task

As soon as the turkeys, which have been fed for Christmas holidays, have been marketed the ration which was used during the fattening period, no doubt consisting largely of corn, may be reduced.

A breeding flock should be brought through the winter in good flesh and care should be taken not to have excess fat. Corn is a good winter food but it is not considered best to make more than one-third of ration corn. A mixture of corn, wheat and oats in equal parts will serve as the main part of the ration.

As long as it is possible for the turkeys to range through the woods and over the field one feeding a day is sufficient. When the fields become covered with snow it may be necessary to increase the grain feeding. Green food is very essential and can be supplied in the form of carrots, turnips, cabbage, beets, etc. Meat scraps, sour milk, fresh ground bone and oyster shell will supply food which is very essential.

Take care of the flock this winter, and next year you will be rewarded for your efforts and work.

Have Plenty of Nests

Every poultry house should be equipped with plenty of nests so that each hen may have an opportunity to have the sole use of a nest when she wants to lay. One nest for each two hens is not too many, but two to five hens will do pretty well. Nests should be about 12 inches by 14 inches, and at least 12 inches deep. The opening should be about 8 inches wide and 9 inches deep. This will allow for enough straw in the bottom to make a soft nest.

White Orpington Breed

The White Orpington is one of the large breeds of chickens. The males should weigh 10 pounds and the adult hens around 8 pounds. They are fairly good layers the first year and lay a good-sized brown egg. Of course, the laying is more a matter of feed, care and breeding than it is of the breed. They are good mothers. Hens after their first laying year are likely to be broody a great deal and do not lay as well. For this reason pullets are favored for laying.

Salts Fine for Aching Kidneys

When Back Hurts Flush Your Kidneys as You Clean Your Bowels

Most folks forget that the kidneys, like the bowels, sometimes get sluggish and clogged and need a flushing occasionally, else we have backache and dull misery in the kidney region, severe headaches, rheumatic twinges, torpid liver, acid stomach, sleeplessness and all sorts of bladder disorders.

You simply must keep your kidneys active and clean and the moment you feel an ache or pain in the kidney region begin drinking lots of water. Also get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any good drug store here, take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and is intended to flush clogged kidneys and help stimulate them to activity. It also helps neutralize the acids in the urine so they no longer irritate, thus helping to relieve bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is inexpensive; makes a delightful effervescent lithia water drink which everybody should take now and then to help keep their kidneys clean.

A well-known local druggist says he sells lots of Jad Salts to folks who believe in trying to correct kidney trouble while it is only trouble.

Phrase Long in Use

The meaning of the phrase, "Blood is thicker than water," is "Kinship is stronger than friendship, for water evaporates but blood does not." Evansville Engineer Rescued by Tanlac

Victim of Liver Trouble, Nervous Indigestion, Loss of Sleep, Rheumatism and Run-down Condition, Finds Long-sought Relief

Michael Heim, 200 Oakley Street, Evansville, Indiana, an engineer, says: "Telegraphic rheumatism, bad stomach and liver trouble had me in terrible shape.

"My strength had vanished. When I walked dizzy spells made me reel. And my stomach was so upset that I couldn't eat without bloating up and suffering from tormenting indigestion. Rheumatic pains in arms and legs made it difficult for me to get about. I had almost given up hope of ever recovering my lost health and strength when I took the advice of a friend and began taking Tanlac. I recommend it to all who are ailing.

"This tonic worked wonders with me. Pain vanished with rheumatism. Quickly my old strength returned. I began to have a great appetite and ate everything without a sign of pain. Tanlac certainly put me on my feet, made me stronger and gave me better health that I have had in years."

Tanlac usually banishes pain, conquers ailments and builds up strength in famished bodies. It relieves the system of poison caused by constipation and sluggish liver. It is Nature's own remedy made from roots, barks and herbs according to the famous Tanlac formula.

Banish sickness from your life and enjoy the benefits of strength and golden health. Begin taking Tanlac. The first bottle brings results that will surprise you. Ask your druggist for Tanlac—today! Over 40 million bottles sold.

"The Child's First School is the Family"—Froebel
Issued by the National Kindergarten Association

DO YOU ENCOURAG E YOUR CHILDREN?

Mrs. Nestor Noel

"You'll never mend that wagon," said a mother to her twelve-year-old son. He was trying to repair his sister's toy wagon.

"Why not?" asked the boy.

"It's too difficult," replied the mother. "Father will do it when he comes home."

"I'll do it myself," answered the boy. "I promised Doris I would, and I'm going to do it."

The boy was certainly made of the right stuff. It was not long before he brought the wagon to his little sister, "repaired as well as Father could have done it." This showed unusual persistency, in the face of opposition. Many a boy would have given up—not because the task was hard but because his mother had said it was hard.

We mothers have a grave responsibility. If we put doubt into our children's hearts, how can we expect them to succeed?

"You cannot do it," says a mother, and generally the child leaves it alone.

"You can do it." says another mother, and straightway renewed ardor comes to the child, and he does it.

We ought to know, by our own feelings, that when a person says we cannot do a thing, we do not feel inclined to continue trying. Children are even more sensitive than we.

Many a man owes his success in life to his mother's early encouragement. A child generally has implicit belief in his mother, therefore when she says he can't he thinks he can't. I believe this is even more true of girls than of boys. Sometimes a boy will stick to his purpose, even when he has to fight for it but a girl does not rough it so much, and as she is under her mother's influence longer, she is more likely to be swayed by her.

I knew a woman who imagined her child was good for nothing simply because she was a girl. She was always lamenting the fact that she had no boys. Of course, the girl never tried to do anything out of the common, so when she was left alone she could only go as a general helper. I often thought the girl was ambitious, but what chance had she against such a mother? Of course, in years to come she may throw off this unfortunate influence of her mother, but think of the years wasted before she does so!

My little girl tries the most extraordinary things, so it seems to me! She shows talent for painting, whereas I cannot draw a straight line! I encourage her in every undertaking. I always tell her that she will succeed, if she keeps on trying. At four and a half she received a prize for painting, and since then she has had other prizes, some for writing stories! She is only twelve years of age and I expect great things from her, because she never gives up once she has undertaken something. I encourage her all I can. I consider it a mother's duty to encourage her children.

After all, when you tell a child she can do things, you are only showing your belief in her. It would be a poor mother who would not believe in her own child.

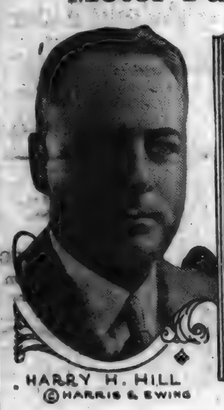
U. S. Authority Sees Ample Motor Fuel for Long Future



HARRY H. HILL

MR HILLS IMPROMPTU SKETCH OF AN OIL DOME

WORKERS IN GAS MASKS AT AN OIL WELL

EXPERIMENTAL OIL SHALE REDUCTION PLANT

The U. S. Bureau of Mines is confident that motor fuel supplies will be ample for many years to meet all needs of the country's millions of automobiles. Harry H. Hill, chief petroleum engineer of the Bureau, here tells the reasons for this conviction, and sketches the advances in industrial methods which justify his opinions.

By HARRY H. HILL
Chief Petroleum Engineer, United States Bureau of Mines.

ONE reason why there is no reason to worry greatly about motor fuel for a long time ahead is that people are worrying about it. Interest in such a question at the right time, is the best insurance against disaster. The President and the Federal Oil Corporation Board have done what was needed, at the right time.

We know that most petroleum has come from rather limited areas and that even from these only a small proportion has been taken out. Oil produced by gas pressure capable of lifting it to the surface when we drill holes is but a small proportion of all the oil contained in the sands. Even from the best pools recovery by the old methods is small, perhaps one-half in the most favorable conditions, oftener one-sixth, or one-seventh, or one-tenth. But a considerable part of what still remains in the ground can be recovered by methods now established as technically and economically practicable.

Producing oil from coal and shales and by mining the oil bearing sands is entirely possible. Experiments are going on in these directions, and if we ever have to fall back on these resources we will be ready. For a long time, however, the present methods of exploration and drilling, with improving processes to assure larger recoveries, are likely to suffice.

An Oil Dome Illustrated

I am no draughtsman, but maybe I can draw something that will help explain. Here's a rough drawing of an oil dome. The shaded part at the bottom is a deposit of oil bearing sands—with an impervious rock stratum above. A wild-catter drilled the hole A-B and gas pressure caused oil and gas to flow. After a while the gas pressure wasn't sufficient to keep up the flow and they pumped until ultimately even this ceased producing.

Nevertheless, most of the oil was still left sticking to the sand grains. Then the operator drilled the well C-D, which flowed for a time, but most of the oil was still down there in the sand. If the gas pressure could be restored more would flow. So the operator injects gas into one well, restoring the pressure and causing the oil to resume flowing from the other. After a time the flow will stop again, but still much of the oil will be left. In some fields it has been possible to obtain additional amounts of oil by introducing water in some of the wells and forcing the oil to others. The addition of a chemical such as soda ash to the water may assist in removing the oil from the sand grains, but neither plain water nor water containing chemicals should be introduced into an oil sand except as a last resort, for it is likely that the water, which travels faster through the sand, will get to the open wells ahead of the oil and when the flow is resumed under pressure water will come out.

Everything Saved Nowadays

The gas escaping from an oil well carries with it a proportion of gasoline, which in the old days was lost. Nowadays it is extracted from the gas and saved, while the dry gas can be forced back into the ground to maintain pressure.

One of the mishaps to most oil pools is the inflow of subterranean water. Water flows through the oil sands faster than oil, and by surrounding the bottom of the well keeps the oil out. How to shut off the water and permit the oil to run out is a problem with which the engineers have long worked. They have made great progress and so increased recoveries.

In earlier times most oil producers carefully guarded all information about their wells and experiences, but latterly there is co-operation in these matters. Geologists and petroleum engineers, once derided by the "practical" oil men, are more and more accepted as guides and mentors. New knowledge is constantly increasing recoveries.

As to Mining for Oil

In Lorraine they have dug shafts down to the oil sands and actually brought the sands out, like coal from a mine. But it's costly.

Another mining process is to sink a shaft to the oil sands and from its bottom drive tunnels in all directions through the sands. From these tunnels small perforated pipes are driven into the sands, which drain the oil out of the sands. It flows to larger pipes back at the foot of the shaft and thence is pumped out. This requires installing an expensive plant, but in some fields the high recovery that is assured might justify the cost. I understand the process is about to be installed in a few fields in this country, some companies being convinced it is practicable and profitable.

Oil can be distilled from coal, and much work is now being done along this line. But more appeal has been made by the plan of extracting oil from shale. The shales of Scotland have been worked for three-quarters of a century, and they are almost unlimited in this country, richer in oil than those of Scotland. Kentucky, Ohio, Colorado, Utah, Nevada, Wyoming and California are particularly rich in shales. It is just a question of the cost of extracting the oil. Congress has given $180,000, with which the Bureau has installed a plant near Rulison, Colorado, to distill oil from the Colorado River Shales. It is calculated that the shales mined at Rulison will produce about a barrel of oil to the ton.

The Use of Oil Shales

In Scotland they are working shales that produce about twenty-five gallons of oil per ton. The seams are from three-and-a-half to eight or ten feet thick. In Colorado are seams many times as thick and containing much more oil per ton. Reduction of shales involves an enormous mining operation, and after the oil is extracted the vast tonnage of refuse must be disposed of. So it is expensive compared with producing oil from wells.

Ben E. Lindsey of the Bureau of Mines Experiment Station at Bartlesville, Okla., is confident that exploration, better recoveries, better utilization and deeper drilling would furnish enough oil to meet all requirements for at least twenty-five to fifty years, if it could be extracted in that time. But as a practical matter this will not be possible. Within that period there will be times of shortage, when oil from shales will be needed to supplement the oil from wells, etc.

Meantime federal and state governments and the industry are co-operating in an astonishing range of investigations and studies. These activities cover such a wide field that even an enumeration of them would run into tiresome detail.

THE KENTUCKY MINSTRELS

The next important event on the entertainment calendar is the "OLD KENTUCKY MINSTRELS" promoted by the St. Joe Choral Society and will be on the boards Saturday, Feebruary 12th.

The Choral Society does not feel that they are lowering the dignity of their organization in presenting this show. From start to finish, it is clean, wholesome fun. It includes all the "Trimmins" of the up to date minstrel—fun, frolic and frivolity, jokes, songs and comic sketches—catchy interims, an uproarious farce comedy, "Mrs. Black's Pink Tea" by a cast of colored ladies and concludes with a concert of southern melodies and plantation songs by the entire company.

FRANKLIN HART LEFT AN ESTATE VALUED AT $2,250

Upon petition of John Franklin Hart, William Curie of St. Joe, has been appointed by County Clerk J. Harvey Knauer as administrator of the estate of the late Franklin P. Hart, who died at St. Joe February 10.

The estate consists of $250 in personal property and $2,000 in real estate. The heirs are eight children, Bertha May Nivers of Minneapolis, John Franklin Hart of St. Joe, Eva Hathaway and Roscoe Hart of South Bend, Hattie Bills of Elkhart, Elmer Hart of Grenville, O., Della Dolph of Hollywood, Calif., and Inez Daub of Hicksville.

Mr. Curie filed $500 bond, with A. Culbertson and John Franklin Hart as sureties.

The notice of appointment appears elsewhere in this paper.

STOP BORROWING THE PAPER!

Why do so many people borrow? Especially those who are able to not do so. But they do. We know and have known of a number of people who take advantage of their neighbors and are always borrowing. It may be an excuse for them to call and see if their neighbors have their housework done, or see what they intend to have for dinner, but they borrow just the same. But the biggest borrower is the one, well able themselves to be always sponging and borrowing their neighbors paper. That is why we take the matter up and call our readers attention to Borrowers.

If the paper is good enough to read, why not send us your name and let us mail it to you, but don't borrow.

LIFE HISTORY OF MRS. M. T. BISHOP

Sarah Emily Ayers, daughter of William and Suzan Ayers, was born in Van Wert County, Ohio, May 27, 1852 and passed away at her daughter's home, Mrs. Henry Hathaway, Auburn, Indiana, on February 8, 1927 at 4 A. M.

Her decease followed an illness of only a few hours.

She was 74 years, 8 monhs and 11 days of age.

On January 7, 1875 she was united in marriage to Melvin T. Bishop, by the late Rev. Ward, pastor of the Baptist Church of Auburn, Indiana.

To this union were born five children, Retta Hathaway, Chas. H., Frank H., Katharine, and a child dying in infancy.

In early life she became a member of the Baptist Church at Loudenville, Ohio. After moving to St. Joe, she together with her husband, united with the St. Mark's Evangelical Lutheran Church in the year of 1878. Her life has been one of service to her Lord and Master, her home, her church and her friends.

She leaves to mourn their loss a devout husband, one daughter, Retta Hathaway of Auburn, Ind., one son, Charles H. Bishop of Cleveland, Ohio, four grand children and a host of friends who will miss her.

The funeral services were conducted by the Rev. A. K. Mumma, of Harlan, Ind., Thursday afternoon, from the Lutheran Church. Elza Kinsey officiating undertaker. Burial at St. Joe cemetery.

Those attending the funeral from a distance were: Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Bishop, daughter, Kathryn and son, Frank of Cleveland, Ohio, Mr. and Mrs. H. C. Hathaway of Auburn, Ind., Clayton Hathaway of Indianapolis, and Russell Hathaway of Cleveland and Mrs. J. R. Bishop of Bluffton, Indiana.

Mrs. Alice Zimmerman, Mrs. Z. T. Kagey, George Kagey, Charles Kagey, Mr. and Mrs. E. M. Bishop, Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Bishop, Mrs. B. Beidler, S. Johnson, Mr. and Mrs. J. Milliman, Mr. and Mrs. H. L. Brown, Mrs. Henry Osbun, Mr. and Mrs. Mahlon Baker, and Mr. and Mrs. John Miser, all of Auburn.

Mrs. Nettie P. Baker and Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Patterson of Fort Wayne, Mrs. F. H. Langley and Mrs. Maud Mahoney of Defiance, Ohio, Mrs. J. A. Greenwald and Mattie Ayers of Loudenville, Ohio, Mrs. Geo. Daup, Mansfield, Ohio and Mr. and Mrs. Will Olds of LaGrange, Indiana.

CARD OF THANKS

We express our appreciation to our St. Joe friends for their kindness shown in our bereavement.

PLANNING FOR SILVER MEDAL CONTEST

The local W. C. T. U. is sponsoring a Silver Medal Contest to be held probably in March. Pupils of the 6th and 7th grades may enter. The declamations must be selected from the W. C. T. U. Reciters, only. These are available to those interested and are of a high character. These contests are of inestimable value to the contestant and are of great good to those who "listen in."

Disinterested persons will act as judges and will grade on the following points: voice, articulation, gesture, memory and general effect. The winner in this contest may later compete with other winning contestants in the County in a Gold Medal contest.

LOOSES A VALUABLE DRAFT MARE

O. E. Ginther had to part with one of his sorrels, as the result of lockjaw, caused from injuries received on foot by stepping on a broken buckle on the cement floor. After treatment of a week he thought the mare to be alright but Monday morning she took worse and Dr. Baumgartner was called and reported that lockjaw had developed and there was no cure.

This breaks a sorrel span valued at $500.00 and they were indeed a beautiful pair. They feel the loss very keenly just starting to farming a year ago.

MINSTREL SHOW HAD CAPACITY HOUSE

Almost a capacity house greeted the St. Joe Choral Society's "Old Kentucky Minstrel" show on last Saturday night. This again proves Concord Township citizens are alive to the best interests of the community, when a worthy cause is to be carried through.

When we take into consideration the numerous programs that have been given in our vicinity, that make demands upon the time and pocket books of our citizens, the attendance of this program speaks volumes for the loyalty of our people. Those who gave their time gratuitously to make this show a success, are to be congratulated for the generosity of motive which prompted the sacrifice as well as the creditable manner in which it was rendered.

The costuming was fine, and, in spots, showed an almost professional style. The closing act was a medley of old southern airs by entire cast and was a credit to the untiring efforts of Mr. C. A. Woodcox, who has done much to raise the musical standard of this community.

The proceeds of this entertainment, amounted to $115.00, this will be applied toward payment of opera chairs, with which the auditorium is seated.

After the program a potluck supper was enjoyed by the members and friends of the society.

Parent-Teacher Association

The last meeting of the Parent Teacher Association was attended by a large crowd of people and all the numbers of the program were excellent and received hearty applause. The music of the orchestra ensemble is worthy of special mention.

It is the opinion of many people that the address given by Dr. Stone, from Baltimore, Md., was the best address ever given in St. Joe. His subject was child welfare and he was thoroughly informed on all of the ideals of Parent-Teacher work. His deepest thoughts were given in a language so plain that even children could comprehend. He was also a character impersonator and entertained the people so well that they regretted seeing him leave the stage after talking almost an hour.

The secretary reported the present membership is 131.

Mrs. H. M. Widney, chairman of the Hot Lunch Committee, reported that the lunch is making good progress and financing itself. She urged that, all children take advantage of the opportunity to have warm lunch at the noon hour. She also stated that the committee would be glad to receive donations of edibles to help keep up this good work.

If any one doubts that there is strength in unity let them be convinced by attending the fine meetings held each month by our P.-T. A.

OBITUARY

Franklin Pierce Hart was born December 20, 1852 and died February 10, 1927, being 74 years, 1 month and 21 days old.

He was united in marriage to Minerva Sweet, May 6, 1875. She passed away November 26, 1928. To this union were born eight children, they are, Berthaa M., living in Minneapolis, John F. of St. Joe, Eva of South Bend, Hattie of Elkhart, Della of Los Angeles, Elmer W. living in Grenfield, Ohio, Roscoe D. of South Bend and Inez L. of Hicksville.

Also there are twenty-three grandchildrn and five great grand children surviving.

Mr. Mart had been active in his profession as house mover up to the last year and was well known over the north-eastern part of the state, due to his many years in this business.

He was a member of the St. Joe Christian Church.

Taking sick about twelve weeks ago he gradually wasted away until death claimed him Thursday morning, February 10th.

Funeral was held from the home of John Hart Saturday afternoon, Rev. C. H. Havens of Muncie, officiating. E. R. Kinsey, funeral director. Burial at Spencerville.

VOCATIONAL TEACHERS PLAN CLUB WORK

The Vocational Agricultural Teachers met in County Agent Stinson's office on Wednesday evening, February 9th., to discuss Pig Club plans for 1927. The following Vocational Teachers were present at the meeeting: R. L. Case, St. Joe; A. J. Smith, Spencerville; Clarence Gfeller, Ashley; O. V. Winks, Waterloo and C. G. Hornaday, Auburn.

The Pig Club will be organized on a County-wide basis and a meeting will be held in the Assembly Room of the Court House at Auburn, an Thursday evening March 10th. A suitable program is being arranged for this meeting and at this time it is hoped that practically all the Pig Club members and their fathers, breeders of various breeds and all ton litter members will be present. The boys who have signed up for Pig Club work will decide themselves what breeds of hogs will be used in Pig Club work this year. It is hoped that the boys will decide on about three main breeds and have a very heavy enrollment in these three classes. Anyone who is interested in swine production will be welcome at the meeting on March 10th.

Seed corn testing will again be done by the Vocational Departments in the seven vocational departments in the county. The Vocational Teachers recommend that each farmer number the ears of corn and draw six kernels from each ear and place them in numbered envelopes to corrspond with the ear and bring the envelope to the Vocational Department for testing. For further information along this line, consult R. L. Case or A. J. Smith.

A Good Man To Know

IN every town and in every line of retail business you are pretty sure to find at least one merchant who chooses his lines of merchandise on strict quality standards. He believes in giving unusual value to his customers for every penny they spend with him.

This merchant may not always have the cheapest goods. But he is pretty sure to have the leading lines—those with service records that prove their sterling quality. This merchant is always on the lookout for the kind of goods that give greater satisfaction, last longer, and prove cheapest in the long run.

In placing our line of Red Top Steel Fence Posts we try to select this kind of dealer. Usually he's looking for us too. We know that such dealers will naturally attract buyers who believe in quality merchandise and thus do a bigger business for themselves and for us.

When we say that your local Red Top Steel Post dealer is a good man for you to know it's only another way of pointing out the merchant who is prepared to give greater value in fence posts and undoubtedly in other lines too.

EGYPT WANTS HER

This bust of the Egyptian Queen Nefert, taken from an excavation at Tel-el-Amarna by Doctor Burchardt, noted German archeologist, and now in the Berlin museum, is the subject of diplomatic correspondence. The Egyptian government, it is reported, has refused to allow Doctor Burchardt to resume excavations because he smuggled the bust out, and until its return he will continue to be barred. It will be remembered that the bust was not exposed in the museum until after the signing of the Versailles treaty, to insure its retention in Germany.

"UPSIDE DOWN" CAKE IS NOVEL

New Confection Is Well Worth Trying.

Is there nothing new under the sun? Perhaps "upside down" cake has no new material in it—just flour, eggs, butter, sugar, milk, baking powder, and flavoring, such as you would put into other kinds of cake—and apples, which you use in many desserts—but the way you put this cake into the pan, and the way you take it out for serving, makes it an entirely novel dessert for most people. The United States Department of Agriculture gives us the following directions for making it:

"Upside Down" Apple Cake.

¼ cupful butter.	2 teaspoonfuls baking powder.
½ cupful sugar.	½ teaspoonful salt.
1 egg.	1 teaspoonful vanilla.
½ cupful milk.	2 to 4 apples, depending on size.
1½ cupfuls soft wheat (pastry) flour.

Cream the butter, add the sugar, the well-beaten egg, and the vanilla. Sift the dry ingredients together twice and add alternately with the milk to the first mixture. Use a glass square or oblong baking dish or a very heavy pan. Put a thick coating of butter on the bottom and sides of the dish or pan. Wash, pare, and quarter firm-fleshed apples, slice them rather thin, and place them so that the slices overlap and form even layers, covering the bottom of the dish. Sprinkle well with sugar and cinnamon which have been well mixed. Add another layer of apples placed with equal care and flavor with cinnamon and sugar. Pour the cake mixture over the apples. The batter is rather thick and may need to be smoothed off on top with a knife. Bake slowly in a very moderate oven (300 to 325 degrees Fahrenheit) for three-quarters of an hour. Loosen the sides of the cake, turning it out carefully, upside down, and the top will be covered with neat layers of transparent apples. Serve hot with hard sauce or whipped cream.

Consumption of Alcohol Reduced by Using Oils

Alcohol has, heretofore, always been used in making flavoring extracts. In an effort to reduce consumption of alcohol, manufacturers of flavors have been using highly refined, deodorized mineral oils and pure vegetable oils, such as cottonseed oil, corn oil and peanut oil which readily dissolve essential oils such as orange, lemon, lime, anise, peppermint, in place of alcohol. Besides these oil flavors, gum arabic and gum tragacanth are used to emulsify essential oils with water or dilute glycerol as a basis. All of the above material are suitable for use in food if free from harmful impurities. The bureau of chemistry of the United States Department of Agriculture, has taken the position that no substitute for alcohol should be employed in flavors and other food until adequate research has shown that it is absolutely harmless.

Candied Citron

Candied citron used in fruit cake is the fruit of a citrus tree resembling a large, coarse lemon, with very thick rind and a small amount of pulp. The pulp is discarded in preparing the candied peel. The tree can be grown only in warm climates.

Boston Brown Bread Is Enjoyed for a Change

The family enjoys a change in the kind of bread served from day to day. There are many good reasons for having a variety in respect to the "staff of life," not the least of which is introduction of new flavors occasionally and bread that looks different from yesterday's bread. Boston brown bread, which is steamed and made from corn meal, rye meal and graham flour, not only looks and tastes different but is made of flours that are less often used than white flour.

To make it you will need the following ingredients:

1 cupful corn meal	1 cupful rye meal
1 cupful graham flour	2½ teaspoonfuls soda
4 teaspoonfuls baking powder	1 teaspoonful of salt
¾ cupful molasses	2 cupfuls of sour milk
1¾ cupfuls sweet milk

Mix and sift the dry ingredients and add the molasses and milk. Beat thoroughly and steam 3½ hours in well-buttered covered molds. One-pound baking powder tins make very satisfactory molds. Remove the covers and bake the bread long enough to dry the top. This may be made also with 1½ cupfuls each of corn meal and rye meal and no graham flour. A cupful of seeded and shredded raisins or prunes or a cupful of Zante currants may be added.

Apple Snow or Float Is Prepared in Short Time

Here's a dessert that can be prepared in five minutes if you have some canned or left-over applesauce. If you have none it will only take as much longer to make as it takes to make the sauce.

Allow two egg whites to each cupful of strained apple sauce. To serve a family of five you will probably need at least two cupfuls of apple sauce and four egg whites. The sauce may be made from fresh, canned or dried apples, but in any case it must be thick, not watery, when it is strained and ready to combine with the egg whites. Sweeten the sauce to taste after it is strained and while it is still hot. Then while it is cooling beat the egg whites until they are stiff and fluffy and fold the apple sauce gradually into the beaten whites. Add a pinch of salt and two or three teaspoonfuls of lemon juice, pile lightly into a pudding dish, sprinkle grated nutmeg or cinnamon over the top, and set the apple snow, or float, away in a cool place until time to serve. If you like, make a soft custard with the yolks of the eggs to serve with the apple snow, or float.

Vitamine Content of Milk

The vitamine content of milk depends largely on the vitamins content of the ration of the cow. Milk richest in vitamines is obtained from cows that have plenty of green feed and sunlight. Cows kept in their stalls and fed largely on dry feeds and cured hay produce milk that is relatively low in vitamines.

Pasteurize Cream and Milk

Milk and cream for ordinary use or milk for babies may be successfully pasteurized at home. The process is not difficult and requires only simple equipment. Farmers' Bulletin 1359 entitled "Milk and Its Uses in the Home" gives a full description of the method of equipment.

DAINTY CURTAINS FOR A GIRL'S BEDROOM

Charming Idea for Curtaining a Window.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Here is a charming idea for curtaining a window in a girl's bedroom, suggested by the United States Department of Agriculture. Girls are apt to want their rooms daintier and lighter in treatment than boys, although the character of the room depends somewhat on the girl's interests. A hearty out-of-doors sort of girl who enjoys the same things as her brother may want strong colors, straight lines, vigorous patterns, and durable materials. But for the girl who likes daintiness, nothing could be more appealing than these ruffled tie-back curtains of cream voile over a glazed chintz shade in a gay pattern.

Other good materials to use for curtains in a girl's room with a figured shade are organdie, marquisette, or net. With plain shade, dotted swiss, or cheesecloth dyed in a color harmonizing with the other furnishings of the room, would be good. If the woodwork is white, curtains may be white, or they may repeat the dominant color in the room. Curtains of these materials may be used alone, or with valance and side draperies of cretonne, taffeta, poplin, or glazed chintz. Interesting variations are obtained by hanging two layers of organdie or voile or different color over each other. Big wooden beads strung on colored cords are effective in place of material for tie-backs.

"With every drop of blood in him; with every fiber of his manhood!"

"Where did he first see me?"

"He saw you in London one night, at the Savoy restaurant. The following afternoon you went aboard the same ship."

"I knew it! I knew that I had seen him somewhere. He didn't know who I was?"

"Not at that time."

"Just saw me!"—in wonder.

"Just that. He went to your father the next morning and asked if he might pay court to you. Your father looked upon the affair as a great joke, not being able to gauge sonny. He made a sardonic proposal, and sonny accepted it. He was to come to Bannister and make a name for himself. The newspaper presently became an obligation; and recognizing that, he saw that he must give you up."

"I understand. I searched the crowds for him. I studied every new face I saw, strained my ears for some sign. And even now, but for Nancy, I'd never have known!"

"I tried to make you love me." There was a pause. "The name of Digby Hallowell will mean nothing to you; but your father would recall it. My husband was a thief, Betty, and he died in prison. A thief—the most unforgivable kind."

"And shall my father sit in judgment on sonny's?" asked Betty quietly. "But go on."

"I was born in the South; but at the age of ten I was taken to Europe by an aunt who saw that there was music in me; that I possessed interpretative genius. My parents were dead. I studied in Paris, Berlin, Leipsic, Vienna. All the masters said that I had a brilliant future. When my aunt died, the annuity which supported us ceased automatically, but most of the beautiful things you see in this room fell to me. I had enough for the necessaries of life, and a little amusement besides.

"Somehow I had lost America. I was in the Volksgarten in Vienna one afternoon when a very handsome man in the early thirties sat down in a chair near me. Some children were playing near by. One of them stumbled and fell, and the stranger sprang to its assistance, brushing the bruised knees. 'Poor little codger!' he said in English; and at once I knew that he was an American. I was alone in the world, eighteen, and bubbling with romance. I met him again and again.

"Oh, I loved him. He was charming. He was mad about children; he was genuinely fond of music, painting, books. And his love for me was one great, honest thing in his life. It wouldn't have been so hard otherwise.

"We were married," continued Mrs. Cathewe. "Sonny came. There followed four wonderful summers. Digby would arrive in May and go back in October. The crash came the fourth winter. He was arrested for selling bogus oil and mining stock. He caught pneumonia in prison and died before I could get to him."

Betty reached blindly for the speaker's hand, found it, and pressed it strongly.

"Years passed. When he was twenty I told sonny the story. I told him what his name was, for we were then using the name of Cathewe. I added that if he so willed, he could live all his days in luxury, have all his whims gratified. He replied that he wouldn't use tainted money, and thereupon gave the money to a banker with a plan to disburse it to the poor. Eventually he became a reporter on one of the great newspapers, and discovered that he could write. A month each summer he spent with me; he was at work on his second novel when he saw you."

Understanding.

The telephone bussed in Cathewe's office.

"Hello!" he called, rather grateful for the diversion.

"This is the city hospital. Mr. Mansfield wants to see you immediately. He instructed me to emphasize the importance of this interview."

"Tell him I shall be up as soon as I can get a taxi around."

At the hospital Mansfield greeted Brandon tersely and grunted an order. "In my coat at the foot of the bed is a long envelope. Open it."

One glance confirmed Cathew's suspicions. The envelope contained the complete history of the trial and conviction of Digby Hallowell.

"Well?" he said calmly.

"Ready to admit that I hold you in the hollow of my hand?"

"No."

Cathewe tapped the envelope. "Do you call this fair?"

"You're an odd young man! You came here originally because you thought you loved my daughter. What was the main idea, anyhow?"

"You mean, regarding the money my father left? To give it back to the poor. To make the newspaper a bulwark between your kind and mine. To build a great hospital, endowed, to which the poor from the ends of the world might come and find aid without cost. A great free dispensary where the unfortunate woman might also find succor and not be callously sent back to the gutter with her baby. The newspaper to doctor their minds and the hospitals to doctor their bodies. To rebuild their faith in humanity; to make American citizens out of them. Shall I put this envelope back in your coat?"

"No. She sat there in that chair all night, holding my hand. Toward morning she slept. I was in a good deal of pain. It was very still. I fell to thinking. Instead of counting sheep jumping over the fence, I looked myself over, from your point of view, from her point of view, if it should happen she learns the truth. I did not summon you to threaten you. Still, I had to test you. Your chin is still up, and that's the sign I needed. I don't want that envelope. Destroy the stuff. Make Bannister your home; build your free dispensary. What I really wanted was to have you take my hand."

"To shake hands!" cried Cathewe, figuratively swept off his feet.

"Why not? I needed a licking and you were the only man in the world who had the courage to attempt it. I'm no fool. I know men. I want to be the friend of a man who, in these hard, matter-of-fact days, has the courage to walk where angels fear to tread. A smile accompanies that, but it's not visible to you on account of these bandages. A curious idea thrust me into that shack last night. Oh, yes; I saw the poor little tikes, and was glad to save them. But that isn't it. I fought you because I was afraid of you. You were a menacing wedge between me and my daughter. On the day she learned the truth I might lose her. Nothing else matters now but her love. She is extremely imaginative. A deed like last night's would appeal to her. She would always have that moment to throw into the scales. She has opened all the doors of my mind and my heart; I can see and feel. Yesterday I would not have understood you; today I do. There's another secret in that envelope. You overlooked it. You are Cottar, the novelist. But I am offering my hand, to the son of Digby Hallowell. Will you take it?"

The strength of the hand that closed over his caused a flash of stinging pain. The wince had puckered the burns.

"You understand?"

"Yes. She has made all these things possible."

"That makes our understanding perfect. Her beauty is the least of her. Do you remember you said that? You saw in a glance what it took me three years to find out. You and I are going to make Bannister a perfect city. But I must do my share in my own fashion. I simply can't have her know; at least until I have made substantial progress. You shall have your paper back, of course. I am growing tired. Just a little more. You could have come to me and demanded I fulfill my end of that mad bargain. You were honest, and you declined. Your whimsicality is on the surface; underneath you are unchangeable. So it occurs to me that if you gave up Betty it was not that you had ceased to care. Am I right?"

"Yes."

"As a man cares but once?"

"But once."

"Then—go and find her."

"You mean that?"

"Why not? You are the son of Digby Hallowell, but she is the daughter of Dunleigh Mansfield. Between these two fathers where's the choice? I merely stayed within the law and your father played the game outside. I threw away all the glorious hours that are before you. I sent Betty to France because I didn't care to be bothered with her. Find her, and when you find her tell her I sent you. And then—both of you—come back here!"

Cathewe's taxi went up Polygon hill after the manner of the tank, slowly, ponderously and heartrendingly. Street cars got in the way, other taxis, lumber and coal wagons and pedestrians. Eventually he reached the Mansfield place.

The butler, upon opening the door, eyed him with repellent loyalty.

"Miss Mansfield is not at home, sir"; and suggestively started the door toward the latch.

"Just a moment. I am sent by Mr. Mansfield himself. He wishes me to find his daughter."

"I do not know where she went, sir. It is probable that she is with Miss Maddox."

"May I use the telephone?"

Reluctantly the butler ushered the enemy into the study and indicated the telephone.

The Maddox maid replied to the first call. No; Miss Mansfield had gone across to the Cathewes'. The second call was not answered, though he kept central busy for two or three minutes. Vaguely alarmed, he returned to the taxi. In the end he found himself in his own hallway, breathless with the chase.

Music. She had come to hear his mother play. This accounted for the unanswered telephone call.

CHAPTER XII

Love's Victory.

He opened the door of the living room and stood on the threshold. Never before had he heard his mother play the "Fourth Ballade" with such fire and passion.

And the girl there, seated on the floor, her exquisite profile, against the dark wine of the rosewood; as beautifully defined as a cameo! Her eyes were closed in dreamy ecstasy.

Here, after what had taken place last night! There could be only one meaning: that she knew everything, Maddox! She had sent for the doctor and in some manner had forced the truth from him. On top of this came the recollection of the cub reporter's confession of having sent Betty a complete series of clippings. She had confronted Maddox with them, and the old fellow had told her the truth. And somehow he must prevail upon her never to let her father know. Here!—because she knew also that he was the author of those letters! Hadn't she come from Nancy's? Out of that abysmal gloom of two hours gone, his miraculous sunshine!

The performer dropped her hands. The piano was still singing as she turned her head.

"Sonny!"

Betty opened her eyes, and slowly rose to her feet, numb with an inexplicable terror, not unlike that which childhood finds in dark rooms. What had happened? This: it was the first time she had ever seen the man who had written those wonderful letters—the exquisite poems to the idyl of this hour. She had come boldly into his house in the pursuit of happiness. She saw now the immodesty of the act. The knowledge sent all the blood into her heart, then flung it into her cheeks—burgundy in an alabaster cup. Always he would think that she had sought him. The shame of it!

She stood with her back to the piano, staring. Tableau. Then she reached backward, toward the bench toward the arms she wanted, needed. She was afraid. She turned desperately—to find that she had been betrayed. The bench was vacant. Mrs. Cathewe had stolen quietly from the room.

"I—. She has gone!" Betty stammered.

He crossed the room quickly, but he did not touch her. "There is no doubt in your mind?"

"Doubt of what?"—beginning to recover her poise.

"Of me? That I love you, that I loved you the first time I saw you?"

"Which of you three is talking?"

"Which of— What do you mean?" bewildered.

"Is it Brandon Cathewe, George Cottar, or Brandon Hallowell?"

"All three of us. We all love you. Can you care, just a little?"

"But you gave me up!"

"Only physically. For weeks I've been torn by wild horses."

"I'm glad of that!"—now sure of herself, of him, of all the world.

"Glad that I was unhappy?"

"Wasn't I unhappy, too? Didn't you jilt me?"

"Do you care?"

"Well—perhaps." A pause. "I'm beginning to wonder if you really wrote those letters."

"Why?"

"Well, the writer of those beautiful love letters wouldn't stand as you do just asking questions."

"What would he do?" falling into her mood.

"He would sweep me into his arms, kiss me, put me on his horse and ride away—and ask questions—"

"Afterward!"

When she pressed back from him she was breathless. "And now I'm suspicious."

"Suspicious?"

"You did that—overly well!"

"The wonder of you!"

She crept back into his arms, all her mischief gone. "Love me always like that— And don't be afraid of daddy."

"I'm not," he replied. "Your father has made all this possible. He sent me to you."

"He did? I love him! And he shall never know that I know. To want to do fine and noble things because he has learned to love me!" Another pause. "Is there anything now on Jupiter you want?"

There was only one way to answer that.

EVERYDAY GOOD THINGS

A good, nourishing soup, served with croutons or crackers, makes a good meal in itself.

Bisque of Chicken.—Cook a large chicken with three or four stalks of celery and an onion chopped fine and water to cover. When the meat slips from the bones skim the soup, remove the bones and chop very fine. Return to the heat and add the meat to the soup, thicken with a tablespoonful each of butter and flour cooked together, add a cupful of milk, a pinch of soda, a tablespoonful of minced parsley and a cupful of cracker crumbs. Bring to the boiling point and serve.

Pea Chowder.—Soak overnight one cupful of split peas. In the morning drain, cover with cold water, add a pinch of soda and simmer for three hours. Fry brown, with one onion and a slice of fat pork. Add the drained peas, one can of corn and a cupful of milk. Simmer for half an hour, season with salt, pepper and melted butter, serve very hot with split toasted crackers.

Salmon Salad.—Mix one and one-half cupfuls of flaked salmon with one-half cupful of celery, two tablespoonfuls of chopped green peppers, one small onion chopped, salt and pepper to taste. Peel two tomatoes and cut them into dice and mix with the salad, or cut into quarters and use as a garnish. Arrange on a bed of lettuce and serve with mayonnaise dressing.

Eggless, Butterless, Milkless Cake.—Boil together one cupful each of sugar and water, two cupfuls of raisins, one-eighth of a grated nutmeg, one teaspoonful of cloves, a pinch of salt and one-half cupful of lard. When cool add two cupfuls of flour, one cupful of molasses, one-half teaspoonful of baking powder and one teaspoonful of soda dissolved in a little water. Beat well and bake in a sheet.

Seasonable Foods.

This is the season of the year when we enjoy a mince pie and a plum pudding occasionally.

Mincemeat.—Take four pounds of lean beef, two pounds of suet, finely chop the cooked meat and take double the measure of fresh chopped apples, three quinces or an equal amount of pineapple, four pounds of brown sugar, two quarts of cider, four pounds of seeded raisins, three pounds of currants, one-half pound of citron finely cut, one tablespoonful of mace, the same of cinnamon and clove, two grated nutmegs. Mix all together with the suet finely chopped, season with salt to taste and cook all together for one and one-half hours. Bake with two crusts. This mincemeat if canned hot will keep a year.

Olive Salad.—Line a salad bowl with crisp head of lettuce, cut one boiled beet and one potato into dice, chop one small cucumber and two hard-cooked eggs very fine, stone and chop twenty-four queen olives. Pound to a paste two anchovies, dust with a teaspoonful of salt, pepper to taste, sprinkle lightly with four tablespoonfuls of orange juice. Pour over a French dressing, using four tablespoonfuls of oil to one of vinegar, adding salt, red pepper, onion juice and a pinch of mustard.

Smoked Tongue.—Wash a beef tongue and soak over night. In the morning put to cook in a kettle of cold water, simmer gently for four hours, or until perfectly tender, adding more water if needed. When the tongue is cold remove the skin. Serve as a hot dish on a hot platter with the root-end covered with parsley. What is left may be reheated in any well seasoned sauce or served sliced cold.

Raisin Sandwiches.—Stew raisins in a little orange juice until plump. Put aside to chill. Spread graham crackers with butter and cover with the raisins mixed with a little cream and maple sugar. Cover with another cracker and serve the sandwiches with a cup of tea.

When making lemonade save the lemon cups for various things. Kept in cold water they will keep fresh for several days.

Lesson for February 20

SERVING IN AND THROUGH THE CHURCH.

LESSON TEXT—Matt. 5:13-16; Acts 2:43-47.

GOLDEN TEXT—We are laborers together with God.—I Cor. 3:9.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Praising God in Church.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Serving in the Church.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—The Meaning of Church Membership.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Living and Working Together in the Church.

There is an utter lack of connection between the subject chosen by the lesson committee and the passages of Scripture selected. The first exhibits the responsibilities of the subjects of the Messiah's kingdom, and the second pictures the graces which were upon the members of the primitive church. Definite recognition should be given this in our interpretation of the passages.

I. The Responsibilities of the Subjects of Messiah's Kingdom—(Matt. 5:13-16).

The whole mass of mankind is shown in the Scriptures to be corrupt—the whole world in moral and spiritual darkness. It is the high privilege and solemn responsibility of the subjects of the kingdom to exert a saving and uplifting influence on the world in which they live. They are to live such lives as to purify and enlighten. This can only be done in the measure that they personally know Jesus Christ, the King, and strive to make known His glory and power to others.

1. "Ye are the salt of the earth" (v. 13).

The properties of salt are:

(1) Penetrating. This means that the disciples must not separate themselves from the world, but thrust themselves into its activities. Salt must be brought into contact with the substance to be affected by it.

(2) Purifying. The influence of the disciples of Christ is to uplift and purify.

(3) Preserving. Salt has the tendency to arrest decay. The influence of believers tends to save the world from perishing in its own vices.

2. "Ye are the light of the world" (v. 14).

Light illuminates and warms. In order to perform its mission, light must not be hidden. The city built on a hill was not intended to be hid.

This world is dark and cold. Many are the pitfalls and snares set by the devil. Believers in Christ should so live that the unwary ones be kept from falling into them.

II. Characteristics of the Primitive Church (Acts 2:42-47).

The behavior of the members of the early church was as marvelous as their gifts of speaking with tongues and performing mighty miracles. It was the result of the Holy Spirit in their hearts.

1. They sought instruction from those who knew the Lord (v. 42).

This is always so. The unfailing mark of the spirit-filled believer is eagerness to receive instruction from those who have been taught by the Lord.

2. They abode in fellowship with one another (v. 42).

Spirit-filled believers have an affection for their kind.

3. They observed the memorial sacrament of Christ's death (v. 42).

Those who have entered into fellowship with Christ will faithfully observe this memorial.

4. They continued in prayer (v. 42).

A sure mark of the spirit-filled believer is a life of prayer.

5. They were together (v. 44).

This unity was the result of their having been baptized into the one body of which Christ is head (I Cor. 12:13).

6. They had a community of goods (vv. 44, 45).

They sold their possessions and distributed them to all men as they had need. This proves that they were under the power of the supernatural. It is not a natural thing for one to abandon his title to earthly possessions.

7. They were filled with gladness and singleness of heart (v. 46).

Those who are really born from above are filled with great joy and will devote themselves to the doing of good to others.

8. Praising God and having favor with all the people (v. 47).

Such unselfishness gained the attention of the people and induced them to yield themselves to God and such as were being saved were added unto them.

Fullness of the Spirit

God cannot give fullness of the Spirit to him who does not have such fullness of trust as to yield his life to Him.—Echoes.

Self-Will

The queen thing about self-will is that it kills the very thing its wants—freedom.—Southern Methodist.

Christ Opens the Door

Christ opens the only door for the ascent of man.—Southern Methodist.

NOTICE!

To Livestock Owners

If You Own Any Horses, Cattle, Poultry or Hogs, by All Means Read This.

Safeguard your stock against the costly ravages of quick-spreading disease. Nature has provided wonderful health-giving roots and herbs which have proved unfailing in thousands of cases. These are combined in a time-tried, reliable remedy, Porter's Pain King—the standby of hundreds of farmers in this community. They recommend it highly for sores, colds and distemper in horses and for soreness of the udder, caked teats, and bloat in cows. Every day chickens are becoming better money-earners, and there is an increasing use of Porter's Pain King by careful poultry raisers everywhere. It is a positive relief for gapes, roup and parasitic growths. Sick hens are not good layers.

Use Porter's Pain King at the slightest sign of trouble. Just follow the directions with each bottle. It may save you several hundred dollars. Your dealer guarantees satisfaction or money back. Made and guaranteed by The Geo. H. Rundle Co., Piqua, Ohio, since 1871.

Attention, Middle-Aged Women!

Fort Wayne, Ind.—"Dr. Pierce's medicines were a life saver to me at middle age. When I reached that period it seemed that I had all the ailments and distress that can come to a woman. My nerves gave way, I was so weak that some days I was not able to be on my feet at all. I had hot flashes, dizzy spells, backache and pains thru my sides.

I was a complete physical wreck when I began taking Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription and Golden Medical Discovery. These medicines soon ended the suffering and distress and brought me thru this critical period a strong healthy woman."—Mrs. Ida Jackman, 421½ Baker St.

The city council of Bryan ,Ohio has backed up on its proposal to establish an occupation tax as there was so much objection from the citizens, and the ordinance will be allowed to lie ineffective. In the meantime the city is broke, the firemen are working on the volunteer basis, the merchants are paying the police, and there is hardly enough income to pay interest on the bonded indebtedness.

BE SURE OF Your VISION

So great is the percentage of those having defective vision and so frequently are the ill-effects attributed to some other cause, that you can not afford to merely guess that your eyes are normal. Even if you are now wearing glasses, changes may have occurred in your eyes that make new glasses necessary. Some common indications are: Headache, Pains in the eyeball, Pains at base of the brain, A pressure at top of the head, Eyes smart, and Burn, Subject to dizzy spells. If you are wearing glasses they may need changing and if you are not, it may be you should be wearing them. Come in and without obligation on your part, we will give you an Honest Examination and a Square Deal.

Almost A New Pair of Eyes

That is what a correct fitting pair of glasses amount to. Take a near-sighted person, for example. He does not realize, maybe, that he oes not see as far as he should. Sometime by accident he learns the fact, and if wise consults us. When supplied with glasses he has a new world opened up to him. All errors of vision are corrected here.

SPENCER TOWNSHIP CITIZEN PASSES AWAY

Elias Kline, son of Henry and Maria Kline, was born in Stark county, Ohio, December 24, 1844 and passed away at his farm home Monday noon at 12 o'clock, February 7, 1927, at the age of 82 years, 1 month and 13 days.

When he was 22 years of age the family moved here from Stark County, Ohio. They settled here, engaged in farming, which was his principal occupation for over fifty-five years.

On Jaunary 1, 1900 he was married to Mary Caillet. To this union was born one son, Vernon and one granddaughter, Evelyn Marie. Little Evelyn being the pride of her grandfather's heart for the past year.

From the family of five children, one brother, Theodore, alone, remains. His brothers ,Martin and William with one sister, Mary, preceded him to the other world.

The husband, father and grandfather will be missed in the home and Uncle Elias will be missed in the community as a good and honest neighbor.

The funeral services were conducted by Mrs. A. K. Mumma of Harlan, Ind., in the Spencerville Lutheran Church, and buried in White City Cemetery. Roscoe Walter funeral director.

RETURNED FROM FLORIDA TRIP

Mr. and Mrs. M. A. Hull of Helena, Ohio, returned Tuesday of last week from their southern trip and spent over Sunday here and at Auburn the guests of relatives. They report a fine trip and one of many interesting scenes. The trip was 3,600 miles. At St. Augustine they took a boat ride and when they returned, D. F. Benninghoff was standing at the dock, and was greatly surprised to see anyone from home. They spent the afternoon and evening with Mr. and Mrs. Beaninghoff.

The News is now being sent to Helena each week.

THE GOSPEL OF GOOD ROADS

It is not long ago that the Caterpillar Tractor Company published a most interesting volume, entitled "Out of the Rut." This book's story began almost at the beginning of time and showed the history to road building up to the present.

It brought out forcibly the fact that in many sections of the county the gospel of good roads is still in that stage characteristic of the middle 19th Century, covering only the veriest beginnings of modern roadway systems.

It is almost inconceivable that any American community could countenance indefinitely the handicap of poor roads. The whole history of the world's advance is inseperable from its transportation facilities. The world has prospered with the development of transportation rather than transportation with the development of the world.

Those who live on the great highways suffer because there are places in this nation where good roads do not abound. It is for the general welfare that we should spread the gospel of good roads until it taps and developes the hindermost regions, adding wealth and greater prosperity to our unified nation.

THE MAN WHO IS AHEAD

In almost every paper
You are pretty sure to find
A lot of gush and nonsense,
All about the man behind;
The man beside the buzz-saw
And the man behind the gun
Thee man behind the plowshire
And the man behind the son,
The man behind the whistle
And the man behind the cars,
The man behind the Kodak
And the man behind the bars;
The man behind the whiskers,
And the man behind the fist—
O'h you read of them often,
For they're always on the list;
But there is another fellow
Of whom nothing has been said;
It's the fellow who is even,
Or a little way ahead;
The man who pays us promptly
And whose checks are always signed,
He's vastly more important
Than the man who is behind.
For every kind of business
And the whole commercial clan
Is indebted for existance
To this honest fellow man.
He keeps us all a-going
And his town is never dead,
So we all take our hats off
To the man who is ahead.

A LITTLE EXPERIENCE IN BOHEMIA

By GEORGE MUNSON

(Copyright by W. G. Chapman.)

"HOW do you like Bohemia, Miss Lane?" inquired Sanford at the party.

Dorothy Lane drew in her breath. "I think it is just heavenly," she said, watching the lights and the dancers in the cabaret. "And to think I lived all my life without knowing that these things exist!"

"They're all very well in their way," answered Sanford. "Only don't estimate them beyond their real value, Miss Lane."

Dorothy had persuaded her parents, who were rich, to give her a year in New York. Ostensibly she was studying at an art school; but if you had questioned her and she had been honest, she would have told you that she was studying life.

A young man, dressed in the extremity of fashion, who had been executing a dance with a slim blonde, came up and sat down at the table.

"I'm thirsty," he remarked, addressing all the party, though his eyes rested on Dorothy.

"What'll you have?" asked Sanford, smiling.

"Absinthe," answered the young man. "Hello! Excuse me a moment."

While he was gone to speak to his late partner, Sanford turned to Dorothy.

"It's the way in Bohemia," he said. "Introductions aren't considered necessary. You don't mind?"

"Oh, I think it's delightfully unconventional," the girl answered.

When the young man came back he drifted into an earnest conversation with Dorothy, after drinking the strange, greenish-white liquid which was supplied him. He asked her to dance. The girl, in exhilaration, seemed to float over the boards. And when the dance was over the young man and she sat down in a corner behind a screen, under a palm.

He was the son of an English nobleman, he told her. But for family reasons the marriage had to be kept quiet. He had borne the undeserved stigma upon his birth at his dead mother's plea. His father had refused to acknowledge him. He did not like life in the cabaret. But he had to live.

Dorothy listened in a trance. Such things, then, happened in real life, and not merely in books! It seemed impossible. In a moment kindly Sanford was forgotten. Sanford, well-meaning and a good friend to her, had taken her to the Cabaret Richelieu at her request to see "something of the shady side of life." He thought the inexperienced girl more worldly than she was. Had he understood nothing would have induced him to take her, with the party of friends, to such a place.

The young man's soulful blue eyes seemed unutterably sad. "May I hope to meet you again?" he asked.

"Perhaps," breathed Dorothy.

"When?"

"Tomorrow night?"

It was settled, and the girl's heart beat fast as he led her back to the table, where Sanford gave her a kindly scolding for sitting out with the man. He did not know the secret of his birth, and Dorothy felt honored in keeping it to herself. Sanford took her home, laughed at her enthusiasm, and said good-by. He never dreamed what plan was in Dorothy's head.

On the next night Dorothy, innocent, went to the cabaret alone. Timidly she sat at a table. She did not know what to order. Before she had answered the waiter, a young man came up to her and invited her to dance. The leer on his face struck Dorothy cold with terror.

Suddenly, with a bound, her friend of the night before was at her side.

"Get out of here!" he stormed at the other, who withdrew grudgingly. A moment later Dorothy saw him laughing with the slim blonde woman. It might have seemed curious, but all her attention was concentrated on the young man at her side.

She told him her own story, of the pent-in life in the country home, her rich old father, absorbed in money-making, her loneliness in New York.

"But you need an escort," said the young man. "May I be privileged to call myself your friend? I can show you life—the real life. . . ."

On the next evening he called for her in a taxicab and took her to half a dozen cabarets. Dorothy had an impression of a whirl of music, dancing, and laughter. The young man had no change and Dorothy paid the taxicab bill—twenty-two dollars. She had an idea that the cab driver smiled when he took the young man home.

St. Clair—that was his name—had explained how his share of his grandfather's property was being held up pending a lawsuit. It would be a matter of a few weeks only. Dorothy, with all the money she needed, had offered to be his banker. The next day she bought him a diamond pin. He had said he had lost his pin. How surprised he would be at the gift!

He was. And, always respectful, he took her here and there and everywhere. The girl's eyes were opening fast. Their comradeship, so frank and friendly, took on a softer note. She let him hold her hand. Once he kissed it, and she thrilled with happiness.

He was to call and take her to a private theatrical entertainment—very exclusive, very elite. Dorothy was surprised that it was to be given in a private house, but she went upstairs without demur. They were the first guests. Excusing himself a moment, the young man withdrew, leaving the girl alone in the dimly lit room.

It was a two-room apartment, with a curtain in the middle. Dorothy began to grow uneasy. She heard footsteps—and suddenly two men and a woman—the slim blonde—burst in.

"There she is!" shrieked the woman. "Oh, you hussy! I'll teach you—I'll tear your eyes out—"

She struggled wildly in the grip of the men, while Dorothy, white with terror, waited mutely.

"Well, miss, we've trapped you," said one of the men. "We are detectives from the Dolf agency. If you've got any friends you'd best communicate with them, for Mrs. Seaforth here means to prosecute her divorce suit through thick and thin."

Before Dorothy had quite taken in his meaning the second man, seizing advantage while his comrade struggled with the blonde, came quietly up to Dorothy.

"Five hundred will square it, and we'll swear we never found you," he whispered. "Come, give me your note—all your money and an I. O. U. It's safest, and you won't have any publicity."

At last the girl realized the trap into which she had fallen. Half fainting, she clung to the window curtains, her eyes fixed mutely on the scoundrel's face.

Suddenly the door burst open, and there stood Sanford—kindly Sanford, now red with rage, and wielding a revolver.

"Get out of here—the pack of you!" he snarled.

With wonderful speed the blonde, recovering, shot through the doorway, followed by the two confederates.

Sanford held Dorothy in his arms. "There, my dear!" he said, stroking her hair. "I was to blame. I felt uneasy and followed things up. Those rogues had laid a trap for you. I know. I know."

And, half supporting her, he led her from Bohemia.

"Whale Steaks" Taken From Buried Mammoth

The proprietress of an inn at Dikovina, in the Trans-Baikal territory of Siberia, provided her customers with "whale steaks" from a mysterious source of supply, and failed to pay the regulation tax on her profits. The health inspector for the district, knowing that no whale meat was obtainable within 100 miles of the inn, set out with a police inspector to investigate the matter. After sampling the famous steaks at the inn, he announced his identity.

Madame informed him that a crazy woodman had supplied over 1,000 roubles' worth for fifty bottles of vodka, but she had no idea where he got his supplies. On being interviewed, the woodman made the amazing statement that he dug the meat from the ground!

The inspector accompanied the woodman to a place in the forest where, surely enough, was buried a gigantic carcass. It was sound, fresh meat, evidently kept from decomposition by the cold.

The site was excavated, and the carcass was found to be that of a gigantic mammoth of prehistoric times, and with it a baby mammoth almost as big as an elephant of today. Except for the hole in the back of the adult animal from which the woodman had dug his "steaks," both carcasses were whole and perfect.

Entombed by some primeval catastrophe, the two carcasses had been preserved by the Arctic cold for nearly 20,000 years.—London Mail.

Wise Collie

Not long ago a large collie dog limped into a country hospital in England and held up one of its paws. Examination showed that the left foreleg was broken.

A doctor set the leg and put it in splints, and the dog then settled down and made itself comfortable at the hospital. The authorities did not know to whom it belonged, but they kept it and cured it. In the morning after its first night as a patient it found its way to the kitchen and was given breakfast.

Nothing was discovered to show how it had found the hospital. It may have been pure chance—a turning into the first open door in search of aid and pity.

Family Failing

One day an Ebell club woman asked Harry Carr why domestic relations in this present day and age seemed so unenduring.

"It's because there isn't enough variety among wives," answered The Lancer promptly.

"My gracious!" exclaimed the lady, "you are not advocating polygamy, are you?"

"Oh, no," was the reply. "What I meant was, that today there seem to be but two types of wives: those who expect things of their husbands, and those who suspect things."—Los Angeles Times.

Classic Names for States

Thomas Jefferson proposed a plan in 1784 to form the northwest territory into states, each state to be two degrees wide and the lines to be intersected by two meridians, one passing through the falls of the Ohio river and the other through the mouth of the Kanawha river. The states were to be named Chersonesus, Assenisipia, Sylvania, Pelisipia, Illinois, Polyptoma, Washington, Mesopotamia and Michigania.

Clean Kidneys By Drinking Lots of Water

Take Salts to Flush Kidneys If Bladder Bothers or Back Hurts

Eating too much rich food may produce kidney trouble in some form, says a well-known authority, because the acids created excite the kidneys. Then they become overworked, get sluggish, clog up and cause all sorts of distress, particularly backache and misery in the kidney region, rheumatic twinges, severe headaches, acid stomach, constipation, torpid liver, sleeplessness, bladder and urinary irritation.

The moment your back hurts or kidneys aren't acting right, or if bladder bothers you, begin drinking lots of good water and also get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any good pharmacy; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys may then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for years to flush clogged kidneys and stimulate them to activity; also to neutralize the acids in the system so that they no longer irritate, thus often relieving bladder disorders.

Jad Salts can not injure anyone; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which millions of men and women take now and then to help keep the kidneys and urinary organs clean, thus often avoiding serious kidney disorders.

Little Old New York

Just after the termination of the Revolutionary war the population of each of the states of Virginia, Pennsylvania, North Carolina and Massachusetts outranked that of New York. Virginia had more than double the number of New York's inhabitants, and Maryland was its peer. It was only in 1820 that New York, with 959,049 inhabitants, passed every other state in the country in population.

A simple, old-fashioned medicine, as good today as in 1837, is compounded in Wright's Indian Vegetable Pills. They regulate the stomach, liver and bowels. Adv.

TOTS' GAY JERSEY FROCKS; FUR TRIM FOR SPORTS COATS

ONCE it was the manner of little girls to sit quietly by, as they gazed with awe and admiration upon the apparel of their elders. No doubt they were thinking, if not saying, "wait until I grow up and I'll have my dresses made with plaits and scallops and pockets and fancy belts 'n' everything just like mother's and big sister's."

Times have changed! Today it is the spirit of 1927 which declares "no more" watchful waiting" for the children in regard to the styling of their frocks. The modern fashionist is taking a keen delight in endowing the clothes of the younger generation with every intriguing detail which is dear to the feminine heart.

Practical Dress for Early Spring.

So it is that the complexes which characterize a sophisticated styling are finding their way into children's costuming this season. Has mother a two-piece jumper suit? So has little daughter. Does big sister wear a coat of novelty worsted with cuffs and collar of spotted calf skin? So does little Miss Seven to Fourteen.

Just now every feminine member of the household is interested in a pretty practical dress for early spring, and for this the mode continues to sing the praises of fine and colorful wool jersey.

The tendency is, this season, toward making up the ever beloved jersey cloth quite fancifully. The rule applies to children's clothes as well as for older folks. This trend is exemplified in the two-piece model here pictured, which is of rose-beige jersey, in that scallops vary the hemline of the blouse, while soft plaits give fullness to the skirt. Spring suits and frocks are showing a partiality for pockets. That is why this little blouse has two of them, and a narrow belt, of course, for the majority of dresses and coats are now belted.

Wool crepe and crepe de chine are also high-lighted among fabrics desirable for little girls' practical early spring dresses. Color combinations are outstanding in these junior frocks.

Hansel and Gretel, so runs the oft told story, journeying far, seeking the bluebird of happiness, return to find it at their very hearthstone, where it ever had dwelt.

Something like Maeterlink's quest of the blue-bird, runs the experience of the fashionist, who traveling in distant lands, scouring the outposts of the world for "something different" with which to satisfy the cravings of milady of fashion, discovers in calfskin, yes in the simple home-product calfskin, an answer direct to the cry for novelty in styledom. Those who visioned the possibilities of this homely yet handsome flat fur, have put it to the test, and behold! calfskin as the idol of the hour, and also ponyskin, if you please, when it comes to trimming for the spring coat.

If these fur embellishments are unusual, no less so are the novelty clonkings which they trim. Diversity of weaves is an outstanding feature of the mode.

Not only do fur trimmings as well as the cloth of which the newer coats are made declare a vogue for the unusual, but the manner in which the two are interworked is most intriguing. It is the fashion to harmonize fur with the fabric it trims. Beige calfskin with beige cloth is one of the triumphs of this season. Ombre lapin, which is shaded squirrel, is also very smart.

Brown novelty weave cloth is the chosen medium for the smart spring coat model in the picture, with collar, cuffs and pockets of brown ponyskin. Note the unique cut of pockets and cuffs.

Smart Spring Coat Model.

DAIRY

UNDERFED COWS ARE EXPENSIVE

It costs more to underfeed a producing cow than to feed her properly.

A cow giving her maximum amount of milk will return nearly 48 per cent of the feed she eats in milk. The other 52 per cent is used in maintaining her body. A cow that is underfed will keep using enough feed to maintain herself and let the milk pail suffer for the feed shortage, Ivan McKellip, extension specialist in dairying at the Ohio State university observes.

In feeding a cow for maximum production it is necessary to feed the right quality. The various food elements, as protein, carbohydrates and fat, must be fed in correct proportions. Ohio cows as a general rule are fed enough carbohydrates and fats, but very often they are underfed in the protein ration.

Balance to the ration is important for milk production, for it must be made according to nature's formula. The cow has no part in the composition of her milk. If she is underfed in any one of the foods the milk pail suffers.

It takes $75 to $125 a year to maintain a cow that produces 300 pounds of butterfat a year. The variation comes in feed prices that are different in the different parts of the state.

Feeds can be substituted if costs for certain kinds of commercial concentrates go too high. Milk cost $4.26 a hundred pounds when the ration was silage, timothy hay, corn and barley. The same ration, excepting that red clover hay was fed instead of timothy to the same cow, enabled her to produce milk at $1.63 a hundred pounds. When alfalfa hay was substituted production costs were cut to $1.21 a hundred pounds of milk.

Stanchions Will Prove Useful in Raising Calf

Stanchions for calves not only insure that each animal will get the feed required but it also keeps them from sucking one another's ears after they are through drinking their milk. For these reasons most people who make a practice of raising their calves also provide calf stanchions in their calf barn.

Calf stanchions may be from 36 to 42 inches in height, and 28 inches in width. A space about 4½ inches in width is about right for the neck of the average calf. The feed trough should not be too wide, about 14 inches generally proving satisfactory. Stanchions and feed troughs of this kind can be constructed the same as many of the cow stanchions, except that the material will not need to be so heavy.

Calves should never be fed milk in a trough. Some will drink much more rapidly than others and get more than they should have for best results, while others will not get the amount needed. Separate buckets should be furnished for each calf. After the calves are through with their milk they can be given grain in the trough. If the trough is partitioned it will give better results for the same reason that favors separate pails for the milk.

Temperature Variations Cause Digestive Ills

The milk which is given to the calf should be the same temperature as when it comes from the cow. Variations in temperature, especially the feeding of cold milk, will very often cause digestive troubles. For the first five or six days a quart of milk three times daily will generally prove sufficient. Then the amount can be gradually increased until the calf is taking two quarts, three times daily. When the calf is about ten days to two weeks old some whole grain can be added to the milk. A handful will be sufficient so as to get the calf started. At this time it is possible to change to two feedings a day. The calves should also have access to hay. Bright clover hay is good, providing there are no symptoms of scours. If scours are noticeable then it is better to give the calves access to wild hay until their bowels are normal. Calves should have all of the pure water that they wish to drink.

Dehorning Calves

When the calf is young and the beginning horn growth is small, the horn button and matrix from which it grows may be removed with a small chisel or strong-bladed knife. Or the hair may be clipped around the button or small horn and the skin around the base of the horn covered with lard or tallow. Then wet the button or horn with water and rub the end of a stick of caustic potash all over the button or horn. In a short time the button or little horn will slough off.

Increase Milk Flow

A lack of plenty of drinking water cuts down the milk flow, as every dairyman knows. Having plenty of good water to drink at all times increases the milk flow and makes the water system a paying proposition from a purely dollar-and-cents standpoint. When there is water under pressure a length of garden hose and a nozzle yield a stream of water which is fine for flushing out stable gutters and washing down cement floors and pavements.

A Girl's Critical Age

READING between the lines, it takes a mother or sister to divine the needs of a girl just budding into womanhood: "My sister was not very strong and had been taking all sorts of pills and stuff for constipation. She was fourteen and of course embarrassed with pimples. So I bought her a large bottle of Syrup Pepsin. She has had no constipation since, her complexion is good and she is much stronger, healthier and happier. Now I always recommend Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin." (Name and address will be sent on request.)

Has Brought Up Entire Families

Syrup Pepsin is a mainstay from infancy to full growth. Sour, bilious stomach, headache, coated tongue, colds, feverish daily ills—all vanish. Children play right after a dose. Mothers stop their own terrible sick headache, indigestion, constipation. Makes old folks happy, contented. Truly a family medicine in its highest meaning. Get it today—any druggist, anywhere.

For a free trial bottle send name and address to Pepsin Syrup Company, Monticello, Illinois.

CURING AWKWARDNESS

Ethel G. Peterson

Johnny was a bit shy, and more than a bit self-conscious. As a consequence, he was awkward as a puppy at almost everything he tried to do. If he passed a dish at table, he inevitably spilled some of its contents. If he wiped dishes he nearly always dropped one before he was through. He could not be trusted to hand sandwiches around at a party, for sooner or later they would land on the floor.

Mother—quick, efficient, capable—was mortified that a boy five years old should do such senseless things. So she scolded: "Why don't you watch where you're going?" "Do be careful now, you're going to spill that!" She did not realize how sharp her voice was, nor how her rebuke hurt the boy's sensitive soul.

Johnny grew more and more awkward. He dreaded the thought of doing things when Mother was around— if she wasn't there, things seemed to go better. He would start and drop whatever he was holding if Mother entered the room.

Then Cousin Kate came to visit. She and Johnny were pals from the start, for she understood and loved boys. She saw that Johnny acted nervous when his mother came in where he was playing, and that he seemed reluctant to do small services for her. Yet he was a loving little chap, and flew to obey her own behests.

Quietly, she studied the situation. One day Johnny himself gave her a clue by saying, "Cousin Kate, I try so hard to do it right for Mother, but she always says, 'Now be careful,' and then I spill things."

The next morning Cousin Kate had a heart-to-heart talk with Johnny's mother,, in the course of which she persuaded her that she had unconsciously been instilling fear into her small son's heart. He wanted so much to please her, and that very fact made him nervous. Then her constant warning before he did anything, and her fretful comment on an accident: "There I just knew you'd do that. You are the most careless boy!" completed his discomfiture.

Cousin Kate induced Mother first to change her thought about her little son, to feel that he was going to do the right thing. Then she was to pay less attention to him. She could walk away, or turn and look out the window after she had asked some favor of Johnny, anything to make him feel as though he were doing it "on his own." If sometimes there was a break or spill, she was to treat it in a matter-of-fact way and say, "Oh well, it isn't anything very dreadful; next time you'll do it right." And when things did go right, Mother was to overpraise a little.

So it happened that within a few months Johnny had very nearly lost that nervous dread—that expectancy of failure—and had acquired a new ease of action and confidence in his own ability. In other words, he had lost his "inferiority complex."

JOHN CROMWELL AS AN ACTOR IS PRAISED BY AUTHOR AND MANAGER

Sidney Howard and William A. Brady Quoted as Saying He Is One of the Best of Modern American Players

For every ten thousand theatergoers who are reasonably familiar with the name of John Cromwell, it is doubtful if fifty have seen him as an actor, since he achieved an identity in the business of the theater. Yet, he went into the theater to be an actor, has been successful whenever he has acted, and is coming to Ft. Wayne as an actor next Saturday night only (no matinee) when he will be seen in the leading masculine part of 'Ned McCobb's Daughter," one of the outstanding successes of the theatrical season in New York.

It was William A. Brady, the producer of more than four hundred plays, who persuaded Mr. Cromwell to give up acting for stage-management. The latter had been a successful member of Miss Grace George's casts under the Brady management, and had at times made suggestions for the staging of plays that met with Miss George's approval and were adopted. Miss George told Mr. Brady (she, as is pretty well known, is Mrs. Brady) that he was overlooking a great director of plays in the person of this John Cromwell; so, Mr. Cromwell gave up acting at $500 a week to stage plays for Mr. Brady and others at $1500 a week.

Sidney Howard, author of "Ned McCobb's Daughter," turned an earlier play, "Lucky Sam McCarver," over to Mr. Cromwell to stage. Mr. Cromwell, the old urge on him, asked to be permitted to the long and exacting title-role. Mr. Howard, surprised, rather reluctantly consented. Mr. Cromwell's success in New York in the part was literally immense. It was then that Mr. Howard said he regarded him as one of the best of modern American actors, and added that he would submit every play he wrote to Mr. Cromwell in the hope that the latter would again ask to act a role.

Fairy Tales

Beware of the smooth investment salesmen who charm you with stories of wonderful earnings of the "securities" they offer. Their stories are mostly fairy tales.

Always the greater earnings promised, the greater the danger of a loss of the whole thing. Keep your savings in a good bank like ours. Then consult your banker before making investments. OPEN SEASON AT END FOR FUR-BEARING ANIMALS

Violation of Law now to Possess Mink, Muskrat, Fox, Racoon, Skunk or Possum

Indianapolis, Ind., Feb. 14.—The open season for lawfully taking fur-bearing animals in Indiana ended Thursday, February 10, and from that date until November 10 of this year, it constitutes a law violation to kill or possess mink, muskrat, fox, racoon, skunk or opossum, except that animals may be kept for breeding purposes. However, to hold small wild life in captivity for propagation purposes, it is first necessary to take out a certificate with the conservation department, the cost of which is $5 a year. No animals may be taken in the closed season for any purpose and those held for propagation must have been taken in the open season.

Under the fur-bearing animal law, says George N. Mannfeld, fish and game superintendent of the conservation department, the property owner may kill any protected fur-bearing animal when found damaging property, but only on his own premises. The law makes it plain that a possessor of freshly skinned hides has five days after the closed season begins in which to dispose of same. Possession after that date is prima facia evidence the fur was taken out of season.

Persons destroying fur-animals out of season because they damage property, are required to report same to the conservation department, stating the facts of each killing. If the hide or fur is saved it must be sent to the department which is required to dispose of same and proceeds thus obtained go to the fish and game fund.

LAW REGULATES SALE OF SEEDS

Farmers advertising seed for sale in their sale bills or in the newspapers bring their product under the provisions of the Indiana state seed law, H. R. Kraybill of Indianapolis, state chemist and seed commissioner, said today. When farmers advertise their seed for sale in this manner, Mr. Kraybill explains that it is necessary for the farmer to tag the seed with properly filled out Indiana seed tags in order to comply with the law. The grower may sell seed which he has raised on his own premises without tagging the seed provided he does not advertise through the medium of the public press, circular or catalog and does not deliver the seed away from his own premises. The News has on file this instruction from the state chemist.

Looking Back For 50 Years

Fifty years ago this year a national banking system was started in the United States.

Today Americans have on deposit and subject to check or drawing interest the unheardof sum of $60,000,000,000

If you do not own a part of that vast sum, you can still profit through the experience of others. You can still make your dollars wor for you—and a working dollar is the only dollar worth having.

Or you can do your boy or girl a wonderful favor by taking even one dollar and starting an account for them and then teaching them how thrift and saving has made thee United States the most prosperous, the most contented, the happiest nation in the world.

VOL. XLI. ST. JOE, DeKALB COUNTY, INDIANA, THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 24, 1927 NUMBER 8

COBURN'S CORNERS CHURCH ANNIVERSARY

Coburn's Corners Church of Christ observed the 90th anniversary of its founding on last Sunday. It is the oldest religious organization in DeKalb county.

The forenoon program was the regular Bible School and worship, when J. N. Scholes, sixth out of the seven ministers ordained by this church, preached on "The Institutions of the Bible."

The afternoon was devoted entirely to a recall of the community work. This was chiefly done through an original pageant by Mildred Gee, presented by a cast of local characters. This was a real work of art, upon which both the author and characters are to be congratulated.

About 190 people were in attendance, representing Ft. Wayne, Hicksville, St. Joe, Newville, Auburn, Garrett and Coldwater, Michigan.

ANNOUNCE LATIN CONTEST WINNERS

In order to encourage more and better work among Latin students the state conducted a Lain contest. This contest was given entirely through examinations. The local contest was given in all schools before the12th of February. The two receiving the highest grades in this contest are elegible to enter the county contest. The two receiving the highest grades in the county go to the district and the winners in the district go to the state.

The local examinations have been given and papers graded. The two having the highest grades were Martha Woodcox of 97 per cent and Hasel Storer 86 per cent.

As these two girls will represent S. J. H. S. in the county contest we feel sure that they will show the contestants of the county a good race and hope they may bring back the bacon to St. Joe.

SECOND BLAZE AT AUBURN ROLLER MILLS

Fire, smoke and water caused a big loss Friday night at the Auburn Roller Mills. The origin of the blaze, which apparently started in the basement of the three story building, is unknown.

Because of the condition of H. W. Timbrook, the owner of the mill, who was confined to his bed Saturday as a result of being overcome by smoke, the exact loss ould not be ascertained. Estimates place it at about $10,000. The principal damage resulted from smoke and water, although the interior of the roof through the elevators which sucked the flames through the upper stories. The fire was discovered by employes of the Auburn Water and Electric Light plant shortly after 7 o'clock but was not extinguished until 1:30 Saturday morning.

The fire Friday night was the seecond in a period of fourteen months which caused great loss at the mill. On the morning of December 13, 1925, at 3:30 fire was discovered by a night watchman at the Auburn Automobile factory. All that remained was the brick engine room and a portion of the mill facing the north and east. The loss at that time was between $25,000 and $28,000 with insurance of $15,000.

HUSBANDS SHOW WIVES A GOOD TIME AT BUTLER

Theladies of the St. Joe Culture Club were royally entertained by their husbands at the Hotel Butler, last Wednesday evening.

An elaborate dinner was served in courses at eight o'clock with Clark Scholes acting as toastmaster. Toasts were given by F. A. Jenkins, E. R. Kinsey, Mrs. F. R. Bowman and H. M. Widney.

After the dinner, the ladies were escorted to the reception room where they enjoyed a musical program given by Donald Kinsey and Joe Woodcox with Miss Emma Jane Gallahan at the piano. In addition to the instrumental music, Joe Woodcox sang two solos in his usual clear and pleasing manner.

After the regular program the company enjoyed an informal hour visiting and concert singing.

Before adjournment the president of the Culture Club, Mrs. L. B. Meek, in a clever, original rhyme thanked the gentlemen for the pleasures of the evening.

At a late hour, all motored to their respective homes, the club ladies hoping the men would make the happy occasion an annual event.

DEMONSTRATION OF USES OF ELECTRICITY ON FARM

The Purdue University traveling school on wheels and rails which will show the many uses of electricity on the farm, will make three stops in DeKalb county, according to word received by County Agent Stinson from Truman E. Heinton, of the Purdue Agricultural engineering staff who has been in charge of plans for the train.

These stops are scheduled for Garrett, March 8th, 12:30 to 2:45 P. M.; Auburn, March 8th, 3:00 to 5:00 P. M.; Waterloo, March 9th, 8:15 to 11:00 A. M.

The traveling school is a well equipped interurban car being operated over electric lines of the state to show to the farm men and women unable to go to the university what electric current will do to lighten the burdens of the farmer and his wife in doing the chores not only in the house but about the farm. The car fully equipped with motors and appliances will demonstrate the use of electrically operated milking machines, incubators, cream separators, grind stones, churns, fanning mills, washing machines, wood saws and other farm equipment. Robert Heinton of the Purdue staff will be in charge of these demonstrations.

Miss Kathryne McMahon of the home economics extension staff will have in operation an electric range cooker, toaster and various pieces of household equipment.

The entire car will give results of experiments conducted the last few years by Purdue in co-operation with the Indiana Electric Light Association in which definite information was obtained on cost of operating the many pieces of household and farmstead electric equipment. Separate meters on different appliances in a number of farm homes over the state gave the information and this exact information will be available for all those who visit the car.

Because of the wide extension of power lines over the state the last few years, electricity for the farm has become a reality in many communities that never dreamed of it, and hundreds of farmers are using it or plan to adopt it, when they can be served by the line owners.

EASTERN TIME ON B. & O. R. R. EAST OF GARRETT

Announcement is made that beginning April 3 Baltimore & Ohio trains will be run west from Garrett on central standard time and east from Garrett on eastern time.

This is in conformity with a ruling of the interstate commerce commission. The line is now defined by the T. & O. C. running through Fostoria, Ohio, but by the change ordered it will be defined by the C. H. & D. running through Deshler. For operating reasons, the Baltimore and Ohio has used eastern time east of Willard and central time west of that terminal. Under the new order the change will be made at Garrett.

The company has not yet decided whether eastern or central time will be used in its Garrett offices, but it is probable that central time will be continued in order to be in line with surrounding towns.

DEKAIB COUNTY PASTOR ILL WITH SLEEPING SICKNESS

The Rev. Frank Brechbill, pastor of Union church north of Garrett, is a patient at the Garrett hospital suffering from sleeping sickness.

Mr. Brechbill is thirty-nine years of age and is the son of Mr. and Mrs. John Brechbill of Richland township. He and his wife live on their farm two miles north and two miles west of Garrett.

After dinner Sunday, February 13, Mr. Brechbill remarked that he was sleepy and that he would lie down. He fell asleep and he has been sleeping practically all of the time since. He is aroused for his meals, but is awake only a short time. He was taken to the hospital Wednesday. It was believed Monday that he was resting easier and the chances are that he will recover, but he may be ill several weeks.

A Good Man To Know

IN every town and in every line of retail business you are pretty sure to find at least one merchant who chooses his lines of merchandise on strict quality standards. He believes in giving unusual value to his customers for every penny they spend with him.

This merchant may not always have the cheapest goods. But he is pretty sure to have the leading lines—those with service records that prove their sterling quality. This merchant is always on the lookout for the kind of goods that give greater satisfaction, last longer, and prove cheapest in the long run.

In placing our line of Red Top Steel Fence Posts we try to select this kind of dealer. Usually he's looking for us too. We know that such dealers will naturally attract buyers who believe in quality merchandise and thus do a bigger business for themselves and for us.

When we say that your local Red Top Steel Post dealer is a good man for you to know it's only another way of pointing out the merchant who is prepared to give greater value in fence posts and undoubtedly in other lines too.

CORN CHOWDER HANDY FOR WINTER DAYS

Preparing a Dish of Corn Chowder.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

A hot dish made with milk and substantial enough for lunch or supper is corn chowder. The United States Department of Agriculture gives the following ingredients and suggests that when celery is obtainable a half cup or more of chopped celery is an excellent addition, and a few bits of chopped green pepper.

1 pint milk
1 pint boiling water
2 cupfuls canned corn
2 tablespoonfuls salt pork diced
1 onion or more if desired
1 quart of potatoes, diced
Salt, pepper

Cut the pork into small pieces and chop the onion. Boil the diced potatoes in the pint of boiling water for 15 minutes. Fry the salt pork and onion for 2 minutes and add these and the corn to the potatoes. Cook until the potatoes are done. Add the milk, and season to taste with salt and pepper, and bring the mixture to the boiling point. Serve very hot in soup dishes, and place two or three crackers in each dish before pouring in the hot chowder.

APPETIZING WAYS TO COOK RABBITS

Sausage Fat Gives a Particularly Fine Flavor.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Before cooking, a rabbit should be washed carefully in cold water and patted dry with a clean towel, says the United States Department of Agriculture. It may then be stuffed and trussed if it is to be cooked whole, or cut into eight or ten pieces. Young, tender rabbits may be simply dredged with flour, salt and pepper and fried in fat, like fried chicken. Sausage fat gives a particularly good flavor to fried rabbit. The flavor of bacon also combines well with rabbit. A cream or brown gravy may be made, using the fat in which the rabbit was fried.

Another excellent way to cook a tender rabbit is to bake it in cream or white sauce. Split the rabbit into two halves along the backbone, dredge with flour, lay six slices of bacon across it, and pour three cupfuls of white sauce or three cupfuls of cream over it. Bake for one and one-half hours, basting frequently. The rabbit liver, boiled till tender and chopped, may be added to the gravy. Smothered rabbit is stuffed, and braised slowly with very little water in a covered pan.

Many dishes may be prepared after stewing rabbit till tender. For a rabbit pie the meat may be cut from the bones in large pieces, the broth thickened and the whole served with either a pastry or biscuit crust. Any broth not used makes excellent soup. For rabbit salad the meat may be mixed with celery in the same proportions as chicken salad—two parts of diced cold cooked meat to one part of chopped celery and one half part of salad dressing. Boiled rabbit may be served as a stew by adding potatoes, carrots, and onions when the meat is partly cooked. The liquid in which the stew is cooked should be thickened.

A spiced rabbit stew appeals to many persons. The seasonings consist of six slices of bacon (chopped), a minced onion, medium size, two teaspoonfuls of salt, one quarter teaspoonful of pepper, and one tablespoonful of whole cloves in a bag, all covered with boiling water and stewed slowly together till the rabbit is tender. A brown sauce is made separately and poured over the rabbit, which is then simmered two hours.

Scalloped Parsnips Are Particularly Delicious

Many persons who have never liked parsnips before have changed their minds when they tasted delicate scalloped parsnips. They may be prepared early in the day and reheated in a baking dish. When you are buying your parsnips, select the heaviest ones, suggests the United States Department of Agriculture. Those of light weight may be pithy. Scrub the parsnips clean, cook them until tender in lightly salted water; 20 to 30 minutes will be enough for medium-sized ones. Drain them and scrape off the outer skin, split them lengthwise, pull out the woody cores, place in a shallow baking dish, and cover them with a white sauce made with butter, flour and milk. Or if preferred the liquid for the sauce may be top milk or cream, and less butter will then be needed. After this sauce is poured over the parsnips, cover the top with bread crumbs which have been mixed with melted butter. Then bake in a moderate oven until the parsnips are thoroughly heated and the buttered crumbs are golden brown.

Oranges and Grapefruit Fit Into Every Course

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Oranges and grapefruit, like many other fruits, fit into every course from the first at breakfast to the last at dinner. There are other reasons, too, besides their delicious flavor and juicy texture for eating these citrus fruits early and often. Oranges, especially are rich in vitamines and minerals. A glass of orange juice and a graham cracker is an ideal between-meal lunch for a child because it satisfies him and yet whets his appetite for the next regular meal at the table. Now is the time to indulge the rest of the family, too, in orange juice. The small ones can be used to advantage for juice. Oranges and grapefruit make delicious salad, especially with a few nut meats and French dressing. Add a few sprigs of cress, too, if you like. Now when these fruits are cheap is also a good time to put up a supply of marmalade. Write to the bureau of home economics for directions for making amber marmalade. You will find it a quick and easy method. The bureau will also tell you how to make delicious candied grapefruit peel, so soft and tender that it almost melts in your mouth.

Orange Juice as a Between-Meal Beverage.

Salad Dressing to Suit Those Who Dislike Oil

Here's a salad dressing to suit those who do not care for oil. It can be used on any preferred salad, but is particularly good with cabbage, mixed raw vegetables, fruits or other salads where mayonnaise dressing is ordinarily used. The bureau of home economics of the United States Department of Agriculture gives these proportions:

¼ teaspoonful mustard.
½ teaspoonful salt.
½ teaspoonful paprika.
½ tablespoonful sugar.
1 egg.
½ cupful vinegar.
1 cupful sour cream.

Beat the egg until very light, add the other ingredients, and cook in a double boiler, stirring constantly until thickened. Remove from the fire and beat well. If this dressing is cooked properly it will have the consistency of thick mayonnaise and need not be strained.

High Value of Proteins

Both chemical analyses and actual feeding experiments have shown that the protein of the walnut, filbert, Brazil nut, coconut and cohune, have high food values. The proteins of the almond, however, were found to be not so satisfactory as those of the other nuts.

Alabaster Lamps

By MARGARET TURNBULL

Copyright, 1928, by Margaret Turnbull.
WNU Service

"Alabaster Lamps" is a story of old love and of new love; as old-fashioned as home-grown strawberries on biscuit-dough shortcake; as modern as a low, sleek speedster—balloon tires and bobbed-hair driver. Margaret Turnbull says it was written with the thought of showing what a practical man with a hard head, a soft heart and a yearning for the romance in life would do under certain circumstances. The tale was written on a high hill above the Delaware river, far removed from the theater and moving pictures. It was drafted out under the trees and during long, peaceful walks down the wood road. All about lay the country Miss Turnbull loves, and there live some of the finest people in the world—plain American citizens. For instance, there is C. M. Dabbs, village grocer, into whose life came some genuine romance—a romance in which figured beautiful women, adventures, a mysterious young knight from the battlefields of the World war, jousting with adversaries in the marts of trade, ocean liners, a visit to foreign shores, and a host of other things which enabled Mr. C. M. Dabbs, grocer, to gain a secret desire to view existence "through the mists of alabaster lamps."

The grocery store of C. M. Dabbs, at the crossroads, Peace Valley, was astir. This was "late-closing" night. Parked before the door were vehicles of all sizes, sorts and description, from motors to old-fashioned farm wagons and buggies, the patient horses waiting, with drooping heads, while their masters finished their interminable marketing and equally interminable conversations.

Marketing took a long time in Peace Valley. In the first place, on late-closing night it was the custom to "go down along the crossroads and do your 'storing' at Dabbs'." In the second place, hurry was a vulgar habit that had not yet reached Peace Valley.

One was "in the way of knowing what was adoing" in the village and the surrounding countryside by going to the crossroads store. The news-gathering and distributing took time, for no subject was rashly broached or rapidly discussed. One has only to listen attentively to the apparently monotonous discussions in country stores to discover that, though illiterate and totally ignorant of grammar, these soions have read deeply in the Book of Human Nature.

Two men alighted from a car just outside the grocery.

One of them, the proprietor of the shop, said: "Leave the bags, Ned. The boy'll bring them in."

He was a dark-haired, rather thick-set man. He was not tall. His fine face was reddened like that of a sailor or fireman; round, full and clean shaven. The hair at his temples was graying a little.

It was his eyes that made you look twice at him. C. M. Dabbs' eyes were blue as any Italian sky, and as cold as ice, or as soft and deep as the same sky. It all depended on how Dabbs looked at you.

They were at their softest and deepest now, as he looked at his companion. He was a much younger man, not more than twenty-seven, with smooth brown hair. His clothes were all that clothes should be, and worn by one who thought about them before he put them on, and then forgot about them. He was not the type usually found in a country village and he looked about him with an interest that proved him a stranger.

"Peace Valley!" he said, softly. "It looks like it!" He glanced again at the crossroads, one of which led steeply uphill, while the other wound about the valley until it disappeared behind a tall wood. The grocery store was a great old stone house, the front part of which had been transformed into a dwelling. Next door, a long low building combined the business of blacksmithing, wheelwrighting and motor repairing. The old and the new were mingled peacefully together. The post office, the brightly lighted barber shop and the cobbler's little hovel were all grouped about the crossroads.

"I didn't exaggerate, did I?" asked Dabbs.

The young man shook his head. "Peace Valley," he repeated. "I didn't believe there was such a place!" He glanced at the sign over the door and turned to the older man with a smile.

"C. M. Dabbs, General Store," he read aloud. "You told the truth about that, too. But why C. M.? Come, what is it that distinguishes you from the rank and file of Dabbses? Is it 'Charles' or 'Cyrus' or—"

The older man blushed. "C. M., I generally sign myself," he admitted, "but if you really want to know what it stands for—why, Claude Melnotte Dabbs is my name."

The young man laughed softly, repeating, "Claude Melnotte."

Mr. Dabbs smiled. "Do you blame me for sticking to C. M., or Mister?"

"I do not," his companion declared emphatically. "Tell me—"

"A traveling company, pretty good one, too, I believe," Mr. Dabbs began hurriedly, "with somebody celebrated as 'Pauline,' came to the county seat and played 'The Lady of Lyons.' My mother—"

"I didn't mean that," the young man assured him hastily, as though fearing obstetrical details. "I meant to ask is there a 'Lady of Lyons' in Peace Valley and is yours called 'Pauline,' too?"

Mr. Dabbs hesitated, shook his head thoughtfully, and said slowly: "I live alone, with Aunt Lyddy to keep house for me.

"'Course, I've always thought it was a blamed silly play. All about a poor boy marrying a lady under false pretenses. Good many years since I read it, though, but as I remember, he made good. I've often wondered if in real life—"

But his companion cared nothing about discussing Lytton's old play. "I say, Claude Melnotte," he interrupted, "is your Peace Valley home lit by 'alabaster lamps'?"

Claude Melnotte Dabbs hesitated. He was home again, after a week of the Wholesale and Retail Grocer's convention in New York. Behind that calm exterior he was greatly excited.

"Come in and Meet Aunt Lyddy."

Something in the young man's question faintly stirred his memory. Surely there had been mention of "alabaster lamps" in that old play. Vaguely feeling that there was another answer, he took particular pains to be exact.

"We've got an electric light plant for the store only, as you'll notice. In the house we burn coal oil. They're Rochester lamps."

He threw the door wide open and beckoned to his companion to enter, saying:

"Welcome home, Ned. Welcome to Peace Valley and our store."

With their entrance conversation stopped and all eyes turned toward Mr. Dabbs and his companion.

Ned saw what seemed an immense cavern, lit by crudely installed electric lights which shed a garish glow over the huge stock of canned goods, flower pots, cotton cloth, hams, bacon, tea, coffee and other staples which constitute a general store.

"Hello, Sim," Mr. Dabbs began, greeting the big-headed, pale-faced man behind the counter who was ladling out sugar for a bewhiskered farmer.

But before he could introduce Ned, a clear, girlish voice interrupted:

"I beg pardon, but could—will anyone tell me the road to Clover Hollow?"

The occupants of the store transferred their attention to the girl who, unnoticed, had entered just behind Mr. Dabbs and his companion.

She was a slender, vivid, dark girl. One might suspect, and find, red lights in the brown hair almost hidden by her close-fitting hat, and a fire in the blue eyes that looked out from under long, dark lashes. Everything about her spoke of money and care expended upon every article of her clothing. She had that curious air of responsibility and knowledge that is so oddly part of youth that the war has left us.

"I beg pardon," Ned began, but the girl looked past him and at the capable Dabbs, who had turned toward her and was pointing through the dark doorway as he spoke:

"Go straight along up that road until you pass Brook farm, which you'll know by the little covered bridge over the brook. Cross the bridge, turn to the right and keep on up the hill and away from Peace Valley and you'll be on the only road to Clover Hollow."

The girl thanked him briefly, though cordially, and went swiftly out. Ordinarily the crowd would have discussed her, her destination and her likelihood of being a "stayer" or just a visitor at Clover Hollow. But now there was another stranger present, and they turned their attention to Ned.

Mr. Dabbs introduced him briefly: "My nephew, Ned Carter, come to stay awhile."

Then, as the store began to wake up and get ready for speech, he turned to Ned with a curt, "Come in and meet Aunt Lyddy."

Ned followed without knowing that he had left behind a seething mass of curiosity. Dabbs knew it. That Claude Dabbs had an unknown nephew was unthinkable, and unsupported by the facts concerning the Dabbs family as known in Peace Valley.

Jim Farnum made one brave effort toward putting things on the proper Peace Valley footing. As Mr. Dabbs led Ned to the door, Jim found his voice:

"Didn't know you had a nevvy, Claude," he called out, "and don't exactly see how you can, either, seeing you're the only one of the hull Dabbs family left."

"My second cousin's boy from the West. He's always called me uncle, though, instead of cousin, owing to the difference in years. Come on, Ned," and Dabbs opened the door.

Ned found himself in a queer, bare little room, almost filled by a big table-topped desk of the vintage of 1860, quite as large as a modern dining table, and a vast armchair that looked even older, though both were in an excellent state of repair. There were no pictures on the wall, only a calendar.

"My office," Dabbs explained. "But come on and meet Aunt Lyddy, one of the best women God ever put breath in, but likely to be flustered if you bring anybody on her—suddenlike."

He opened a door leading into the interior of the house and ushered Ned into the family dining room. Aunt Lyddy sat at the table, a Rochester lamp in the center on an elaborately embroidered centerpiece. The lamp had a white shade, but after the harsh light of the shop, Ned was grateful for the softer glow. Aunt Lyddy was a personable old lady, handsome despite her sixty-odd years, with a great pile of the whitest hair Ned had ever seen. She looked up as Mr. Dabbs entered and scrutinized Ned from over the rims of her glasses.

"Well, Mister Dabbs, this is a pretty time to come home! Been a-joying around somewhere, as usual, I suppose."

"Brought you something, Aunt Lyddy." Mr. Dabbs patted her on the back and placed a small package in her lap. "Just a little something to satisfy that awful craving you've got for jewelry." Then, before the delighted old woman could open the box or speak, he continued, his hand on Ned's shoulder: "But I brought a bigger present than that back with me, Aunt Lyddy, this is my adopted nephew, Ned Carter."

"H'm, adopted!" As she spoke, Aunt Lyddy's eyes remained fixed on Ned.

"Yes, adopted. But remember, Aunt Lyddy, he's just 'nephew' to those gas bags in the store waiting to be filled and float round town with the news."

Aunt Lyddy nodded. "Well, you showed right good taste in selecting a nephew, Claude. He's a presentable-looking young fellow, I'll say that. If so be as he treats you as fair as you treat him, he can stay here and welcome."

"Thank you, Aunt Lyddy," and Ned smiled his friendliest. "I certainly mean well!"

Who is this brand new relation, and why hasn't Aunt Lyddy heard of him before.

Medieval-Day Boxes Became Dower Chests

Large wardrobe chests of medieval days, sometimes called portmanteaux, were the forerunners of the dower chests of later periods. There were no trunks, such as are in use today, and the big boxes were an important part of the impedimenta carried by the nobles of the Middle ages on their visits to neighboring castles, says Edward Wenham, writing in the International Studio. Usually they were made of oak, but sometimes chestnut was employed. Some of them were covered with leather, upon which the coat of arms and other heraldic signs were emblazoned. In time they become dower chests, usually containing the store of household linen that the bride took to her husband. Passing from mother to daughter, they became heirlooms of great sentimental value. The chest appealed to all countries of Europe and was brought to America by the first settlers, and bridal chests were among the first pieces of early Colonial furniture constructed.

Player-Piano Rolls

Where it used to take weeks to make the 65-note roll for a player-piano it now takes but a very few minutes for a good player to make the modern player-piano roll. On this roll only the theme is played by hand. The orchestra and jazz notes are inserted by a mechanical process. The paper on which these rolls are made is 33 1-3 per cent rope or fiber. The perforated paper roll was invented in 1887 and the perforated music sheet appeared as early as 1842, when a Frenchman patented it in France.

VELVET FOR BOUDOIR APPAREL; PATTERNED CLOTH FOR COATS

VELVET, considered in days of yore as only a seasonal fabric, presents itself as eligible for future all-the-year-round service. Not, however, without good reason, for so exquisitely supple and sheerlike is modern velvet weave, its plea for recognition as a desirable spring, summer, winter and autumn weave receives a most hearty indorsement of the mode.

The grace and loveliness of chiffon velvet is especially attuned to boudoir luxury, which accounts for its exploitation this season for making of the handsomer negligees.

Another enchanting entrant into the domain of boudoir apparel is colorful ostrich trimming. Combine pastel-colored velvet and ostrich and 'tis a theme for poets and not mere writers of fashion. Irresistible effects such as the alluring dishabille in the picture reveals, enter largely into the mode's program of negligees. This adorable robe is fashioned of rose-tinted velvet, the kind so supple one can almost "draw it through a ring." Pinkest of pink ostrich flues border it all about. Why not buy chiffon velvet and make a negligee just like this one? It is very simple in its styling and to purchase it ready-made, from an exclusive boulevard shop would indeed cost a "pretty penny."

In Ostrich Trimmed Velvet.

Trimmed with marabou are lovely lounging robes of changeable quilted satin. The tendency is also for heavily embroidered satins, also charmeuse in lovely colorings, both vivid and pastel.

Some interesting negligees among latest arrivals for spring are of a type that closely resembles a daytime frock. These are mostly of sheer materials and they are profusely shirred and plaited. Often they have linings of crepe matched to the collar and cuffs and quite frequently they are reversible.

Very advance is the idea of dress-length negligees styled of pastel-colored sheer fabrics and posed over slips in matched coloring.

Hand-painted velvet, also chiffon, has become a very popular theme in the realm of the negligee—which is "a word to the wise" brush artist, amateur or professional.

As entertaining and fascinating as a picture book are the new worsteds and silk which have been woven and printed for coming spring and summer wear. The mode is waxing enthusiastic over woolen weaves and silk prints whose patterns-series of new silks which breathe a patriotic spirit in that they depict views on actual scenic beauty of our own national parks and other renowned spots of nature's wonderland in America. All-American are the new cloakings which are in Indian colorings and design. In search for ideas stylists have studied and faithfully adopted motifs as they appear in Indian blankets, moccasins and general articles of their wear and adornment.

Scenic charm of Chinese inspiration characterizes the chic sports coat here pictured as worn by Myrna Loy in her latest film production. The vivid-patterned cloth carries an unusual smartness by reason of its all-over scenic design achieved in dull red, beige and caramel tones, with bands of solid velours.

Smart Sports Coat.

The fact that this coat maintains a straightline silhouette adds to its style prestige. A snug-fitting collar of natural lynx surmounts this coat.

Jacquard woolen patternings are especially handsome and versatile this season, which all goes to show we are at the threshold of an era of exceeding great interest as far as novelty fabrics are concerned.

BE SURE OF Your VISION

So great is the percentage of those having defective vision and so frequently are the ill-effects attributed to some other cause, that you can not afford to merely guess that your eyes are normal. Even if you are now wearing glasses, changes may have occurred in your eyes that make new glasses necessary. Some common indications are; Headache, Pains in the eyeball, Pains at base of the brain, A pressure at top of the head, Eyes smart, and Burn, Subject to dizzy spells. If you are wearing glasses they may need changing and if you are not, it may be you should be wearing them. Come in and without obligation on your part, we will give you an Honest Examination and a Square Deal.

Civic pride is but local patriotism. In fact, civic pride is the most common manifestation of patriotism. Every citizen of a community feels a sense of responsibility toward that community, and who is convinced that his community is superior to all others, is a patriot who differs from the national patriot only in that he has brought his patriotism home to himself.

Exclusive "Practical" Fashions

EXCLUSIVE Practical Fashions are presented to our readers this month in a new illustrative form as will be immediately recognized. We think the new style of drawings will give an even clearer idea than formerly of the attractiveness, style and utility of the patterns as well as of the wide selection. An increased number of styles is shown in order to give some garment for every member of the family and for all occasions. In the accompanying selection are afternoon and evening dresses and tailored costumes as well as a dress for a school girl and one for a child. There is also an afternoon frock especially designed for the stout or portly woman. All in all a varied selection of styles each splendidly adapted to its purpose and of the latest and most desirable designs for the home dressmaker.

924—Afternoon Frock of satin or crepe, trimmed with silver beading or embroidery. Requires for size 42, five yds. of 40-in. material. For each additional size add one-quarter yd. Sizes 42 to 48.

AGED SPENCERVILLE CITIZEN PASSES

Samuel Zehner, son of David and Elizabeth Zehner, was born October 22, 1851 at Ashland, O., and died February 18, 1927 at his home in Spencerville at the age of 75 years, 3 months and 26 days.

His parents moved to Indiana and located on a farm east of Spencerville when he was two and a half years old. Here he spent the early part of his life then he moved to his present home.

The deceased was the last of a family of four children who were a healthy, long lifed family.

He was married to Matilda Houk September 19, 1876. To this union were born one son and two daughters, the son dying in infancy. He was also preceded in death by his wife, one daughter, Mrs. Iva Hollabaugh and one granddaughter.

He will be missed by many for he was always a good neighbor and a well respected citizen.

He is survived by one daughter, Mrs. Stella Moore, two son-in-laws, one granddaughter also several neices and nephews.

The funeral services were conducted by the Rev. A. K. Mumma of Harlan, Indiana, in the Spencerville Lutheran church and burial in White City cemetery. Roscoe Walter, funeral director.

LODGE NOTES

February and March are designated as "restoration months" by the Supreme Lodge of Knights of Pythias and activities set in motion have as an objective the restoration of a half million members who have been suspended in the last few years for the non-payment of dues. The program is being directed by Supreme Chancellor Richard S. Witte, Milwaukee, Wis., and every lodge in the United States and Canada is expected to make a concerted effort by establishing personal contact with all former members. Coincident with this campaign the lodges are asked to institute a drive to conserve membership by collecting dues early in the year.

The drive is on, and the following have been appointed as "Restoration" committee to look after delinquent and suspended members of St. Joe Lodge, No. 400:—R. W. Brodbeck, F. R. Leighty and D. B. Ridgway.

BEATITUDES IN HEALTH

Blessed are they with good health for they are able to work for the Lord.

Blessed are they who have good digestion for they do rejoice in their work.

Blessed are they who have good circulation for theirs is the kingdom of good health.

Blessed are they who have mercy on themselves and wear enough clothing.

Blessed are they who have pure blood for their children shall call them blessed.

Blessed are they who do not take tantrums, their family shall praise them and their neighbors be glad.

Blessed are they who have an abundance of self-control, they are a joy forever.

Blessed are they who defile not the temple of God, which temple ye are.

Blessed are ye when men shall revile you and make all manner of fun of you for not attending everything going on in your community, but rest a little.

Blessed are ye that do not overeat, for your days shall be long upon the earth.

Blessed are ye who obey the Heavenly Father and take good care of your teeth.

Blessed are ye that take time to eat and do not bolt your food, for ye shall eat this time next year.

Blessed are ye that eat a balanced ration for you shall be strong to do your work.

Blessed are ye that have a good heart not weakened by drugs and poisons.

Blessed are ye that have good strong muscles for you can do hard work.

Blessed are ye, yea, thrice blessed, that have good nerves that go to sleep when you put them to bed.

Rejoice and be exceeding glad for great is your reward when you do not drink, smoke or chew.

Ye are the hope of the nation but if you have lost your health wherewith shall the nation hope. Henceforth we carry you out and bury you.

Health is the light of the world. Let your light so shine before the people that they may see your good health and glorify youd Father which is in Heaven.—Mrs. Odessa Rayle.

Franklin Never Atheist

Benjamin Franklin was not an atheist. According to one authority, for a while during his youth he was a skeptic, and he was never an orthodox Christian. His attitude, however, when he died was such that today he would be classed with the "liberal Christians."

The hero we love in this land today
Is the hero who lightens some fellow man's load—
Who makes of the mountains some pleasant highway,
Who makes of the desert some blossoming road.

HERE ARE SOME CAKES

The following simple cake is easy to make and if baked in a loaf will keep moist until eaten:

One-Egg Plum Cake.—Separate the white and yolk of an egg. Cream four tablespoonfuls of butter with one cupful of sugar, add three-fourths of a cupful of milk and one and one-half cupfuls of flour sifted with one teaspoonful of cream of tartar and one-half teaspoonful of soda, stir in the yolk and add one-half cupful of raisins dusted with flour, then fold in the stiffly beaten white of egg and bake in a moderate oven.

Nut Cake.—Cream one cupful of butter, add one and one-half cupfuls of sugar, add alternately with two cupfuls of flour sifted with one teaspoonful of cream of tartar and half a teaspoonful of soda, and three-fourths of a cupful of milk. When well mixed and throughly beaten add the whites of four eggs beaten stiff. Flavor to taste, add a cupful of nut meats and bake in a sheet.

Chocolate Cake.—Cream one tablespoonful of butter, add one cupful of sugar, one cupful of sweet milk, two eggs and one cupful of flour sifted with two teaspoonfuls of baking powder, flavor with a teaspoonful of vanilla. To half a cake of grated chocolate add one-half cupful of milk, boil up, remove from the heat and add one cupful of sugar and the yolk of an egg; stir into the cake. Bake in layers and use a boiled frosting for filling.

Simple Chocolate Layer Cake.—Cream one-fourth cupful of butter, add one cupful of brown sugar, one-quarter cupful of sour milk, one teaspoonful of soda, one teaspoonful of vanilla, one egg and one and one-fourth cupfuls of flour. Dissolve two squares of chocolate in one-half cupful of hot water and stir into the cake the last thing. Bake in layers and put together with orange filling, using the usual cream filling with the grated rind and juice of an orange added.

A Few Soups.

"Soups should be seen, not heard."

Cream of Pea Soup.—Put through a colander one pint of cooked green peas, add a quart of milk, a bay leaf and a teaspoonful of onion juice. Melt two tablespoonfuls of butter, add two tablespoonfuls of flour, and when well cooked add to the first mixture. Remove the bay leaf and season.

Potato Soup.—Cook three potatoes until soft. Scald a pint of milk with two slices of onion. Beat the potatoes with a wire whisk and add to the milk. Cook together one tablespoonful each of butter and flour, adding pepper, salt and celery salt to taste, add to the milk and potatoes and garnish with two teaspoonfuls of parsley just before serving.

Rice Soup.—Cook a slice of onion in one cupful of hot milk, add one-half cupful of the rice water saved from cooking rice, add a tablespoonful of butter and flour cooked together, season to taste, add the milk and rice water and serve garnished with minced parsley.

Cream of Tomato Soup.—Melt three tablespoonfuls of butter in a saucepan, add three and one-half tablespoonfuls of flour, cook until well blended, then add two cupfuls of strained tomato, one-fourth teaspoonful of soda, one teaspoonful of salt and one tablespoonful of chopped onion. Cook five minutes and then add one and one-half cupfuls of hot milk.

Celery Soup.—Take three cupfuls of celery cut into bits and cooked in water to cover until soft enough to put through a coarse sieve. Scald two and one-half cupfuls of milk with a slice of onion, remove the onion and add the celery. Bind with three tablespoonfuls each of butter and flour cooked together. Season with salt and pepper. Serve with croutons or crisp crackers.

Pea Soup.—Take one can of marrow-fat peas, add two teaspoonfuls of sugar, a slice of onion, a pint of milk and a cupful of water, using the liquor from the peas. Add seasoning of salt and pepper and bind with two tablespoonfuls each of butter and flour cooked together. Remove the onion when adding the flour and butter.

Good Health Requires Good Elimination.

ONE can't feel well when there is a retention of poisonous waste in the blood. This is called a toxic condition, and is apt to make one tired, dull and languid. Other symptoms are sometimes toxic backaches and headaches. That the kidneys are not functioning properly is often shown by scanty or burning passage of secretions. Many people have learned the value of Doan's Pills, a stimulant diuretic, when the kidneys seem functionally inactive. Everywhere one finds enthusiastic Doan's users. Ask your neighbor!

A QUICKER WAY TO END COLDS!

To quickly break up a cough or cold, it is necessary to do two things:
1—Get rid of phlegm. 2—Heal irritation in lining of throat, chest and bronchial tubes.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral accomplishes this by its powerful double action. It cuts away phlegm because its medication penetrates through and through the linings of throat, chest and bronchial tubes. You feel almost instant relief, all the way down. Then it is absorbed into the irritated membranes, just as ink soaks into a blotter. As its soothing, healing properties are absorbed by the membranes themselves, it stops the cough, breaks up the cold and brings prompt, lasting relief.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral is hospital-proved. Prescribed by physicians. Pleasant to taste. 60c and, twice the quantity, $1.00, at all druggists.

DR. W. B. CALDWELL AT THE AGE OF 83

"Purges" and "Physics" Bad for Old Folks

While Dr. W. B. Caldwell, of Monticello, Ill., a practicing physician for 47 years, knew that constipation was the curse of advancing age, he did not believe that a "purge" or "physic" every little while was necessary.

To him, it seemed cruel that so many constipated old people had to be kept constantly "stirred up" and half sick by taking cathartic pills, tablets, salts, calomel and nasty oils.

In Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin he discovered a laxative which helps to "regulate" the bowels of old folks. Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin not only causes a gentle, easy bowel movement but each dose helps to strengthen the bowel muscles, shortly establishing natural "regularity." It never gripes, sickens, or upsets the system. Besides, it is absolutely harmless and pleasant to take.

If past fifty, buy a large 60-cent bottle at any store that sells medicine or write "Syrup Pepsin," Monticello, Illinois, for a FREE SAMPLE BOTTLE and just see for yourself.

Now Off the "Ragged Edge" Stages Quick Return to Health

Art Sauer's illness now but a memory. For three months he suffered agony. Nervousness and knife-like pains made life a misery. Tanlac quickly helped him

Arthur Sauer lives at 1034 Berwin Street, Indianapolis. Several years ago he was working at high pressure when his health snapped. Here are his own words: "Plugging away without let-up, day in and day out, put me on the down grade, on the ragged edge of a bad breakdown. My hand trembled like a leaf and I had knife-like pains in my back, chest and kidneys. That's not natural for a young man, but I had to prod and urge myself to go to work.

"I could not rest and when I did close my eyes had disagreeable dreams. Rest time or meal time did me no good. I grew pale and weak and wasted away to a shadow of my old self. The lightest food caused heartburn, palpitation and bloating.

"Since taking Tanlac all these distressing symptoms have vanished. I am my old optimistic self again, have nerves like steel and eat and sleep like a lumber-jack. My weight has jumped from 135 to 153. Tanlac has given me so much strength and stamina that work is play to me and I can only heap praise on this wonderful tonic. It only took three bottles to fix me up. That was a year ago and I've been in fine shape ever since."

Mr. Sauer is but one of many thousands Tanlac has helped. Over a hundred thousand grateful friends have written to tell us what Tanlac did for them. It is nature's own tonic, made from herbs, roots and barks.

Lesson for February 27

MAKING THE COMMUNITY CHRISTIAN

Temperance Lesson.

LESSON TEXT—Gal. 5:13-25.
GOLDEN TEXT—Have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them.
PRIMARY TOPIC—Serving One Another by Love.
JUNIOR TOPIC—The Law of Love.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Self-Control for the Sake of Others.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Works of Darkness and Works of Light.

The only way this can be called a way of making the world Christian is by leading the individuals to a personal knowledge and experience of Jesus Christ and entering therefore into the power of the new life. Having shown in chapters 3 and 4 of this epistle that the believer is free from the law as a means of justification, Paul makes practical application of this doctrine. The divine way of making the community Christian is to secure the regeneration of the individual. The way to destroy the work of the devil is through the sonship of believers.

I. Christian Freedom (vv. 13-15).

1. It is not an occasion to the "flesh" (v. 13).

Liberty is not license. The notion that when one is free from the law, that he is free from constraint, is wickedly erroneous. License of the flesh means not merely the indulgence of the flesh in actual material sins, but in the expression of a self-centered life in biting and devouring one another (v. 15).

2. By love serving one another (v. 13).

Freedom from the Mosaic law means slavery to the law of love.

The emerging from bondage through Christ is the passing into a sphere of life in which all the powers should act under the dominion of the true motive, love—Morgan. Love thus becomes the fulfillment of the law.

II. Walking in the Spirit (vv. 16-18).

This discloses the secret of how a life of service to another can be lived. The governing principle in the life of a believer is the Holy Spirit. Walking in the Spirit results in:

1. Loving service to others.
2. Victory over the flesh (vv. 16, 17).

By the flesh is meant the corrupt nature of man expressing itself in the realm of sense and self. The renewed man is two men between which is going on a mortal conflict. The Christian must choose between good and evil. When he chooses the evil, the Holy Spirit opposes, and when he chooses the good the flesh opposes. Notwithstanding this deadly conflict, victory is sure.

III. The Works of the Flesh (vv. 19-21).

By works of the flesh is meant the operation of the carnal nature. The one who chooses to live according to the impulse and desires of his natural heart will be practicing the following sins:

1. Sensuality (v. 19).
2. Irreligion (v. 20).

These acts take place in the realm of the spirit and are:

(1) Idolatry, which means the worshiping of idols.

(2) Witchcraft or sorcery. This means all dealing with the occult.

3. Sins of temper (vv. 20, 21).

These take place in the sphere of the mind and are:

(1) Hatred. (2) Variance, which means strife and contention. (3) Emulations, jealousy. (4) Wrath, bursts of passion. (5) Seditions, factions in the state. (6) Heresies, factions in the church. (7) Envyings. (8) Murders.

4. Sins of excess (v. 21).

(1) Drunkenness. This means indulgence in intoxicating liquors.

(2) Revelings, acts of dissipation under the influence of intoxicants. Those who practice such sins shall be excluded from the kingdom of God.

IV. The Fruit of the Spirit (vv. 22-24).

This indicates action in the realm of life. The product of the Holy Spirit indwelling the believer.

(1) Love to God and man. (2) Joy, glad-heartedness because of what God has done. (3) Peace with God and fellowman. (4) Long-suffering, taking insult and injury without murmuring. (5) Gentleness, kindness to others. (6) Goodness, doing good to others. (7) Faith, believes God and commits all to Him. (8) Meekness, submission to God. (9) Temperance, self-control in all things. Against such there is no law.

Underrating Value

Oh, do we not too frequently underrate the value of the promises of God? They were made to us and we should trust them, for they are as true as the God by Whom they were made.—Echoes.

Exceedingly Difficult

It is exceedingly difficult for one's heart to bow and say, "I will be nothing but a lamb," but that is our place, for the Lord says, "Vengeance is mine."—Echoes

THE DAIRY

GIVE SEPARATOR GOOD ATTENTION

When using a cream separator on the farm the following precepts should be observed:

1. Put the separator in a bright dairy room that can be easily cleaned and that is always free from odors of all kinds.

2. Set the machine perfectly level and bolt it to a solid foundation, preferably concrete.

3. Oil thoroughly each time it is used.

4. Be sure that the parts are properly assembled, then start the machine gently and slowly.

5. Maintain the proper speed and keep an even pressure on the handle at all times.

6. When separation is completed flush the bowl with a quart of skim milk or warm water, but do not let skim milk or water run into the cream.

7. Having set the cream into cold water and disposed of the skim milk, take the bowl apart and rinse with lukewarm water.

8. Using hot water, washing powder and brushes, scrub all parts that come in contact with the milk.

9. Rinse with hot water, then place in boiling water or steam sterilizer for a few minutes and hang up to dry.

10. Wipe frame of separator.

The necessity for thoroughly cleaning and scalding the separator every time it is used cannot be too greatly emphasized. Cream from an unclean separator has very poor keeping qualities, soon develops a decided "off flavor" and becomes second grade. Cream of this kind brings financial loss to the purchaser whether he is selling it on a quality basis or not. Poor cream makes poor butter and poor butter returns a low price to the producer, whether creamery is cooperative or otherwise.

The financial loss caused by unclean separators is frequently not fully appreciated because it is indirect; it is, however, none the less real. Good business management of the dairy, therefore, demands that the separator be thoroughly cleaned each time it is used.—W. H. Woodjey, College of Agriculture, University of Arkansas.

Veal of Prime Quality Result of Suckling Calf

Veal of the primest quality is the result of permitting the calves to suckle their dams, in which event it is necessary to allow them to have all the new milk they will consume, and often it is necessary to supply an additional nurse cow or else permit the calf to nurse his dam and partake in addition all the whole milk supply from other sources.

The addition of grain to the ration would really convert the product into beef rather than veal, for generally veal is the outcome of feeding calves exclusively on new milk. Much of the meat that is sold for veal is obtained from animals that have been fed some grain, but it is not difficult to realize the distinction if you have opportunity to compare the two products. Hence, your calf that is nine months old must be fed for beef rather than veal, for the prime veal calves run around 175 to 200 pounds.

Water Supply for Cows During Winter Months

G. A. Williams, dairy extension specialist of Purdue university, has just issued a timely hint regarding the water supply for cows during the winter months. He states that 87 per cent of milk is water, and that a cow needs about three pounds of water for every pound of milk produced. Water cannot be absorbed through the system until it is warmed up to approximately the temperature of the cow's body, and if the heat for warming this water must be supplied by the cow herself, she will use a great deal of the energy from the feed furnished her for this purpose, rather than for the production of milk. For that reason, it is highly important that the cow be given ample supplies of pure water at moderate temperatures.

Dairy Facts

Any good salt gives results, but the cows should have it at all times.

There is nothing much smaller in actual dimensions than bacteria, but they can make the careful milkman plenty of trouble.

* * *

Thoroughly clean and disinfect all your utensils with which the milk comes in contact. The disinfecting may be done with boiling water.

Variation in the producing ability of cows ranges up to as much as 200 pounds of butterfat a year. Testing eliminates the poor producers.

Construction of wider roads is not only a great convenience, but a necessity to farm progress in all directions.

* * *

Pumpkins are an excellent feed for dairy cows. Two and one-half tons of pumpkins are equal in feeding value to one ton of good corn silage, according to official tests.

POULTRY FACTS

WATCH DETAILS TO OBTAIN EGGS

Attention to a few details is often the deciding factor in making profits in the poultry business.

"For instance," continues L. M. Black, New Jersey extension specialist in poultry, "if good results in egg production are to be expected during cold weather, it is quite important that the pullets be confined to the laying houses. Cold wintry blasts and frozen ground are not conducive to high egg yields.

"Allow each bird four square feet of floor space in a well-ventilated house, and furnish a good ration containing plenty of green feed. The birds will respond by filling the egg basket with a high-priced product.

"Another detail is the buying of baby chicks for next spring's delivery. 'Do it early' is a good slogan, and its observance may save a disappointment. Many a poultryman has been forced to accept chicks hatched later than he desired just because he did not place his order with his hatchery man at an early date.

"The thoughtful poultrymen also determine now whether or not their incubators and brooder stoves are in readiness for the coming hatching season. Now is the time to inspect this equipment carefully and order any necessary parts that will increase the possibilities of a successful season. Thermometers and control wafers should be tested to see that they record varying temperatures accurately. It may even be advisable to set up the machines and brooders and run a short test on them. Above all, do not neglect them until the last moment and awake to find yourself unprepared to start off at the opening of the hatching season."

Success in Incubating Duck and Turkey Eggs

To get the best possible success in incubating duck and turkey eggs, secure a hygrometer. Keep it in the egg chamber during the entire hatch, the same as you do with the thermometer. By examining the eggs occasionally to determine the size of the air cell you will be able to know whether or not the moisture content is running about the right degree. If the eggs dry down too fast, it is an indication that too much moisture is being evaporated from the egg content. On the other hand, if the air cell remains small without much of a detectable change such often indicates too much moisture. A hygrometer can be purchased from most any incubator manufacturer or poultry supply house.

Egg-Laying Period May Be Profitably Prolonged

The fact that hens lay heavily in March and April as a result of nature's urge, causes many poultrymen to overlook giving the hens the sort of feed and care that will prolong the laying period. Nature has been preparing the hen for laying in the spring, and her body has a store of protein—the scarcest egg-making element. But a hen that lays five eggs a week will lay eggs in two months to equal one-half her own weight, and unless her feed has replaced this protein, she will lay little after May 15 or June 1. To avoid the slump, feed her heavily with rich protein feed at this time, and she will have the necessary egg elements to go right ahead during the summer.

Mothers for Guinea Chicks

Ordinary hens make the best mothers for guinea chicks. Given warm, dry weather, and plenty of range, turkey and guinea hens can be used successfully, but should a rain or heavy dew occur the mother turkey or guinea hen is apt to drag the chicks through the wet grass, and many are lost from becoming wet and chilled. Neither turkey nor guinea hens can be induced to seek the shelter of the coop at night and during storms, but will remain out in the fields to hover their broods.

Potatoes for Ducks

Boiled potatoes are good food for ducks and should be mashed and mixed in the damp mash to make about 25 per cent of the total. The rest of the mash should remain the same as if the potatoes were not used. It is best to put the roofing on the outside of the building, both on the sides and roof, because it then keeps the moisture out. On a single wall house we would put two or three thicknesses of tar paper between the boards and the roofing.

Reduce Winter Mortality

One of the best ways to reduce the per cent of mortality in a poultry flock is to cull out all undersized late-hatched pullets. They are the type of birds most subject to colds and roup, and will seldom lay many eggs until the late winter production begins to reduce the prices. The remedy is to buy enough chicks, or hatch enough at home, so the pullet flock can be thoroughly culled, and yet leave enough to fill the capacity of the plant.

Moving Mountain Range

The Andes—the longest mountain system on earth, covering a line of 4,500 miles in length—are moving! So claims Dr. Bailey Willis, a noted American scientist.

Moreover, Doctor Willis traces the cause of earthquakes in Japan and Chile to the heaving of this mass of gold and silver and copper, of lead and iron and tin, and of earth and stones. It was the moving of the Californian mountains that caused the San Francisco earthquake in 1906, adds Doctor Willis.

If Kidneys Act Bad Take Salts

Says Backache Often Means You Have Not Been Drinking Enough Water

When you wake up with backache and dull misery in the kidney region it may mean that you have been eating foods which create acids, says a well-known authority. An excess of such acids overworks the kidneys in their effort to filter it from the blood and they become sort of paralyzed and loggy. When your kidneys get sluggish and clog you must relieve them, like you relieve your bowels, removing all the body's urinous waste, else you have backache, sick headache, dizzy spells; your stomach sours, tongue is coated and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges. The urine is cloudy, full of sediment, channels often get sore, water scalds and you are obliged to seek relief two or three times during the night.

Either consult a good, reliable physician at once or get from your pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys may then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for years to help clean and stimulate sluggish kidneys, also to neutralize acids in the system, so they no longer irritate, thus often relieving bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive, cannot injure and makes a delightful, effervescent lithia-water drink. Drink lots of soft water.

BOBBY SEES THE POINT AND MAKES ONE

Anna L. Newson

Bobby's father was a traveling salesman, and was away from home when the first Father and Son's banquet was given in Fairview. Bobby's mother, however, was a member of the division of the Methodist Ladies' Union that served the banquet. She secured one of the little white-and-gold cards that were given to all of the boys who were present telling: "The Kind of Boys We Like."

One sentence read: "The boy who is polite to old people," and another one: "The boy who is never unkind to animals,' and a third: "The boy who is always ready to help anyone in need," and so on till ten or twelve of the things we like in boys were mentioned. Mrs. Jackson placed the card in the space between the glass and frame of Bobby's mirror, where he could see it every time he dressed or undressed, or combed his hair.

"What's the idea, Mother? What have I been doing now?" This Bobby asked at breakfast the next morning.

"Nothing that I know of, Son. Why?"

"Well, I saw another sermonette stuck up on my dresser glass," said Bobby, trying to put a note of contempt into a voice that would not register contempt.

"Nothing of the kind," said his mother, "I only thought that as long as you did not have an opportunity to go to the banquet, you would like to have one of the cards the other boys received to remind you of the things people like to see in boys. It is not always easy to do the thing that is kindest and most courteous and that will, in the end, bring us happiness as well as friends. You do want it just as a reminder, don't you?"

"O, yes, I guess so," answered Bobby, trying to conceal a grin.

Mrs. Jackson did not take the "Mother's Home Magazine," but Bobby saw a copy at the house of a neighbor, and after reading something that seemed to interest him, he asked Mr. Walter if he could borrow it for a few days. She gladly gave her consent.

The next evening when Mrs. Jackson went into her room to go to bed, there was the magazine, suspended by a string from a pin in the moulding, so that the page Bobby wished her to see was between her and her mirror. She took the magazine down and read the article through. The title was: "Seven Sins Against Childhood."

The next morning at breakfast, Mrs. Jackson asked, "What have I done now?" and Bobby sheepishly answered, "I don't know. Why?"

"Well, I saw another sermonette in front of my dresser last night. I see the point, Son, and realise that I, too, make mistakes, but from now on, let's not think of anything that may help us as a sermonette. Let's try in every way to help each other to avoid the things that are unlovely, and to strive for the things that are fine and wholesome."

"All right, Mother," promised Bobby soberly.

HIS JOB IS TO KEEP INMATES HAPPY

M. E. Leighty Tells Garrett Lions Club of His Problems and Achievements

M. E. Leighty, superintendent of the DeKalb county infirmary, is attached to his work and makes an effort to keep the unfortunate people in his custody contented and happy, he told the Garrett Lions club Tuesday in an afternoon luncheon talk at the Ueber hotel.

Of the forty-one inmates at the present time, Mr. Leighty said six of them are bedfast with paralysis. Others who are able to get about, however, help to do the farm and housework. They assist in keeping the house and premises clean and orderly and a comfortable place to live. Good food is served three times a day. The big house is lighted by electricity, there is running water and modern heating and sanitary facilities.

Mr. Leighty said the inmates like to have visitors, but they should not come to sympathise, but to make them happy. Mr. Leighty added that he appreciates the visit of people from over the county so that they can see what he is trying to do. He said he has the hearty co-operation of the county commissioners and the township trustees and of the public generally and that a wonderful work is being done in taking care of the county's unfortunates.

Only deserving cases are admitted, said Mr. Leighty. He makes an investigation and when the relatives ought to be looking after the case admittance is denied. Thus, he said, the county is saved many thousands of dollars.

The county has invested $150,000 in the infirmary property. There is 320 acres of land and the barn is one of the finest in this section of the state. At the present time 38 head of cattle are being fed out, but Mr. Leighty is of the opinion that it would be wise to put about thirty cows on the farm instead and employ a good cow man. During the ten years he has been in charge of the farm Mr. Leighty said he has turned into the county treasury $55,000 from the sale of the products of the farm, besides the vast amount consumed by the inmates. When the money is needed to purchase clothing, fuel and other supplies, the apropriation made annually by the county council is drawn upon.

Home Bureau Activities

The Concord Township Ladies Home Bureau met in the gymnasium Friday, February 18. The meeting was opened by the president and two songs sung by the members. The entertainment committee then took charge and gave an instrumental solo by Mrs. Cora Curie and several contests. Prof. Case then gave a short talk on the girls club work for the coming summer, and asked the co-operation of the Home Bureau n furthering his plans for the club. Mrs. Widney read a carefully prepared paper on poultry, which was followed by an instructive talk by Mrs. Goldsmith of Spencerville, her subject also being poultry. Mrs. Nellie Lindley led the discussion which followed. Twenty members responded to roll call with "how I start my baby chicks."

One new member was added Mrs. Winnie Poper. Two guests were present, Mrs. Langwell from Bloomington, Ind., and Mrs. Goldsmith from Spencerville. The committee in charge then invited the ladies over to the Domestic Science room where a delicious luncheon was served.

The new programs for the year are now ready, are neat and attractively bound and contain the information you will need to help keep you in touch with the work from month to month, secure your copy and consult it often.

The March meeting will be held the 18th at the home of Mrs. Anne Sechler. Mrs. Edith Cole, Mrs. Eva Wasson, Mrs. Mary Carpenter and the hostess constitute the committee.

THAT IS QUEER

Call a girl a chick and she smiles. Call her a hen and she howls. Call a young woman a witch and she is pleased; call an old woman a witch and she is indignant. Call a girl a kitten and she rather likes it; call a woman a cat and she hates you. Women are queer.

If you call a man a gay dog, it will flatter him; call him a pup, a hound, or a cur, and he will try to alter the map of your face. He doesn't mind being called a bull or a bear, yet he will object to being mentioned as a calf or a cub. Men are queer, too.

To Clean Enamel

Highly-enameled surfaces should be wiped with a soft cloth wrung out of tepid water. A small quantity of neutral white soap solution in the water can be used if there are fingermarks or other grease spots, but do not use a strong soap, for alkalis are ruinous.

CLOVER SEED SHORTAGE AND USE OF SUBSTITUTE CROPS

The clover seed situation for the entire corn belt, including Indiana, is the most serious in years. The production of seed in this region the last two years has been much below normal because of weather conditions. According to reliable estimates the total clover seed supply is thirty million pounds below the normal supply of about 100 million pounds. Importations are not making up the shortage.

The shortage in seed is reflected in prices that are much higher than a year ago. Red clover seed is $6.75 per hundred higher, alsike $9.50 per hundred and sweet clover $4.25 per hundred higher. Grimm alfalfa seed is cheaper than a year ago and common alfalfa at the same price level. There is a good supply of both alfalfa and sweet clover seed at reasonable prices, altho both crops are below last year's production.

It is certain that not enough clover seed is available to supply the needs and many farmers who wait until the last minute will find the market bare or seed so high as to be prohibitive. Under these conditions should farmers use more alfalfa and sweet clover seed? Yes, under conditions that normally favor good stands of clover. Alfalfa on the Wilson farm at Purdue has been as satisfactory in a short rotation as red clover and more certain of a stand; especially in drouthy seasons. This is on land that does not respond profitably to the application of limestone. In central Indiana and generally on bottom lands, soil conditions similar to these are found. Alfalfa or sweet clover may be used on the black and clay soils of Central Indiana as a part of the clover seed mixture, the amount depending upon the acidity of the soil or the ration of acid areas to sweet soil to be seeded. Where clover fails under normal conditions it will be useless to expect results from either alfalfa or sweet clover. Before seeding these crops soil acidity tests should be made wherever possible.

If alfalfa or sweet clover are seeded it is very important that the seed be inoculated. Pure cultures or soil from inoculated fields may be used. Alfalfa or sweet clover may be seeded in the small grain the same as the clovers either on frozen ground or by drilling in as soon as the soil is fit to work.

Where alfalfa is seeded in the short rotation in place of clover, common alfalfa seed from the northwest is recommended because of the relatively low seed price. If it is to be left for a few years Grimm or other hardy strains are recommended.

Alfalfa should be used where the principal need is for hay and sweet clover should be used if the need is for pasture or soil improvment. Sacrificed sweet clover should be used at the rate of 12 pounds per acre and common alfalfa 12 to 15 pounds per acre. On acid soils where liming is not feasible soy beans should be depended upon for legume hay. A good seed supply is available and prices are favorable to its extended use in Indiana.

WHAT EDUCATION IS REALLY WORTH

Edsel Ford, in command of the great business built up by his father, wishes he had more education.

"I consider it a mistake," he says, "that I left school when I did and went to work without going to college. I was left to make my own choice and have never quarreled with it. But I hope my own boys will go to college."

Here is powerful testimony to the value of a good education. Young Ford is a very successful business man. He has one of the biggest jobs in the world, and is getting away with it. He says, without any appearance of boastfulness, that he can't imagine the business growing too big for him to handle. But he realizes he could handle it more easily and effectively if he knew various things that he might have learned if he had gone to school a few years longer. He realizes, too, that his whole life might have been enriched by the wider, deeper interests which education developes. He sees that there are two kinds of wealth, and money cannot buy the kind that comes through mental application in the free, plastic years of youth.

MRS. JOSEPH FERGUSON DIES

The death of Mrs. Cora Ferguson, the wife of a well known minister in the United Brethren Church and a former evangelist who resides north-east of Auburn about two and a half miles, occurred Thursday morning at 9 o'clock from a stroke of apoplexy.

Mrs. Ferguson had been in poor health for a number of years. Five years ago her health failed while Rev. Ferguson was stationed at Hicksville as pastor of the United Brethreen Church and the atter resigned in order to devote his attention to his sick companion. They returned to DeKalb county to the farm where Mrs. Ferguson passed away.

The funeral was held from the Church of God, Saturday forenoon.

Etiquette Constant Problem

Proper manners are set by the leaders of every age in history, and yet "high society" is hardly less guilty than the lower social orders at times. The situation became so bad during the reign of Louis XIV in France, who had poor eating manners, that books of instruction were issued then as now. At one time the fork was held "indecent."

Looking Back For 50 Years

Fifty years ago this year a national banking system was started in the United States.

Today Americans have on deposit and subject to check or drawing interest the unheardof sum of $60,000,000,000

If you do not own a part of that vast sum, you can still profit through the experience of others. You can still make your dollars wor for you—and a working dollar is the only dollar worth having.

Or you can do your boy or girl a wonderful favor by taking even one dollar and starting an account for them—and then teaching them how thrift and saving has made thee United States the most prosperous, the most contented, the happiest nation in the world.

VOL. XLI. ST. JOE, DeKALB COUNTY, INDIANA, THURSDAY, MARCH 3, 1927 NUMBER 9

AGED JACKSON TOWNSHIP LADY DIES

Mrs. Elizabeth Bishop passed away at her home near Spencerville Wednesday evening of last week at 7 o'clock, following several weeks' illness from complications. Mrs. Bishop, daughter of James and Isbelle Means, was born in Jackson township June 6, 1842, and was married April 5, 1886 to Willis Bishop who preceded her in death. She is survived by two daughters, Mrs. John Kruse of two and one-half miles east of Auburn and Miss Jane Bishop who resided with her mother, and also one step-son M. W. Bishop of southeast of Auburn. One stepson, Elmer Bishop, is deceased.

Funeral services were held at Rehoboth church where she was a member, Saturday afternoon at 1:30 o'clock with Rev. A. A. Irelan, pastor, officiating. Interment was made in the mausoleum in Woodlawn cemetery in Auburn.

DEKALB COUNTY TO RECEIVE $19,267

Share of State Gasoline Tax Nearly $5,000 More Than Last Year

DeKalb county will receive $19,627. 08 in the annual distribution of the state gasoline tax, effective March 1. This is an increase from $14.978.58.

The total tax of the state to be distributed is $3,033,599.43. Counties will receive a total of $2,275,199.57 and cities and towns $758,399.86.

Each county by the terms of the law gets $12,365.22, plus $28.59 a mile for improved roads, while cities and towns with a population of 1,782,757 will get .4254 cents per capita.

DeKalb county now has 254 miles of improved roads, having added 53.75 miles during the past year in each township follows:

Butler township, 5.75; Jackson, Concord, Smithfield and Keyser, 1 each; Spencer, 2.75; Newville, 4.75; Stafford, 3; Wilmington, 1.375; Fairfield, 3.375; Franklin, 2.25; Troy, 2; Union, .75, and Richland and Grant, none.

The total mileage in each township at the present time is as follows:

Butler township, 23.25; Jackson, 29.375; Concord, 15.50 Spencer, 16,75; Newville, 10.50; Stafford, 4; Wilmington, 35; Richland, 12.625; Fairfield, 19.75; Smithfield 19.75; Franklin, 21.75; Troy, 7; Keyser, 19.50; Grant, 4.25; Union, 15.

NOT ALLOWED TO DISC CORN FIELDS

There will be no discing of oats in this spring, according to the federal men in this county, who are putting out the corn borer information as given by the government, a practice which has long been followed by many farmers. In all quarantine districts the program is to plow under all stalks and stubbles or burn same in order to lessen the chances of the borer that lived over the winter. This rule is not optional but compulsory and where there are no tenants, the work will be hired done and charged on the tax duplicate against the land.

These facts were revealed at the meeting at the school house Monday evening at a mass meeting.

Besides corn borer pictures being shown a number of reels on fertilizer were also shown.

E. W. SAYLOR DIES

Monday morning, the life of E. W. Saylor came to an end, at his home north of town, after an illness of several months, although not confined to his bed. He was a well known farmer of DeKalb county and had reached the age of sixty years. Funeral was held Wednesday afternoon from the home.

SECTION THREE ENTERTAINED LADIES

The Ladies Literary Club spent a most enjoyable evening February 23rd at the home of Mrs. Lora Leighty. The evening's entertainment was in charge of Section No. 3 and the spirit of Washington's anniversary predominated both in the decorations and program, which partook of the nature of a radio program broadcasted from "Somewhere in America." The artists presented were all stars and we are all requesting a return program.

The tables each seating four were very pretty with their minature cherry trees and tiny flags, and the refreshments delightful.

Those assisting the committee in maaking this a success were, Messrs Roy Koch, Harvey Hull, Merritt Sechler, Elgin Curie and Fred B. Leighty, to whom the ladies gave a vote of thanks for their favors and much appreciation of the committee's work.

TIME FOR FILING EXEMPTION BLANKS

Mortgage exemptions can now be filed with editor of St. Joe News, from March 1st, to first Monday in May. In making this application please bring tax receipt showing description of property upon which exemption is to apply.

The law provides that an owner of real estate having a mortgage on his property can by filing a certified statement, obtain a credit not to exceed one-half the assessed valuation or more than $1,000, if the indebtedness existed prior to March 1 of this year.

Hundreds of real estate owners take advantage of the law and in most cases the exemption is the maximum allowed. The total amount applying on the taxes in DeKalb county payable this year is $1,397,300.

The description of the property, the name of the holder of the mortgage and its amount must be set out in the blank and the instrument must be sworn to before a notary public.

During the same period, soldiers' exemptions can be filed. The law provides that any soldier or sailor who served three months or more in the armies or navies of the United States during the Civil or Mexican war, and who shall have reached the age of 70 years or more, may have $1,000 deducted from his taxable property on the first day of April of each year where the total assessed value of his taxables does not exceed $5,000, as shown from the tax duplicate for that year, and the balance shall constitute the basis for taxation.

Also the widow of any soldier or sailor who served three months or more in the armies or navies of the United States during the Civil or Mexican war, and who shall have reached the age of 60 years or more, may have $1,000 deducted from her taxable property on the first day of April of each year where the total assessed value of her taxables does not exceed $5,000 as shown from the tax duplicate for that year, and the balance shall constitute the basis for taxation.

Soldiers and sailors of other wars and their widows have the same rights, but must have the qualifications as to age, etc.

Soldiers exemptions can also be cared for by The News.

PLEADS GUILTY THEFT OF TIRES

Stalling of Car in Snowdrift Resulted in Arrest of Raymond Buckio at St. Joe

During a basket ball game at the St. Joe school house recently the spare tires were stolen from automobiles owned by Fred Hart and Robert L. Morr that were parked nearby.

The identity of the thief remained a mystery until Saturday night. Glenn Hart, a son of Fred Hart, encountered a Chevrolet stuck in a snowdrift east of St. Joe and helped to push it out. The driver was Raymond Buckio, 23, a farm hand employed by George Hart in Spencer township. Glenn's attention was attracted to a tire on the car that he identified as the one taken from his father's machine.

It was found that Buckio was using the tire taken from Mr. Morr's car and Mr. Morr and Mr. Hart filed affidavits against him for petit larceny. He was arrested at St. Joe Sunday by Sheriff John C. Armstrong and his deputy, Arden Morr, and plead guilty when arraigned Monday in Justice E. A. McClintock's court in Auburn. He was bound over to the DeKalb circuit court under $500 bond on each charge. In default of bail, he was remanded to the county jail.

Howard S. Grimm, deputy prosecuting attorney, represented the state at the hearing.

ASKING FOR A NEW COMMISSION

The house of representatives gave the Public Service commission a body blow when a resolution was introduced Monday asking for Governor Jackson to dismiss the present personnel and appoint new.

Two of the reasons for asking a change are given as follows:

1—That the majority of the citizens of Indiana demand regulation of public utilities in the interest of consumers.

2—That operations of the present commission have been in the interest of the utilities.

St. Joe has had some experience with the commission and their action has been very satisfactory with exception of allowing the telephone company an increase in rates without an assurance of an improved line service and more prompt repairing.

FOND PARENTS

He—Then, darling, it's all settled we are to elope at mid-night?

She—Yes, sweetheart.

He—Are you sure you can get your trunk packed on time?

She—Oh, yes. Papa and mama are both going to help me.

JURORS DRAWN FOR NEW TERM OF COURT

May Start Next Monday, or if Bill Passes In Legislature, on April 4

While a question exists as to whether a term of court will start in DeKalb county next Monday, the bill making DeKalb county a separate circuit has not yet been finally passed by the state house of representatives and therefore the regular jury drawing was held Monday morning in the office of County Clerk J. Harvey Knauer.

Jury Commissioners Clyde Hart and Herman L. Brown were present. By direction of Judge Endicott, only six names were drawn for talesmen, instead of the usual twenty-four. If the court bill is enacted into law this week, there will be no court in DeKalb county until April 4.

The drawing resulted as follows:

GRAND JURY

Harry Foster, Fairfield.
George Diehl, Richland.
Frank M. Teeters, Keyser.
William Zehender, Jackson.
Roy Gibford, Richland.
Ralph J. Lucy, Stafford.

JIMMY RISK WINS SECOND PLACE IN CONTEST

Horseshow fans of this community will be interested to learn that Jimmy Risk of Montpelier, Ind., who gave a wonderful exhibition of skill in Garrett last season, won second place in the international contest held at St. Petersburg, Fla., beginning February 14 and ending February 23.

C. C. Davis of Columbus, O., won first place. Davis also won the championship title in 1922 and 1924.

Putt Mossman of Eldora, Iowa, who pitched against Risk at the Garrett gymnasium last September, landed in fifth place.

At no time during the contest did anyone equal the record of 88 ringers in one game made by Risk in Garrett last September.

TO ELECT OFFICERS FRIDAY EVENING

Pursuant to call made by President, Ed Storer and Secretary, Wilbur Yeiser, of the Fish and Game Association, the annual election of officers will take place Friday evening at the Town Hall. All members are asked to be present and help in the organization and plan for the year's work.

By Giving the Eyes Needed Attention

Many a person has increased the volume and value of his work. When this result is so easy to secure, and when the rewards are so sure, isn't it surprising that so many neglect their eyes? But thousands of folks are below par in efficiency just because their eyes do not function as they should. We can help such people.

A Good Man To Know

IN every town and in every line of retail business you are pretty sure to find at least one merchant who chooses his lines of merchandise on strict quality standards. He believes in giving unusual value to his customers for every penny they spend with him.

This merchant may not always have the cheapest goods. But he is pretty sure to have the leading lines—those with service records that prove their sterling quality. This merchant is always on the lookout for the kind of goods that give greater satisfaction, last longer, and prove cheapest in the long run.

In placing our line of Red Top Steel Fence Posts we try to select this kind of dealer. Usually he's looking for us too. We know that such dealers will naturally attract buyers who believe in quality merchandise and thus do a bigger business for themselves and for us.

When we say that your local Red Top Steel Post dealer is a good man for you to know it's only another way of pointing out the merchant who is prepared to give greater value in fence posts and undoubtedly in other lines too.

Plan of Conwell Memorial "Temple of Learning"

Here is the sketch plan of the proposed skyscraper university to be erected in Philadelphia as a new home for Temple university and a lasting monument to its founder, Russell H. Conwell, whose memory was honored at special services in all the churches of the country on "Russell H. Conwell Memorial Sunday," February 13.

Terrific Storm Sweeps California

California, especially the southern part, was devastated by a storm of extreme violence that lasted over a period of several days and resulted in severe floods. A score or more of lives were lost and the property damage was reported as very heavy. The above photograph shows the streets of Los Angeles converted into rivers. Hundreds of persons were driven from their homes there and in other cities. The city of San Diego was virtually isolated and many refugees had to be taken from there by steamers.

WATER PROBLEM IN THE LAUNDRY

Always Contains More or Less Foreign Material.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

If every home could have an abundance of perfectly pure water the home laundry problem would be greatly simplified, according to the United States Department of Agriculture. However, as found in its natural state water always contains more or less dissolved and suspended material. This may consist of harmless gases, and dirt that the rain has carried down in its passage through the air, or mineral compounds of various kinds which the water has acquired as it passed through the soil or over its surface. The latter include a large number of substances, among the most important being compounds of sodium, calcium, magnesium, and iron.

Common salt is the most widely distributed of the sodium compounds, and though ordinary soap will not lather in very salty water, such a condition would be exceptional in most communities. Salt water is not termed "hard."

Compounds of calcium, magnesium, and iron react with soap, forming new material which do not dissolve in water and appear as a sticky, unpleasant scum. Thus not only is the soap destroyed and rendered no longer available for making suds, but the scum settles on the clothes in specks or gives them a gray tinge. Such water is spoken of as "hard." In the case of iron compounds often brown stains also are left.

Distillation is the best method of rendering water that is excessively alkaline, acid, or salty fit for use, but it is impractical in the home. Filtration and softening by means of boiling or by the addition of chemicals are the usual methods used in the household. The use of washing soda is an inexpensive method of treating hard water. One pound of soda is dissolved in one quart of water, and two tablespoonfuls of this solution used for each gallon of water. Other chemicals may also be used. The greatest difficulty in using them is determining quantity required by the degree of hardness of the water. This information can usually be obtained from the nearest water laboratory and if the trouble experienced is a permanent condition, it will be worth while to have a sample analyzed. Detailed information about treating hard and other waters to make them satisfactory for laundry purposes are given in a new bulletin on home laundering recently issued by the United States Department of Agriculture.

Reason for Malnutrition Among American Children

The outstanding reason for malnutrition among American children is bad food habits. In no other country is the child allowed to decide for himself what he will or will not eat as he does here. Of course, there are some parents who do not provide the right food for their children because of lack of knowledge of food values or failure to understand the importance of the information at hand. In any case bad food habits, whether based on the child's choosiness or the parent's lack of information, can be corrected only through education of the parents. And this means education in the right direction—in what are the proper foods for children and how can they be trained to eat wholesome foods.

Pralines Found to Be Delicious Confection

In New Orleans, at the heart of the sugar-cane region and the pecan-nut plantations, the delicious confection known as "pralines" can be bought on almost every street. But, fortunately, one does not have to travel to the Far South to taste pralines. If you can get pecan nuts you can make them at home as easily as you make fudge. The United States Department of Agriculture tells you how.

Pralines.

4 cupfuls sugar. 1 teaspoonful salt
3 cupfuls pecan nut meats 2 cupfuls cream.

Make a sirup out of three cupfuls of the sugar and the cream. Carmelize the other cupful of sugar, and into it pour all the sirup at one time, stirring constantly and rapidly. Add the salt. Boil the mixture to the soft-ball stage without stirring. Pour into a flat pan and cool. Beat to a creamy consistency. Add the nuts. Form into flat round cakes about three inches in diameter on a waxed paper. This amount makes about twenty cakes. During the creaming process the nuts must be added before it shows signs of hardening so they will be well mixed. As this candy is to be in the form of round cakes and not in a mass, one must work quickly to prevent the hardening of the candy before the cakes are placed on the waxed paper.

Delicious Preserve Can Be Prepared in Winter

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

All the materials for this preserve can be bought during the winter months. The actual cooking can be done in about half an hour, and the family is sure to be pleased with the result. The recipe has been tested by the bureau of home economics.

Dried Apricot and Pineapple Jam.

1 pound dried apricots.
2 No. 3 cans sliced pineapple.
3 1-3 cupfuls sugar.

Wash the apricots thoroughly, then soak overnight in one pint of water. In the morning chop the apricots and add one cupful of the sugar. Drain the pineapple, cut it in very small pieces, and cook with the remaining two and two-third cupfuls of sugar for twenty minutes. Add the apricots and cook for twenty-five minutes. The pineapple holds its shape but the apricots soften, and the mixture has the consistency of thick jam. Seal while hot in clean sterilized jars. This recipe makes a little over three pints.

Substitute for Eggs

Sometimes when a cake recipe calls for a number of eggs it may be more economical to substitute baking powder and milk for one or two of the eggs. If you wish to do so, two tablespoonfuls of milk and one-half teaspoonful of baking powder can be used as the equivalent of one egg in some cake recipes. When eggs are scarce sponge cakes can be changed this way so as not to use so many eggs.

CURTAINS ADD COLOR TO THE SUN ROOM

Curtains for a Sun Room.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

A sun room with its many windows is a special problem in curtaining. Simple curtains are needed to cut down glare, but at the same time let in plenty of sunshine. Curtains are also an excellent way to add color and gayety to the sun room. Shades of bright-colored awning cloth or striped linen mounted on spring rollers are suggested by the United States Department of Agriculture for the sun room. Such shades are decorative enough to take the place of curtains and have all the needed utility features. Also these materials with colors fast to light are likely to be more durable than lighter weight materials. The sun's rays have an injurious effect on many textile fibers as well as on dyes. That is the reason many curtain materials get tender and go to pieces on laundering after they have been up for a comparatively short time. In a sun room curtain materials are put to a particularly hard test.

The sun room in the picture, which was taken by the United States Department of Agriculture, has awning cloth shades. The background of the cloth is natural linen color, and the stripes are blue, green, orange and reddish violet. These colors blend with the rug in two shades of blue and orange. The cushions on the wicker chairs and the porch swing repeat these same colors in various combinations. An attractive addition over each shade would be a scalloped-fitted valance of the same material deep enough to cover the roller. The valance should be made on buckram or beaver board and nailed to a board four inches wide resting on top of the window frame.

STORY FROM THE START

Claude Melnotte Dabbs returns from New York to his general grocery in Peace Valley, Pa. With him comes Ned Carter, a stranger, whom Dabbs introduces to "Aunt Lyddy," his old housekeeper, as a nephew.

"Meaning well's one thing; doing well's another." But Aunt Lyddy smiled back at him so that all sting was taken from the cautious sentence. "Now, what you two rampaging idiots mean coming home at this hour of the night, springing a brand-new relation on me and with no notice to get his room ready for him?"

"Oh, go along, Aunt Lyddy! You can fix the room next to mine in a jiffy while Ned and I are finishing a bite of your lemon pie."

"Pie?. Finishing my pie! Who said a word about pie? Who said I made any pie?"

"I did. I smell it."

Aunt Lyddy laughed. "He smelled it. Boy," turning to Ned, "did you ever hear tell of a man like that? Set right down, both of you, and I'll have that pie brung on the table before you can get your hands out of your pockets."

"I don't think I can eat anything more," Ned began as she left the room. "Remember our dinner on the train."

"Jiminy! Even if you weren't hungry, could you resist that?"

Two highly decorated plates, borne by Aunt Lyddy on an old japanned tray, held the largest, thickest and most delicious looking pieces of lemon meringue pie that Ned had ever seen. Aunt Lyddy placed before them the remainder of the pie, a pitcher of cold milk, and a large wedge of cheese. With a hearty, "Enjoy yourselves, boys, while I fix Ned's room," she left them.

Presently Ned could hear her, as she tramped about the next room to mine" presumably "fixing it." By that time he had tasted Aunt Lyddy's pie. Though she trod like an elephant, yes, even though she snored, he knew now that he would always love her.

"Good, ain't it, Ned?" Mr. Dabbs asked, as Ned took a second helping. Ned nodded, mentally noting that whatever he might have to suffer from country table manners in others, Mr. Dabbs would never offend.

"Aunt Lyddy likes you or she'd never put out the whole pie," Dabbs offered.

"How can you tell? You practically hurled me down her throat."

"Down Aunt Lyddy's throat! You don't know her. Why, I couldn't make that woman give you any more than a measly little bit of pie if she didn't cotton to you. Aunt Lyddy's a fine woman, but a terror for having her way. She isn't my own aunt. She's an old friend of my mother's and when Mom died Aunt Lyddy made up her mind that I needed looking after and just came along and took possession. I couldn't get along without her now."

Aunt Lyddy returned, announcing that the room was ready and advised Ned to "turn in early." He followed her along the hall. The "room next mine" was a big, airy room, overlooking the garden at the side of the house and far removed from the noises of the shop. Its deep-seated windows indicated the age of the house. The furniture was really old, consequently good and unobtrusive, and the wall paper was a deep cream, with a little border of yellow roses.

The old four-poster looked inviting. Aunt Lyddy padded heavily away and Ned leaned out of the window, conscious of the soft, sweet, damp smell of a springtime garden.

As he left the window he was conscious of voices near him. But the room was empty, so was the hall outside his door. After a moment he concluded that the voices came through an old-fashioned hot-air register in the floor of his room. He heard Aunt Lyddy say:

"Claude Dabbs, I'm a dear lover of truth, and the truth I'll have out of you if it takes me all night. My usual hour for bed is 8:30 sharp, and here it is nearly ten, and gifts of amethyst brooches, though pretty and tastefully chosen I must say, won't blind me to my duty. I've ever been a kinda gardeen for your home since your Mom died. Who's this young man?"

"Why, he's a young fellow I met up with in New York. He's been in the army—just discharged. The very name of Peace Valley sort of hypnotized him. He can't settle down to anything yet, so I asked him down here to look around and—"

"Suffering Saints!" Aunt Lyddy's voice rose to a sort of wail, then sank again. "Where'd you meet him?"

"Well—I was walking on Riverside drive and—"

"You picked him up! A bum! A park bum!" Aunt Lyddy exclaimed with conviction. "You probably treated him to that there awful swell suit."

Ned, his hand on the register waiting a fitting opportunity to close it unheard, noted that she refused to listen to Claude's protests.

"I know you," Aunt Lyddy announced, "and nothing you do ought to surprise me now, but I declare by Peter and Paul it does at times. Well, don't say no more, nor fix up any pleasant kinda half-lies for me. You don't know nothing about him, and there were some awful bad characters got in the army. We're lucky if our throats ain't slit by morning. I'll lock my room and bolt it, tonight!"

Feeling that he had heard enough, Ned closed the register quietly, sure that the sound would be unnoticed as Aunt Lyddy trod heavily out into the hall.

CHAPTER II

Ned woke next morning to the sound of life and activity below stairs. His first thought was that he was back in camp again. Then he remembered. His watch told him it was seven. Thinking he would surprise Claude Dabbs by his early rising, Ned dressed leisurely and went downstairs.

Aunt Lyddy greeted him without enthusiasm, informing him dryly that Claude had been up for two hours.

"Suffering Saints, You're More Than Welcome."

He was at that moment superintending the unloading of the new Irish potatoes.

The food was delicious, and Aunt Lyddy waited and watched over him at the breakfast table, anticipating his wants as though he were a small boy; yet Ned felt that he was delaying the important affairs of the household.

Still with the air that he was company, Aunt Lyddy informed him: "Claude said to take the car and sail around, or do anything you've a mind to do."

"Thanks, Aunt Lyddy, but I think I'll help Uncle Claude in the shop."

Aunt Lyddy's eyes showed surprise and approval.

"Claude Dabbs could do with a little help," she announced. "There's a many leans on Claude, and but few as offers a shoulder themselves occasionally. Not that Claude needs anything to lean on, but the fact that a shoulder is handy kinda keeps a man from feeling lonely. I'm going to say this—you don't look as though you needed any special help to get along in this world. Maybe you do. I ain't inquiring. All I'm saying is that never, since I've known him, has Claude Dabbs shown such admiration for any living soul as I've seen him show for you. Well," her apron waved, expressing what she was unable to put into words, "let me see you worthy, young man. Let me see you worthy."

"Aunt Lyddy," Ned put down his knife and fork, "I don't know that I am exactly worthy, but I will be frank, Uncle Claude can't begin to have the admiration for me that I have for him. Why, he saved my pocketbook, possibly my life, the other night. I was in the park just off Riverside drive, weary of everything. I'd stretched myself along the bench to look at the stars and think out what I should do with my life, when along came Claude Dabbs and sat down on me."

Aunt Lyddy giggled in a peculiarly young and girlish way.

"Of course that went a long way toward making us friendly. While we were sauntering along talking we were ordered to put up our hands. If army experience has taught me anything it is to be leery of pistols in unknown hands. Mine went up at once. But C. M. stumbled accidentally, I thought, which brought him a few steps in front of me, and nearer the other fellow. Of course, C. M.'s hands went up as he recovered his balance. What I didn't notice, nor did the other fellow until it was too late, was that one of his feet went up, too. First thing I knew the other man was down and Claude was sitting on him!"

"And by Peter and Paul, I'll wager Claude never called a policeman!" broke in Aunt Lyddy.

Ned shook his head. "We just took his pistol and blackjack and left him. He was knocked out—stunned by the fall."

They surveyed each other, smiling.

"I suppose you'd like to know a little more about me," Ned said tentatively.

"I kin wait till you tell Claude."

"Claude knows something, and you'll be miserable until you know as much, won't you?"

Again Aunt Lyddy gave her peculiar giggle, and settled back in her chair.

"Get it off'n your chest, son, and don't smooth over nothing for me."

"I drove an ambulance for six months before this country got into the fight," Ned began. "I was hurt a little and had to come home. Tried for a commission in our army when I got well. Had to throw over everything to do it. Family and—girl. My girl was in with a professional pacifist bunch. Da—confound them all, they acted as though the rest of us liked war, and had arranged it for our own amusement.

"Well, after I got my commission I was ordered down South to one of our camps. I went, thinking I was on my way to France. When I got there, they told me my resignation had been accepted. I swore by everything holy and unholy that I had never resigned. They listened, bored but patient, and repeated that my resignation had been accepted. I'd better see Washington, I was told.

"I went to Washington. They told me there my resignation had been accepted. I told them I'd never resigned. They listened and said 'maybe not,' but the War department was too busy to bother about my case, just then, or to correct any mistake, if there was a mistake. They advised me tenderly to go home like a good boy, and, maybe some time later, they'd look me up. I went swearing. I had no home to go to. So I enlisted in a New York regiment and was discharged some two or three weeks ago."

"Satan's trumpets!" Aunt Lyddy exclaimed. "The armistic signed in November and they kep' you in all this time. Well, you certainly got the rough end of the stick. As for that girl, wisht I had her within arm's reach. I'd shake a little sense into her."

"Oh, she's all right," Ned said a little awkwardly. "Don't make the mistake of treating me like a returned hero, because I never got over. I was railroaded to an O. T. C., and kept there. I never got over.

"You can understand, can't you, why the very name of Peace Valley drew me like a charm, and you'll forgive my coming here in this way?"

"Suffering Saints! You're more'n welcome to stay, and as far as I'm concerned—" Aunt Lyddy broke off suddenly, and trod heavily kitchenward, for Claude Dabs had entered from the office.

"Morning. It does me good to see you sitting there as though you were home."

"I feel at home," Ned assured him.

"Hope you really do." Claude's scrutiny was wistful but understanding. "What's the program? Want one of the cars?"

"The cars! Why, C. M., for a simple country grocer, aren't you rather 'laying it on'?"

Claude blushed. "Old Man Wolf hasn't knocked at the grocery door for a number of years—a considerable number. But what good's my money to me, if no one shares it?"

Ned rose and put a hand on Claude's shoulder. "Did you adopt me to squander your surplus? I thought you were going to make me work!"

Does anything about our young friend, Ned Carter, strike you as peculiar? He seems all right, yet—

Siwash Thought Name a Little Premature

Seattle missed being named New York merely because, about seventy-five years ago, a Siwash grinned at the pretentiousness of the name painted above the store door at a tiny settlement. The present city of 400,000 people was founded by Lee Terry of Watertown, N. Y., who had an ambition to travel to the Northwest and with the farmers, homesteaders, lumbermen and millers there, found a city that should rival Manhattan. He had intended to settle south of the sound, but met the original booster for Puget sound and was persuaded to change his destination to Elliot bay. When his first cabin was finished he shaved off a pine plank and proudly christened his embryo city, "New York." Terry sat in his store one day wishing for customers when a Siwash, blanketed against the cold, stalked up and looked at the sign above the door. The Indian grinned. "Huh! New York—Alki," meaning "New York—by and by." Whereupon Terry sighed and changed the name to Alki. And Alki point is a part of Seattle today.—New York Times.

Lark at Exhibition

A lark's nest, with three eggs, was found behind a stand prior to the opening of the Sussex (England) agricultural exhibition.

The bird was not molested, but gained free access to the nest through a wired device, thoughtfully fixed by bird lovers. Although thousands of visitors came in close proximity, the bird sat undisturbed on the nest till the eggs were hatched.

Lesson for March 6

SHARING THE GOOD NEWS

LESSON TEXT—Acts 8:4-8; II Cor. 5:14-20.

GOLDEN TEXT—Ye shall be my witnesses.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Telling Others About Jesus.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Winning Recruits for Christ's Army.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Telling Our Companions About Jesus.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Christian Evangelism: Duty, Method, Results.

I. Preaching Everywhere (Acts 8:4).

Following the stoning of Stephen, the enemies of the Lord were more active than ever in their efforts to stamp out the new faith. With Saul as their leader they dragged men and women from their homes and imprisoned those who confessed Christ. The devil overreached himself in this for this persecution scattered the believers everywhere and they preached the gospel as they went. The time had now come for this witness-bearing to extend beyond Jerusalem as the Lord had commanded. The Lord permitted this persecution so as to scatter them.

II. Philip Preaching the Gospel in Samaria (vv. 5-8).

Philip was one of the seven so-called deacons. He was not an apostle, nor a minister in the accepted sense of that term, but a layman. He is the only man called an evangelist in the New Testament. He is an example of what a devoted layman can do in preaching the gospel in the evangelization of the world. He went to the city of Samaria and preached Christ, showing that the purpose of God included these despised people. The fact that Philip preached Christ unto these people shows that the true evangelist's message is Jesus Christ. He did not preach Christ as an ethical teacher or an example merely, but Christ as the Savior from sin through the substitutionary offering of Himself on the cross. This is shown by the fact that he preached Christ to the eunuch from the fifty-third chapter of Isaiah. He not only preached Christ as the Savior from the guilt of sin, but from the power of sin as symbolized in baptism, which means not only identification with Christ in His death, but to arise in the power of His resurrection, to walk in newness of life. Then, too, according to verse 12 he preached Christ as a reigning king. Philip's preaching was fruitful, for multitudes believed his message which was accompanied with numerous miracles. He cast out unclean spirits, healed the palsied and the lame. Great joy accompanied the reception of the gospel by these Samaritans.

III. Paul an Example of a True Preacher of the Gospel (II Cor. 5:9-20).

1. His supreme aim was to please God (v. 9).

To live or to die was immaterial to him if his service was but acceptable to God. This transcendent aim was strengthened by the consciousness that every one must one day stand before the judgment seat of Christ. This aim explains Paul's devotion.

2. His consciousness of responsibility (v. 11).

His sense of solemn responsibility was the explanation of Paul's behavior. Some thought that he was mentally unbalanced. His knowledge of God's holy nature and of man's sinful condition moved him earnestly to persuade men to be reconciled to God. No one who knows God's terror will be half-hearted in his ministry.

3. He was constrained by the love of Christ (v. 14).

This means that he was governed by Christ's love. Ministerial devotion is the expression of reciprocal love. Christ's supreme love was expressed in His death for us. Our love in return is expressed in our devotion to Him.

4. Consciousness of the God-wrought change in Him (v. 17).

It was because he was wrought upon by God and was therefore a new creature that he sought to do His will.

5. The content of the gospel which he preached (vv. 18, 19).

The reconciliation of God through the death of Christ was his central message. In the incarnation God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto Himself.

6. Paul was an ambassador sent from God to appeal to the world to be reconciled unto God (v. 20).

He was the ambassador from the high court of heaven sent to this rebellious world. In a real sense, every Christian minister is occupying the same position.

A car for every purse and purpose

THIS YEAR the General Motors line is an imposing Automobile Show in itself. Here is every style of body. Every type of design — four cylinder, six cylinder, eight cylinder. Every improvement. Every price, from the Chevrolet touring car at $510 to the Cadillac with special coach work at $9,000. A car for every purse and purpose.

Every one of the models now on display is different and distinguished. Yet two unifying characteristics bind them all together:

1 EVERY CLOSED BODY is by Fisher. The quality of all body workmanship is Fisher quality, and because Fisher is owned by General Motors, every resource has been utilized to make body and chassis a perfect quality unit.

2 EVERY MODEL has shared in the advantages of General Motors research, purchasing standards and Proving Ground tests; and in the economies of volume production. Dollar for dollar you will buy more value in the car you select because of General Motors quality and the public's purchase of more than 1,200,000 General Motors cars last year.

THE GENERAL MOTORS line is a direct result of the record-breaking patronage accorded by the public in 1926. The economies which this great volume afforded have been passed on to the car purchaser in even better quality. With great pride we invite you to inspect these new General Motors cars and to make one or more of them your own.

The locomotive repairmen were laid off because of work being transferred to the Columbus, Ohio, shops. Car repairmen on the Fort Wayne and other divisions are suspended in accordance with the new concentration of work policy of the company.

The receiving of bids for the construction of the C. O. Metcalf and others drain, starting one-fourth of a mile east of Moore and ending in the St. Joe river a distance of ten miles in the open part, together with seven laterals at an estimated cost of $27,137.16 drew a great crowd of biders to Auburn Saturday. The bids were received in the office of County Surveyor Calvin Kain. Gaston Foote of Jacksonville, Ill., bid $17,410 on the open part of the drain on the dredge work and John Dedner of Fort Wayne, $9,300 on the tile laterals. Clyde Walb of LaGrange bid on the entire drain at ten per cent less than the estimates, or $24,423.45. After deliberating on the proposals, all bids were rejected.

It was really a criminal act on the part of the senate to defeat the bill that would have made Wednesday afternoon of each week during June, July and August a legal holiday for banks and trust companies in cities having a population of not more than 35,000. The vote was 39 to 6, and now the poor bankers will have to stay in and let the golf games go.

Morris Yeiser, son of L. W. Yeiser of South Whitley, upset in a Ford coupe near the Ed Bowers home, west of town, Sunday evening, breaking the glass out on the drivers' side. The machine, which was evidently traveling too fast for the slippery condition of the roads, struck a rut or a stone and the rest took place so quickly that the boy, who was alone and escaped injury, doesn't know just how it all happened.

The death of James Wilbur Manes, residing at the corner of Jackson and Fourth streets Monday morning at 1:30 o'clock, came as a shock to a wide circle of acquaintances in Auburn. Mr. Manes died at the Sacred Heart hospital at Garrett where he was taken Sunday afternoon for an operation for an obstruction of the bowels. He was operated on at 2:30. He rallied and visited with his family. His age and physical condition, however, were such that he was unable to withstand the ordeal through which he had passed. Mr. Manes was known perhaps to more people than any man in business about the court house square. For nearly fourteen years he has operated the pop corn wagon at the corner of Main and Seventh streets. He was a familiar figure to all who passed the business corner in Auburn where he was to be seen every day and night in the summer time.

SPENCERVILLE BREAKS EVEN IN LAST GAME

A. Cs. Win Favors from Woodburn Grades Upset St. Joe

Meet Scott Center in Sectional Saturday

Spencerville, Feb. 28.—Spencerville High School's basket ball team ended its schedule last Friday and Saturday nights, breaking even in two games. On Friday night Spencerville took Leo into camp to the tune of 23-13. The victory over Leo was largely due to H. Beams and Bowser's baskeet shooting and the excellent way in which R. Beams covered the flashy Neuenschwander, Leo forward.

In the preliminaries to the high school game Friday night, the Spencerville grades won a game from the St. Joe grades 36-6. The locals played a complete lineup of second string players throughout most of the second half; the Spencerville A. Cs. defeated the Woodburn Crystal Oils in the second game 28 to 26.

Saturday night the Spencerville high school team lost to Garrett, there, in rough game. This was the high school's last game before the tourney at Angola.

Spencerville's first tournament game will be with Scott Center Steurday afternoon.

PRIZE ESSAY ON LINCOLN AND ROMANCE

Martha Miser, St. Joe Senior Is Awardeed Honors

If you are a loveer of romance and enjoy reading from time to time about this beautiful adventure, which, it seems, is a part of every person's life, it is not necessary to re-read the time-worn pages of Romeo and Juliet, or, to keep apace with the world today, read some of our so called modern romances. Nowhere in all history, modern, or ancient, can one find the record of the love affairs of an individual more realistic, more fascinating, more divinely human, than those of the man who sometimes called "the Savior of our Country," Abraham Lincoln.

The first experience of Lincoln into the romantic world was with Ann Rutledge, and ended in a more or less tragic manner. She was the daughter of James Rutledge, owner of the tavern at New Salem, and he had seen her for the first time on the bank of the river when he was on flatboat. His presistant glances at her almost caused him to run into the bank. Lincoln could hardly be blamed for this action as one vision of this beautiful, slim girl, with corn-silk hair and deep blue eyes, would arouse an irrepressible excitement in most any young gentleman of that day or even today.

Theirs was a simple courtship. Lincoln spent evenings at the tavern conversing with Ann and he wondered why he trembled and cold waves ran over him when she even spoke such simple words as "The corn is getting high, isn't it?" When he was in the blacksmith shop reading by the light of burning shavings, the name of Ann Rutledge would come to him and he would repeat it softly and silently as though it were some holy or sacred name. Need any one tell him that he was in love with Ann? When he was teased about his long arms and legs and "horsey ways" he was heard to remark once "It can't happen that a sucker like me can have a gal like her.

In the year of 1834, Lincoln was a member of the Illinois legislature which met at Vandalia. He left New Salem and Ann Rutledge. Ann had been engaged to marry John McNeil, the wealthy young storekeeper of New Salem. He was now in the east visiting his parents. Lincoln knew that McNeil's real name was McNamar but he had changed his name for convenience.

Few letters passed between John and Ann and his coming was delayed by the death of his father. The questioning people of New Salem whispered that perhaps his love had died, which was no more than they expected from a man who changed his name. Those were hard, trying days for the patient Ann.

Lincoln returned from the legislature in the spring of 1835 and there was a solace in this quiet, comforting man for Ann. She had written John McNamar that she expected release from their engagement, and as she had not received a reply, she felt that the way was clear for the real man of her heart. They planned that she was to go to the academy at Jacksonville while Abraham was to pay his debts and then they were to wed. "The earth was their footstool; the rise of the blood-gold rim of a full moon in the evening was almost too much to live, see, and remember; the sky was a sheaf of blue dreams."

Ann and her family had now moved on a farm and Lincoln had to ride back and forth when he paid Ann a call. August of that summer came and the corn, grass and berries were wilting for the lack of rain. The swallow and martins were few in number. In the homes of these honest, hard working settlers came malaria fever. Lincoln had been up and down with aching bones. Several of his friends died and he helped bury them.

Ann Rutledge lay on her bed fever-burned and dying. There was no human aid for her as she moaned for the man that was uppermost in her thoughts. He was sent for, and the two were left alone for the last time. Two days later, as the sun was sending its mellow shadows over all the earth just before it left the world in darkness, Ann begged Lincoln to carry her to the window where they could watch the sun go down as they had done so much when she was well. As tenderly and as gently as a mother would, Lincoln granted her request and while here, the soul of Ann Rutledge left this world forever.

For days after Ann's death, Lincoln was on the verge of going insane. He mumbled unintelligently to himself and wandered listlessly about the neighborhood, oftentimes going to Ann's grave, seven miles away. There can be no doubt as to the sincerity and depth of Lincoln's love for Ann Rutledge. His friends noticed a marked change in him and he became a silent, meloncholy man.

During the winter that Lincoln was at Vandalia, he met Mary Owens, the dark, curly-haired daughter of a rich farmer in Kentucky. She was visiting her sister, Mrs. Bennett Abe, and this worthy lady was very eager to see them married. It was told that Mary and Lincoln were with a party in the country and when they came to a creek, all of the gentlemen helped their ladies across. However, Lincoln walked ahead and left Mary to cross the best way posible. When she rebuked him for this act of negligence, he politely informed her that he thought she was fully capable of taking care of herself!

Lincoln wrote and asked her to marry him, that is, if she would share his poverty. As further enlightenment on her decision, he advised her not to marry him. They saw each other again but came to no understanding. Lincoln afterwards admitted to a friend that he had jokingly told Mrs. Abe that he would marry her sister from Kentucky, whom he had never seen. In order to keep his word good, he said that he had almost been lost on the matrimonial sea, and he considered his escape a close call.

Lincoln later met Mary Todd, the woman who was destined to be his wife. She came to Illinois to visit her brother-in-law, Nunian Edwards, and while here Lincoln made her acquaintance.

Mary Todd was a plump young woman with soft brown hair. She was rather inclined to be swift and sarcastic in answer to questions propounded to her, and this was the first time any woman had ever crossed Lincoln's path or disputed his word; he liked her arbitrary manner and, as a result, he completely lost his head over her.

During that winter, Lincoln and Stephen A. Douglas took turns escorting Mary to the balls, dances, and other social affairs of the town. When a friend of hers asked which man she intended to marry, she replied, "The one who has the best chance of being president."

In 1840 Lincoln and Mary Todd became engaged, but he was so busy with his political affairs that he could not attend any social functions with her. She flamed with anger and jealousy and went with other men. They made up, fell out, and made up again and the wedding was finally set for New Year's Day, 1841. Everything was in preparedness for the wedding. The cake was baked; the bride waiting for the bridegroom, but, lo! he failed to appear at the appointed hour. He decided at the last minute that he wasn't sure of his love and went instead to legislature.

Finally, Mrs. Simeon Francis, at whose home Mary was staying, perceived the bitter disappointment of the girl that was left waiting on her bridal day so she planned to unite them again. Lincoln was invited to the house where he and Mary were thrust into a room and told emphatically that they should be friends again. Mrs. Francis played the Good Samaritan in this case, as Lincoln and Mary Todd "made up" for the last time.

One day in November 1842 Lincoln met Nunian Edwards on the street and very calmly broke the news that he and Mary were going to be married that evening. He explained that they had set the date early so that he would not have he opportunity to change his mind. They were very quietly wedded that evening at the Edward's home and they never regretted that there was not ample time to have the wedding cake baked and to attend to all the other formalities expected.

Thus comes to an end the final scene in the drama of Lincoln's romances. Again I say, dear reader, did you ever conceive that Abraham Lincoln, the silent, thoughtful, sympathetic man who became the President of this wonderful nation of ours and experienced one of the greatest crises in all history, was the hero in these simple, sweet, enticing romances that were just related?

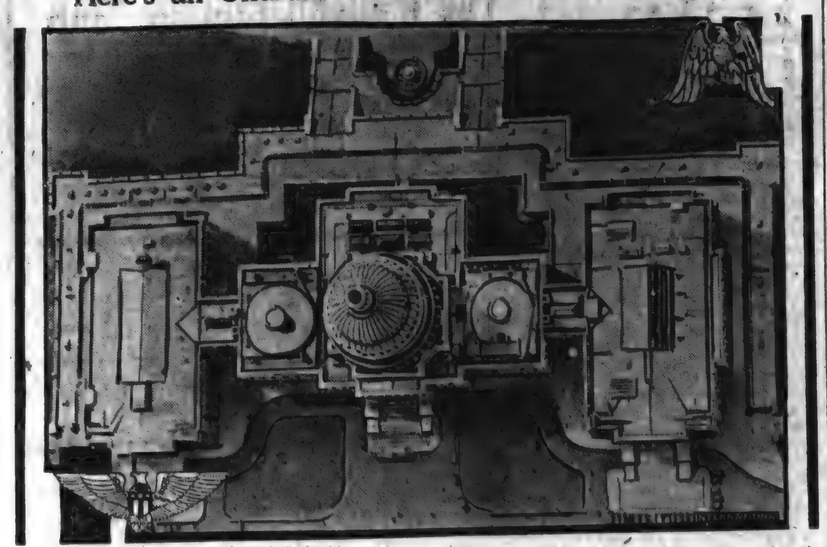
Here's an Unusual View of the National Capitol



Almost perpendicular over the Capitol building, the seat of government of the United States of America, the photographer in an airplane made this unusual view.

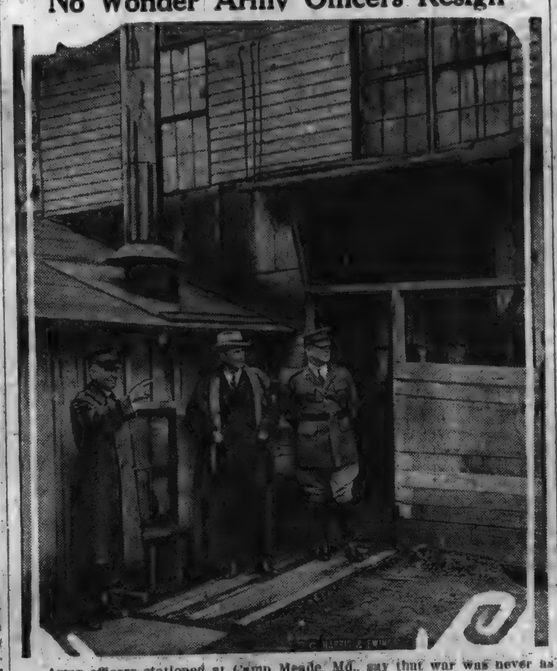
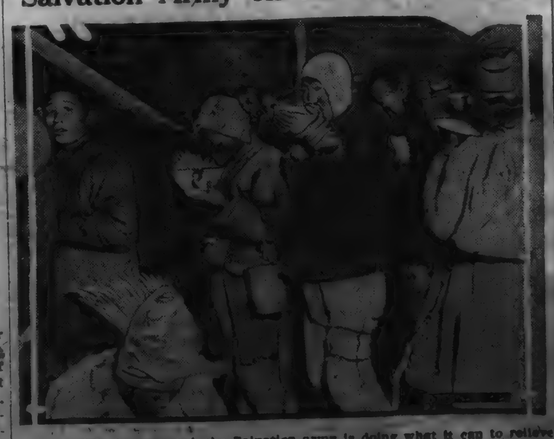
No Wonder Army Officers Resign



Army officers stationed at Camp Meade, Md., say that war was never as bad as living in the ramshackle buildings they are forced to inhabit. With a view to improving the housing conditions of the officers and enlisted men of the army, Hanford MacNider (center), assistant secretary of war, and Maj. Gen. B. F. Cheatham, quartermaster general, visited the camp and are shown at the entrance of the "beautiful mansion" of one of the officers. On the right is Col. O. S. Eskridge, commandant at Camp Meade.

Salvation Army on the Job in China



As might be expected, the Salvation army is doing what it can to relieve the sufferers from the civil war in China. This picture shows starving natives being fed in one of the Salvation army's soup kitchens in the war area.

LIFE'S LITTLE JESTS

Young Preacher (to Profiteering Landlord)—I think it is very unjust that you should raise the rent of my poor parishioners over 100 per cent.

Irate Landlord—If I want to hear you preach, sir, I'll attend your regular services where you should do your preaching.

Young Preacher—You may have that privilege next Sunday. I'm going to preach at the penitentiary.

EXPLAINED

First Fish—How did he get a sunstroke?

Second Fish—Why he got bumped into by a sunfish.

Would I?

I often wonder if, when florists aim
My purse to touch,
A rose by any other name
Would cost as much.

His Wish Probable

They had met at a dance, and from the first moment he knew she was the one girl for him. He thought he might just tell her.

"I could face death dancing with you," he breathed.

"You probably will if my husband sees you," she answered sweetly.—Stray Stories.

Recompense

Jones—Sorry, old man, that my hen got loose and scratched up your garden.

Smith—That's all right; my dog ate your hen.

Jones—Fine! I just ran over your dog and killed him.

Proof Enough

"How do you know that's a telephone girl that Jiggs is waiting on?"

"Because he said 'Hello' and she didn't answer."—Progressive Grocer.

Too Bad

Alice—Don't worry, dear. You have a host of friends.

Mac—Yes, but so few of my friends are hosts.

Safety First

Insurance Agent—What! You're going to drop your insurance?

Jones—Yes, I've quit walking and bought a car.

SMELLED A RAT

"Why did that woman look so much like a cat when her husband came in?"

"I think she smelled a rat."

Aviator's Wife's Joy

The aviator's wife is strange
In one way, no doubt,
Her heart rejoices when she sees
Her husband down and out.

We Suspected It

Husband—My dear, a great physician says women require more sleep than men.

Wife (suspiciously)—Oh?

"Yes, my dear; so—er—perhaps you'd better not wait up for me tonight."

A Keen Observer

Moore—When does a woman really begin to get old?"

Watson—When she moves her mirror into a darker corner of her room.

The Lesser Evil

Editor—Your writings have gained you prosperity, but you have written nothing that will live.

Author—Perhaps not, but when it comes to a question of which shall live, myself or my writings, I never hesitate to sacrifice my writings.

Just Suited Him

Mrs. Wrinklee—My husband is very fond of anything that is antique.

Mrs. Cutter—Well, aren't you a lucky woman, Mrs. Wrinklee?

And then Grandma Danced

Do You Know This Liniment and Salve?

Time-Tried Home Remedies That Have Many Friends in This Neighborhood.

Porter's Pain King is known and used in many homes hereabouts. This old reliable liniment has been making friends since 1871, and the directions wrapped around every bottle tell how to use it for colds, aches and pains, soreness, swollen joints, strained muscles and rheumatic twinges. It seldom fails to drive out the pain.

The Salve is made of the same pure drugs and herbs that go into the liniment and is named Porter's Pain King Salve. Its base is lanoline (pure wool fat), in itself wonderfully healing and soothing. Porter's Pain King Salve is recommended for burns, cuts, bruises, sores, wounds, chapped and cracked skin, boils, felons, itch, cold on the chest, croup, lumbago, varicose veins and piles. Made and guaranteed by The Geo. H. Rundle Co., Piqua, O.

It is said Porter's Pain King, the liniment, and Porter's Pain King Salve, can be found in four of every five homes in this county. How many know all their many uses? Why not read the directions today?

TUBABLE FROCKS FOR GIRLS; REFINED COATS OF TWILL

BECAUSE a dress is of washable material is no reason for slighting it in the making. Indeed, Dame Fashion is seeing to it that cotton-goods frocks receive a flattering attention this season. According to the mode's decree they are to be styled with every intriguing detail genius may devise. This rule applies not only to the making of grown-ups' tubable dresses, but equally so to the fashioning of little folks' ginghams, voiles, prints, dimities, broadcloths, swisses, organdies, linens and the like.

Employing Full-Length Plaits.

One item which the stylist shows a special preference for this season is pearl buttons. They will trim the majority of wash dresses for children during the coming spring and summer months.

Full-length plaits, particularly box-plaits, are being exploited by designers of children's fashions. Even the softer materials such as voile show this influence. This very pretty little voile dress in the picture admirably illustrates the new trend, for it introduces a single box plait at each side of the front, extending from shoulder to hemline. These plaits give a fine excuse for using pearl buttons, for how else could they be held in position at the low waistline? Blue thread, matching the dot in the voile is used to sew on the buttons, also to embroider rows of faggoting at the top line of a series of shirrings which so gracefully supply fullness to the skirt. The scalloped collar and sleeve bands are white, for it is the fashion to trim prints with plain, this season.

Full-length plaited treatments are especially featured in the making of linen dresses, and linens are taking a prominent place among materials for children's apparel.

In the refined coat types of twill, cashmere, rep and suede cloth, which the mode sponsors for spring, smart femininity finds a realization of its dreams for quiet elegance. Exquisite workmanship and selective detail impart a distinctive gentility to these coats of fine cloth. With all their intricacy of fabric manipulation, never at any time are the folds and tucks and tiers and skillful seaming which mark their development, allowed to intrude upon the slenderness of the silhouette.

Black is conspicuous, both in cloth and silk, for the daytime coat which is not a sports model. Navy blue is again to the fore. Tan and beige are very fashionable and several French couturiers are showing a preference for gray.

The most interesting factor in the new coats is their unique and complicated construction which, after all is said and done, leads up to an appearance of Puritan simplicity. Tucks from pin size to extremely broad effects are a means to chic styling, and when not tucks, then broad folds such as find placement on the model in the picture, the same being typical of the spring trend.

We are also to have a spring season of fur collared coats. The furs most in evidence on spring coats are ombre lapin, ermine, gray or beige or white, kolinsky with novel calfskin and shaved lamb and quite a little monkey fur. The fur collar of deep revers, such as this picture shows, is in excellent style.

This Fur Collar in Excellent Style.

At all times the fur is blended to the color of the cloth of the coat, the outstanding exception being the stunning new black-and-white effects. There is nothing in the category of spring coats more effective than the black cloak either of cloth or silk which boasts a white fur collar.

DAIRY FACTS

SOY BEANS GOOD FOR DAIRY COWS

The recent increase in acreage of soy beans throughout the corn belt territory brings up the question as to whether soy beans or soy bean oil meal can be profitably used as a substitute for other protein feeds. It is a commonly recognized fact that the chief problem in feeding the dairy cow is to find a satisfactory protein supplement for the grains which are raised on the farm.

Considerable experimental data has been collected on this subject by different experiment stations. In a feeding test with dairy cows at the Ohio station they found that linseed meal was slightly superior to ground soy beans when fed in equal amounts as a supplement. This finding does not agree with the results at some other stations. At the Iowa station the amount of milk was decreased but the amount of butterfat was slightly increased by using ground soy beans as compared to linseed meal. The South Dakota station found a slight increase in milk but no increase in the amount of fat with soy beans. The Indiana station increased both the milk and the fat by using ground soy beans. The Kansas station found that the use of a large amount of ground soy beans tended to produce soft butterfat.

From these results we may conclude that ground soy beans are equal to linseed meal in the ordinary dairy ration. It is unwise to use them in excess on account of the danger of producing soft butter. In the Ohio experiments the ration fed consisted of equal parts of ground corn, ground oats and ground soy beans for the grain. This grain mixture was fed in the following proportions: One pound of grain, one pound hay and three pounds silage.

Tests with soy bean oil meal have produced similar results to those with ground soy beans. At the Ohio station the soy bean oil meal produced slightly better results in both milk and butterfat production than an equal amount of linseed meal. The Indiana station found that there was no practical difference between the two feeds in balancing up the dairy ration.

The results of these different tests would indicate that Iowa farmers can grow more of their supplements for dairy rations than they have been doing in the past. Soy beans are one legume that can be raised on soil that is slightly acid. They make a good substitute where other legumes have been a failure. Many people are raising them instead of oats on account of their beneficial effect on the soil and the fact that they are as good, if not better, money crop.

Milking Machine Saves Owner Time and Expense

Recent investigations by the farm mechanics department of the college of agriculture, University of Illinois, have shown that even in a small dairy herd of ten to twelve cows, considerable time and labor can be saved by using a milking machine.

On one farm it was customary for the hired man to come in from the field an hour early in the evening to help milk. With the aid of an electrically operated two-unit milking machine the farmer now does all the milking himself and does it in about one-half the time, according to F. C. Kingsley of the department. It requires about 15 minutes a day to keep the milker clean. Some trouble was experienced last summer in the milk souring. The cause was traced back to improper cleaning of the milker, and as soon as this fault was corrected no further trouble occurred.

The steps to take in keeping a milking machine clean, are: After each milking rinse the milker units in cold water. Wash them thoroughly in hot water, using brushes provided for this purpose. Washing powders are often used to help clean the parts, but good results have been obtained without using a powder. Then scald all the parts with which milk has come in contact or sterilize all parts in a steam bath. Wash out vacuum pipe and the sanitary trap at least once a week.

Milk Ration for Calf

The milk ration for the calves can be gradually increased until they are taking a total of eight quarts daily. The use of more milk than this will generally give poorer results than the limited feeding. Some people report good success by feeding a gruel to the calves after they are put on skim milk. This gruel is made of equal parts of corn meal and linseed meal boiled together. Others feed corn meal, ground oats and linseed meal.

Raising Dairy Calf

Calves that are properly grown and developed will make the most profitable cows. A large amount of care should be given to the calf throughout its entire development, but more especially during the period after it is first dropped. A large percentage of the losses comes during the first few weeks. If the mother of a calf is healthy there is no better method of feeding the calf for the first 48 hours than by leaving the calf with the mother.

Drugs Excite the Kidneys, Drink Water

Take Salts at First Sign of Bladder Irritation or Backache

The American men and women must guard constantly against kidney trouble because we often eat too much rich food. Our blood is filled with acids which the kidneys strive to filter out; they weaken from overwork, become sluggish, the eliminative tissues clog and the result is kidney trouble, bladder weakness and a general decline in health.

When your kidneys feel like lumps of lead; your back hurts or the urine is cloudy, full of sediment, or you are obliged to seek relief two or three times during the night; if you suffer with sick headache, or dizzy, nervous spells, acid stomach, or if you have rheumatism when the weather is bad, begin drinking lots of good soft water and get from your pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts. Take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys may then act fine.

This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for years to help flush and stimulate clogged kidneys, to neutralize the acids in the system so they no longer are a source of irritation, thus often relieving bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is inexpensive, cannot injure, makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink and belongs in every home, because nobody can make a mistake by having a good kidney flushing any time.

A Benefactor

A physician who reaches out to benefit humanity leaves a record behind him that is worth while. Such a man was Dr. R. V. Pierce. His study along medical lines, and his knowledge of the remedial qualities of herbs and plants led to the discovery of his wonderful herbal remedy, Doctor Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It is just the tonic required if a woman is borne down by pain and sufferings at regular or irregular intervals, by nervousness or dizzy spells, headache or backache. Favorite Prescription can be had in tablet form as well as liquid at your neighborhood store.

MAKING "DON'TS" EFFECTIVE

By Faux Douglas

Due to a certain perversity in human nature people are forever wanting to do the thing that is prohibited. Children show this same trait. The thing a child is told he must not do is precisely the thing he desires to do.

I have noticed that many mothers have trouble in getting their children to take a nap in the afternoon. Perhaps this is because they have led the children to believe that a nap will do them lots of good. This is not a very strong appeal.

My mother had what I consider a very wise plan. She used to make me think that it was a great favor to be allowed to go to bed in the afternoon. I had this idea so firmly established that I hesitated to do anything near "napping time" that might displease her for fear she might not let me take my nap. People used to laugh when I would come to Mother in the afternoon and ask her to put me to bed. Yet, after all, her plan worked very well indeed, for it made me think that a nap in the afternoon was a treat, instead of a punishment that would not be enforced on holidays and birthdays.

Children like to do things that they consider "devilish," acts that they have to perform in secret. Let me tell you of a poker game that I played with Mother.

I had been playing poker in the barn because I thought the game was not allowed. Mother found out I had been doing this and said to me one night, "John, it's getting too cold to play cards in the barn. Bring your friends into the house. What game are you playing?"

"Poker," I replied guiltily.

"Won't you teach me how to play?" Mother asked to my surprise.

"Yes," I replied, running out to the barn for the cards.

Mother and I started playing after dinner, about half-past seven. We played with matches for money. I was thoroughly tired of the game by nine o'clock. But Mother insisted that we keep on playing. We played on and on until I was so tired that I could hardly keep my eyes open, but Mother never seemed to have enough. At last I said that I did not like the game at all and did not want to play any more.

There did not seem to be the thrill in playing in the house under commonplace conditions that there was in playing in the barn by candle light. I have rarely played poker since the night that I played with Mother. I think the charm was gone when I found that Mother did not mind.

A friend of mine was cured of smoking by almost the same method. Fred was in the habit of smoking behind the barn at infrequent intervals, thinking it manly and "devilish." His father knew that if the boy smoked in secret he would learn to enjoy it. Therefore he invited his son to smoke a cigar with him after dinner, one night. Fred was astonished, but also pleased. He smoked quite gravely with his father, but after a dozen puffs said that he had decided not to smoke any more.

"Oh don't waste the cigar, Fred," the father advised.

The boy continued smoking until he was badly nauseated. Fred is now twenty but has not smoked since that day, according to his own statement.

ATTENTION! CORN GROWERS

The Farmers' Institute has voted to give at least $15.00 in prizes to stimulate corn growing in Newville, Concord and Spencer townships. This money is to be divided $10.00 for first, $3.00 for second and $2.00 for third, but the one winning first must use the ten dollars to attend the Farmers' Short Course the first week in January or it will revert to the one next in line and so on until some one is willing to go.

The plan for conducting this contest is to have every interested corn grower join the Indiana Corn Growers' Association and attempt to raise as many bushels of corn on five acres as he can. The Corn Growers' Association requires a 50 cent fee to join but they send a man in the fall to check up the yeild and they send each member the annual report which is easily worth more than 50 cents to him for the valuable information it contains.

In order to be eligible to the trip a grower must agree to do three things: first, join the Indiana Corn Growers' Association; second, to finish by checking up his yield; and third, show a bushel of 60 ears and a ten ear exhibit at the Farmers' Institute Corn Show whenever that is held.

This contest and prize money is worth while when we have a large number of entrants. Therefore, hand your 50 cent fee to Mr. Smith or Mr. Case immediately and start planning how you are going to grow that 100 bushels to the acre.

This contest is open to only members of the Farmers' Institute in Newville, Concord and Spencer townships. However, it is never too late to become a member of the Institute by paying the membership fee of 25 cents, so do not let that prevent anyone from planning to get in this contest.

BOYS CORN CLUB

The Farmers' Institute has likewise promised $15.00 for premium money for the best corn club work to boys and girls in Newville, Concord and Spencer townships. This money is to be divided into three premiums; ten dollars for first, three for second and two for third. The winner of first place is to use the money to attend the Round-up or it reverts to the one next in line and so on until someone uses the money.

The premiums are determined on the regular club basis. The boy or girl to be eligible must join the corn club either at St. Joe or Spencerville, check up his yield, keep an accurate account record of costs and exhibit a bushel and ten ears at the Farmers' Institute Corn Show.

Mr. Smith of Spencerville or Mr. Case at St. Joe will be glad to assist any boy in their respective territories to secure good seed corn, test it and furnish any other information desired.

SEED CORN SITUATION AND COMMUNITY TESTING

The Seed Corn situation, according to first reports, is not as critical as last year. However, reports of seed corn tested for corn growers applying for certification show that crib corn averaged 15 per cent less in germation and was less vigorous than early selected seed that was properly stored. Testing seed corn will pay large returns to growers this year as shown by previous demonstrations, of tested versus untested crib corn, conducted in a number of counties. The rag doll tester is the only known means of ridding seed corn of the weak and diseased ears. "Test every ear of seed corn" is a good slogan this spring baser on early reports of tests and confirmed by reports of judges at various local and county corn shows.

A total of 141 community seed corn testers in operation in 69 counties during 1926 tested 24,321 bushels of corn according to reports submitted by county agents, or an average of 175 bushels per tester. Community seed corn testers in counties without agents would bring the total well over 150.

SPORTING GOSSIP

The annual sectional basket ball tourney for Steuben and DeKalb counties will be held this year at Angola on March 4th and 5th.

This promises to be one of the most interesting and hotly contested tournaments held in this section for years. Everyone of the 17 High schools in the two counties is expected to enter. Last year only 12 of them entered.

With this unusually large entry and the keen rivalry expected tickets to some of the sessions will probably be at a premium. However the Angola management promises to adhere strictly to the State Board of Control ruling on admissions. The ruling follows:

"The admission fee to all tourney games shall be forty (40) cents for single session tickets and one dollar and fifty cents ($1.50) for season tickets and no more shall be received for said tickets. No more tickets shall be sold than the capacity of the house will justify."

This ruling will mean that only such single admission will be sold as can be taken care of after season ticket holders have been accomodated.

The ticket sale of season tickets will be handled by the principles of the participating schools between February 28 and March 3. Single session tickets will be sold at the door.

Daily Jots

The Mesdames Everett Mavis and Wm. Quance and children, of Auburn, were Friday guests of St. Joe relatives. Mrs. Jennie Sechler returned to Auburn with them for a few weeks.

The Junior High basket ball team at Butler last Thursday evening in playing Altona, was only successful in getting on score and that was made by DuWayne Kinsey in pitching a fowl.

Jay Penland run an ad in The News of sheep for sale, and he said he thought he had seven callers. Well what more could an ad in The News do? Just as good results can be had by any other person if they only use our columns.

Ben Rudner, millionaire merchant of Massion, Ohio, faces life imprisonment for Don Mellett, Canton, Ohio, editor, who waged a crusade against the vice of his city. Pat McDermott, who shot Mellett, was sentenced to life imprisonment. Louis Maser, another of the conspiracy will be tried next month.

Butler cleaned up on St. Joe Hi last Friday evening in a good basket ball game, but on Saturday evening Corunna Juniors were defeated here 16-26 and the high school by 16-28. This practically closes the season for the school teams, but the town team will continue to give the local fans some entertainment.

Efforts are being made in Auburn to secure 100 signers to contract with Redpath Lyceum bureau for a 5 number lecture course next winter. The contract provides that guarantors each take 4 season tickets at $2.50 each. The Redpath bureau has agreed to put on the course here for $1,000.—Star. But they first must be assured of their money before they put on the show. If the course is of such value, why not put it on without a guarantee? No one guarantees other individuals in their undertakings and are perhaps more worthy than a lyceum to the community in which they operate.

Mix a little cooperation with unselfishness, sweeten it with civic pride, throw in a dash of common sense, stir it with leadership, roll it in persistency, flavor it with optimism, bake it with enthusiasm, and the results is Community Spirit. Community spirit can make anything happen within the realm of community possibility. It is its own force. Once you get a fellow inoculated with it, you have transformed a passive or potential liability into a civic asset. It is what the citizens of a community form as a composite entity in terms of love and sacrifice to the community in which they live, that we call community spirit. Its right application will bring marvelous results.

COURT BILL SIGNED BY GOV. JACKSON

DeKalb County is Now a Separate Judicial District, Act Becoming a Law at Once

The bill making DeKalb county a separate judicial circuit was signed late Thursday by Governor Ed Jackson at Indianapolis, thus becoming a law.

The law takes effect immediately, an emergency clause being attached. It not only establishes this county as a separate circuit, but it joins Steuben and LaGrange counties in a new circuit and it creates another separate circuit for Elkhart countty.

Wm. P. Endicot will continue as judge of the DeKalb circuit court, his term expiring at the end of 1928. Capt. H. C. Springer, prosecuting attorney, will have jurisdiction in DeKalb county only hereafter, also. His term expires next December 31. His successor cannot be elected until November, 1928, and the governor is empowered in the new law to appoint a prosecutor for the year beginning January 1, 1928.

Under this neew law Judge Endicott served his last day in Angola last Saturday and was to have opened court Monday of this week at Auburn, but now there will be no court until April 4, when the first term under the new law will start in Auburn. A jury drawing was held last Monday for the regular March term, but this is now void and it will be necessary to move these ahead a month. He will doubtless add cases to the calendar during Maarch and thee first feew weeks of the term, at least, will likely be exceptionally busy.

There will be some disappointment to litiants who will have the hearings in cases in which they are interested delayed. Four young men who are in the county jail, having been bound over from justice court, also will have to wait until April to get attention from the court. They are Raymond Buckio of Spencer township, charged with stealing tires, Harold Layland and Walter Shoup of Waterloo, accused of the theft of an automobile, and John Stager, accused of stealing chickens in Stafford township.

The April term will continue to the fourth Monday in September, when another term will open.

Governor Jackson has appointed Clyde C. Carlin of Angola as Judge for the Steuben-LaGrange dircuit and Wm. B. Duff of LaGrange has been appointed as Prosecuting Attorney for the new district.

It is said thee new term will start at Angola next Monday.

DeKalb county and Steuben counties have been combined in a judicial circuit since 1889. When DeKalb county was organized the law provided for a probate court which had jurisdiction in estate matters only. This court was abolished in 1852 and was superceded by a common pleas court whose jurisdiction included DeKalb, LaGrange, Steuben, Noble and Whitley counties. In 1873 the common pleas court was replaced by the thirty-fifth judicial circuit, comprised of DeKalb, Steuben and Noble counties. In 1889 Noble county was placeede in another circuit.

Among the judges who have occupied the bench in the thirty-fifth circuit in the last two generations were James I. Best of Waterloo, Joseph A. Woodhull of Angola, Charles A.McClellan of Waterloo, R. Wes McBride of Waterloo, Stephen A. Powers of Angola, William L. Penfield of Auburn, Frank S. Roby of Auburn, Ezra D. Hartman of Auburn, James H. Rose of Auburn, Emmett A Bratton of Angola and Dan M. Link of Auburn.

CONGRESS CLOSED ITS 69th SESSION FRIDAY

The sixty-ninth congress died with his boots on at noon Friday in the most dramatic politica battle of modern legislative history. The stroke of noon automatically ordered out of existence the national legislature elected two years ago with President Colidge, and wrote an end to a spectaculat series of filibusters which had held the congress impotent for the last ten days. The end was characteristic of the turmoil and strife which has marked the senate sessions for the last ten days, and carried in a death-grip a half dozen major items of legislation which were marked for passage before adjournment. The house passed out with laughter and a boisterous song, but its austere twin, the seenate, died grimly fighting in the midst of half a dozen filibusters, two of which had kept it in continuous session, first for 30 hours and then for 37 hours.

NAMED ADMINISTRATOR OF VETERAN'S ESTATE

Clyde Rectenwall of Spencerville, has, upon application of Ralph E. Palmer, been appointed by County Clerk, J. Harvey Knauer, as administrator of the estate of the late Geo. E. Palmer, whose death took place in France, February 2, 1918.

George Palmer was a member of the American expeditionary forces. Since his death monthly payments have been made on his government insurance of $10,000. The balance remaining is $3,435 and the government asked his mother, Nancy Tharp Palmer of Spencerville, to have an administrator appointed in order that full settlement can be made at this time.

aree two brothers, Roy Palmer of Fort Wayne, and Ralph Palmer of Spencerville, and four sisters, Myrtle Kelly of Hartford City, Jessie Castle of Oakland, Cal., Iva Miller of Fort Wayne and Ethel Palmer of Spencerville.

Mr. Rectenwall filed $7,000 bond with L. B. Fisher and W. G. Erick as sureties.

The notice of Mr. Rectenwall's appointmenet appears elsewhere in this paper.

NOTICE OF ADMINISTRATION

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, That the undersigned has been appointed by the DeKalb Circuit Court, of the State of Indiana, Administrator of the Estate of George E. Palmer deceased, late of said County.

Said Estate is supposed to be solvent.

Clyde G. Rectenwall, Administrator.

OBITUARY

Elijah W. Saylor, son of William and Mary Jane Saylor, was born in Concord township, DeKalb county, Indiana, the 16th of August, 1858 and died at his home, February 28, 1927, aged 68 years, 6 months and 12 days.

On August 28, 1888, Mr. Saylor was united in marriage with Fannie Bovlic, who survives. To this union three sons were born, two having preceded their father in death, and Fred, who survives his father.

Mr. Saylor became a member of the Christian church of St. Joe in 1910 during a revival conducted by O. E. Hamilton and Arthur Haley, evangelists.

Besides the wife and son Mr. Saylor leaves two brothers,, one half brotheer and one half sister, numerous nephews and nieces, other relatives and many friends and neighbors.

Our deceased brother was an industrious and considerate husband and had many friends who deeply sympathise with the widow and son.

CARD OF THANKS

We desire to thank the friends and neighbors for their many kind acts during our sad bereavement.

Mrs. E. W. Saylor
Mr. and Mrs. Fred Saylor.

COUNTY NURSE MAKES REPORT OF HER WORK

At the county meeting of the Red Cross in the court house Tuesday, Miss Marion Sweeney read the following report of her work during February.

As was planned the "Schick Test" waas given in the Auburn schools on February 7th. Two hundred and sixty-three received the teest. The check up showed 70% positive and 30% negative.

The test was given in the Garrett schools on February 21st. The checp-up showed 66% positive, 34% negative.

Total number receiving the test in the county this month reached 432. Approximately 20% of the students enrolled in each town received the test. This is a demonstration to show the need for having all pre-school and school children imunized aganst diphtheria which is the cause of death of many children in our state. Parents, see that your child is immunized and heelp to keep diphtheria out of your community and state.

At the monthly Teachers' Institute which was held in the Auburn Library, February 12th, Health Crusade Pennants for 100% work were presented to the following teachers:

Miss Pauline Wasson, St. Joe school, grades 3 and 4, Miss Joyce Rhoads, Jackson No. III and Carl Becker, East Richland consolidated school. The benefits derived from the attendance at the State Tuberculosis convention which was held in Indianapolis were both educational and inspirational. While in the city a conference of the nurses at the State Board of Health office was attended and visits to the State School for the Deaf and Riley Memorial Hospital were made.

The first lesson in "Home Hygiene and Care of the Sick" was given to the Newville class on February 23rd. Eighteen members enrolled. Mrs. Kate Fusselman has generously offered her home to be used for the class work and we all appreciate her interest and generosity.

The "Schick Test" will be continued throughout the schools of thee county during the month of March.

Twelve schools were visited and 364 miles traveled during February.

AUBURN BOY DIES AT PENDLETON

The body of William Little, aged 22 years, was brought to Auburn, Friday and taken to the home of his mother, Mrs. Simeon Maurer, north of Auburn, on the Ashley road. The young man died Thursday morning after a short illness from black diphtheria at the reformatory at Pendelton. The funeral service was held Saturday afternoon at 2 o'clock from the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Simeon Maurer. The deceased is survived by his mother, stepfather and the widow to whom Mr. Little was married a year ago and who has been living at South Bend.

BETTER HOME AND GARDEN CLUB

Every lady in St. Joe that has her garden at heart, would do well to meet with local committee at the Town Hall, Thursday afternoon, at 2 o'clock, to talk over the idea of having a club to sponsor this idea.

Practically every town has this organization each summer and St. Joe ladies would do well to support this movement locally.

With spring at hand, there are many things that the club can sponsor, that would add to the appearance of our little town and besides be a benefit to each home.

Know the Lumber You Buy!

SHIPS put out to many domestic and foreign ports with cargos of this known lumber for world construction. World trade seeks Long-Bell because of the reputation of its trade-marked lumber. Every year thousands of families come to the day of putting carefully earned savings into lumber for a home. Faith surely guides that transaction—the faith of the buyer in his lumber dealer and in the honesty of value built into that lumber by the manufacturer. Here is a trade-mark that merits the faith of buyers of lumber the world over. Behind this name—behind this trade-mark—are vast forests, gigantic manufacturing plants—and, most important, the united ambition of thousands of skilled men to give the buyer of lumber maximum construction value. This trade-mark on lumber signifies ideals and standards unsurpassed in the industry.

We sell these known dependable lumber products.

SELECTING RIGHT FOOD FOR CHILDREN

This Lunch is Made Up of Poached Egg on Toast, Cauliflower, Milk, Brown Bread and Rice Pudding.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

The necessity for selecting the right food for children is being emphasized because, in the midst of plenty, thousands of American children are not getting the foods they need for the highest development of mind and body. The United States has more food and better food than any other nation. Our pure food laws and sanitary methods of handling food supplies are world famous. Along with our efforts to safeguard health through food control, however, we need to develop better food habits and so reduce our alarmingly high percentage of malnutrition. For the undernourished child does not have a fair start, and everything is harder for him. Even though his body may outgrow some of the visible signs of malnutrition, others, not so apparent, remain. Faulty mental habits cling and in countless other ways he carries a handicap all through life.

FUDGE DEPENDS ON GOOD RECIPE

Confection Will Help Out Any Informal Party.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

The ability to make good fudge is supposed to be developed during the four years of high school, along with a knowledge of Latin, algebra, history and other school subjects. A liking for fudge, however, is not limited to the high school student. A plateful of this delectable and easily-made confection helps out any informal party. At fairs and bazaars purchasers can always be found for homemade fudge. Gift boxes of fudge for birthdays or unexpected requirements can be produced on short notice, usually from materials on hand in the pantry.

Like any other cooked product, good fudge depends on a good recipe, and if the results are to be the same each time, the recipe must be followed accurately. The United States Department of Agriculture sponsors the following directions for making fudge. Unsweetened or cooking chocolate gives the best results, but in an emergency, from one to two tablespoonfuls of cocoa may be used in place of each ounce or square of chocolate, to make a very palatable product.

Chocolate Fudge.

2 cupfuls sugar (granulated or light brown).
2 to 4 squares of chocolate.
¾ cupful milk or cream.
2 to 4 tablespoonfuls butter.
1 teaspoonful vanilla.
¼ teaspoonful salt.

Place the sugar, chocolate and milk over a slow fire and cook without stirring until the sirup forms a soft ball, when a small amount is dropped in cold water. Remove the candy from the fire and let it cool without stirring. When it is lukewarm, add butter, salt and vanilla, and beat until creamy. Then quickly turn into a buttered pan, and when firm cut in squares. Or if preferred, drop it by teaspoonfuls on waxed paper.

To vary the recipe, add a cupful of chopped nuts, raisins or marshmallows, just before the fudge is ready to pour into the buttered pan.

Peanut Sandwiches for Children's Lunch Box

Peanuts are a valuable food to use from time to time in the children's lunch box. Here is a peanut sandwich that has all the nutty flavor and some of the texture of the nuts themselves. Get freshly roasted peanuts and put them through the food chopper, using the medium-fine knife. Do not use the nut knife because it will grind the peanuts so fine that they will be pasty when mixed for the sandwiches. By using the medium-fine knife there will be tiny pieces of the nuts in the sandwich filling.

Mix the ground nuts with just enough cream to moisten them for a sandwich spread. Add salt to season the mixture. Graham or whole-wheat bread is especially good to use for these sandwiches. Butter is not needed since the peanuts themselves are rich in fat and have been moistened with cream. The bureau of home economics of the United States Department of Agriculture says that peanuts are also an excellent protein food, especially when combined with wheat. The protein of the wheat and of the peanuts becomes "complete" or "efficient." Such complete protein can be used by the body to special advantage in building and repairing tissues and for supplying energy. Therefore a sandwich made of wheat bread and peanuts fulfills the requirement for a complete protein food.

Denotes Low-Grade Beef

Yellow fat in a beef cut or carcass usually denotes low-grade beef from a grass-fattened animal. Firm white tallow in a beef cut, with small veins of this fat appearing throughout the substance of the meat, denotes beef of superior grade and such meat is usually tender and palatable.

Curtains for a Boy's Room Need Not Be Fussy

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

A boy likes a room of his own where he can bring other boys if he wishes. Straight lines, strong colors, durable materials, and few furnishings are desirable in such a room.

A boy won't want curtains with ruffles, pastel colors, or vague patterns. He prefers such materials as burlap, crash, denim, or sateen, in strong green, brown, blue or orange colors. These materials can be hung from a painted pole without a valance. Vigorous patterned cretonne should please him.

Boy's Room Arranged by a Specialist.

The illustration shows a young boy's room planned by a specialist in the United States Department of Agriculture. The curtains are of gray gingham with colorful cretonne appliques. They match the couch cover. The material can be washed without losing its color, and it is simple enough to answer the boy's requirement that nothing in his room shall be "fussy." Many other satisfactory color combinations and materials could have been used.

Banana Custard Pudding Found Unusually Good

A pudding that is unusually good at any season, but particularly acceptable while eggs are plentiful is made of bananas, vanilla cookies, and custard. To make it you will need the following ingredients: One quart of milk, five eggs, one-half cupful of sugar, one teaspoonful of vanilla, one-eighth teaspoonful of salt, one-half pound of vanilla cookies, two to four bananas, depending on the size. Make this desert in the morning to give it time to develop flavor by the blending of the cookies, custard and bananas. Prepare a soft custard using the yolks of the eggs, sugar, salt and vanilla. Make it in the double boiler and allow it to cool. Then place a layer of the cookies in a pudding dish. They may be either your own or those bought in packages. Put a layer of sliced bananas over the cookies and pour part of the custard over both. Continue until all are used. Beat the egg whites very stiff and add five tablespoonfuls of sugar, one for each egg white, also one-eighth teaspoonful of salt and one-quarter teaspoonful of vanilla. Pile lightly over the top of the pudding and put it in a moderate oven until the meringue is delicately browned. Let the dessert then stand for four or five hours.

Child's Essential Food

A child needs food that supplies proteins and minerals for building body tissues, calories for energy, and certain other factors, not yet identified, which are essential for normal growth. One of these is connected with proper bone development and, because it serves to prevent rickets, is often called the antirachitic factor, and when given to children it helps them to grow strong normal bones. Direct sunlight also aids bone growth in somewhat the same way. For children who cannot be out of doors in the sunshine a great deal, cod-liver oil is particularly valuable.

"Hello, John."

The person addressed looked surprised and said, "Well, hello, but I'm not John."

"That's funny. You look just like a friend of mine, named John. Your hat is like his; your overcoat is like his; your scarf is like his, and even your attempted mustache is like his."

"I feel sorry for the gentleman, if he resembles me."

"Well, my conclusion is that you were in a craps game with him last night and won all his clothes."

"Even so, I couldn't very well have appropriated his mustache."

STORY FROM THE START

Claude Melnotte Dabbs returns from New York to his general grocery in Peace Valley, Pa. With him comes Ned Carter, a stranger, whom Dabbs introduces to "Aunt Lyddy," his old housekeeper, as a nephew. Later Dabbs admits to Aunt Lyddy that Carter is a chance acquaintance, veteran of the World war, whom he had met in New York and taken a liking to. Carter tells that he has broken with his family and his fiancee because of their ultra pacific leanings.

"I will, if you think you'll stay awhile," Claude replied eagerly.

"Of course I'll stay, and what's more, I'm going to help. Motoring means nothing to me. Let me tag after you and look things over; be of use, if I can."

Dabbs looked immensely pleased. "By Jiminy! That'll be great! Suppose you drive with me to Clover Hollow with the orders. You can always pretend you are a stranger getting a lift, or you can jump off and admire the scenery when we get there. You don't look like the grocer's boy, you know."

"Well, I am," affirmed Ned. "My looks may be against me, but it isn't kind of you to rub it in. I'm your man for delivery or anything else." Ned watched Claude Dabbs handle the reins. Like everything else he did, he drove skillfully, but apparently without giving it all his attention.

On the way, he told Ned that the car was out and Sim needed the truck for the express stuff—an explanation of why they were using Jenny and the wagon. But Ned was secretly convinced that the wagon was being used as a test of his own endurance, and smiled to himself at C. M.'s guile.

Ned was the target for many curious, unwinking stares before they left the short main street. At last the village lay behind them and the road ran winding past quaint homesteads and inviting side roads.

Winding Willow road was its name. Claude informed Ned as they neared the top of the hill. Ned looked about him, absorbed in the panorama of comfortable farmland and wooded hills. He realized that the lovely road lived up to the first part of its name. It wound on and on and not too smoothly. There were steep hills and sharp turns before them, but Claude had arrived at a place where he might relax and talk.

"By Jiminy! It's good to be out of doors! I make a break once in so often and take out a lot of orders, so's not to get too fat and lazy."

Ned smiled. He had suspected that C. M., was trying him out, and now he was sure.

Dabbs turned and looked at the young man's face with great content.

"You do like Peace Valley. Just as I felt you would. Grand country, isn't it?"

"Beautiful! I don't see how one could be restless or disappointed down here."

"It's a queer thing," Mr. Dabbs answered introspectively, "how this place take all the spunk out of some people and makes them so mild and ladylike there's no stirring them up to any sort of decent ambition. You'll soon see that the folks brought up around here are terrible hard to 'rouse. I've felt that way often myself. Then sometimes there are days when suddenly the very peace of it gets on your nerves, sorta slaps you in the face. I've felt that, too. But when I go away from here, I want to come back, and it's the d—dest, hardest place to leave that I ever knew." He slapped Jenny lightly with the whip. "If it was anyone else I was talking to, they'd think I talked like a fool about my own place. But you get me, don't you?"

"It doesn't sound foolish to me. I think I feel its charm already."

"And yet, when I was your age, Ned, how I kicked at being kept here, tied to a country store." He pointed his whip to a group of buildings at the foot of the gentle incline before them. "That's Clover Hollow. What do you think of it?"

Ned saw several detached houses, most of them built of stone, more or less elaborate in design, except where they were merely the original farmhouse, or laborer's cottage, remodeled and enlarged but retaining some of the original simplicity of form. They were set in the midst of gardens and lawns, some of them quite extensive.

"Attractive looking spot. But what is it?"

"It's a joke on the man that built it," Claude said thoughtfully, "and I ought to know because I'm his agent. You see, he thought out this scheme for bringing a good class of people into the neighborhood, and by so doing boost his native village, financially and otherwise. And this is what he got!

"It's a kind of collection of good-natured cranks," Dabbs resumed, after waiting for comment, which did not come. "They call it a community, and they call themselves workers, thinkers, writers, artists, leaders of the new revolt, and a lot of other names. Everything except a plain American citizen lives there. But there's no harm in any of 'em. They are just people with money enough not to work, and yet a burning desire to do something for a living that won't hamper 'em none."

He laughed. "It's funny, Ned, how nowadays people feel they have to have some excuse besides their money for living. Money was enough when I was young. It isn't any more."

He chuckled at the thought. "The way I reason it, is that people who are just a little off on some one thing become so much of a darned nuisance that ordinary people either laugh at them or try to run away. This makes them band together so as to get an audience somehow. At Clover Hollow they can have meetings and argue as often as they like. If one man does all the talking one day, he knows he's got to listen the next.

"Take this house we're coming to now. It's called a cottage, but it takes five servants to run it. Professor O'Toole, who lives there, drinks something a good deal stronger than tea. He told me that the purity of his Gaelic depended on a diet of new potatoes, cream and whisky. Don't know where he gets his stuff, nor how he gets it past the revenue officers, but his cellar's full. He's against everything on God's green earth except the Irish republic. I can't help hoping Ireland never is a republic, for if it is, Professor O'Toole will be a terribly disappointed man. He'll have nothing left to live for, or talk about.

"Course he don't work for his living. His English uncle left him so much 'unearned increment' that he just has to use some of it up on De Valera and that bunch."

He looked at Ned, and added: "Awful pleasant fellow, though. You'd like to talk to him."

"This is amazing!" Ned said. "Next house?"

"That's the show place. M. Adolphus Mannheim, the East side millionaire who married a settlement worker, lives there. He's a good provider and a nice fellow, if there ever was one. He's also got some excuse for talking kinda wild. Seems before he made his millions in a chain of stores over here, his family were Russian Jews and had what he calls 'pogroms' happen to them. A pogrom seems to be some sort of excuse for raging round at things in general.

"But Mrs. Mannheim, why, she sorta forgets. Some of us krew her as Lizzie Harrigan, a school-teacher at Fellow's Corners twenty miles away. Lizzie always was a restless spirit, and she made a strike for freedom and the city. She's got Mannheim flattered to death and fooled, but she can't fool Peace Valley. Leaves her big automobile around the corner, and in a plain shirtwaist and skirt and a sad smile tries to stir up the girls at the factory to fight for their rights. They chew their gum and laugh at her. Fellow's Corners ain't so far but some of us have heard of Lizzie Harrigan's rich marriage. She got a hint of that last time she tried to make a strike leader of herself and found she was the whole strike. She's all for plain living and high thinking, and look where she lives! Five maids, a cook and a chauffeur. And clothes! Lizzie struck luck when she married Mannheim."

"I know Mrs. Mannheim," Ned said, to Dabbs' complete astonishment, and Ned's voice was hard. "I'd rather go to her kitchen door with groceries any day, than to her front door. Who started this blot on the landscape?"

Dabbs visibly started. He shot a quick glance at Ned, but the younger man did not notice the look.

"Isn't 'blot on the landscape' a little strong?" he inquired anxiously. "You see I'm the agent for the man who bought the land cheap, and thought it'd make a good investment as an exclusive residence place. He had a good architect come down here, who was crazy about remodeling old houses, and soon Mr. Mannheim and a man called Green got interested, and they brought the rest here."

"I suppose," Ned began reflectively, as though he had scarcely been listening, "that Mrs. Mannheim thought she could get together a set of her own down here, and drag Mannheim away from his friends."

"Don't know," Dabbs answered, a trifle bewildered at Ned's intimate knowledge of these people. "That's Green's house over there, among the trees, where we're going next. Green's a character. He can talk white into looking black, and the other way round. He was a professor, of something or other, in some college. He's in Russia now."

"Who has the house now?"

"Don't just know. It was rented by the New York agency when I was away. I didn't see the name Sims put on the order, so I can't tell you whether it's money or just views, but should think it would be money and views. Sometimes, you know, a regular family, just looking for peace and quiet, land here. But it's generally one of the same."

He paused. "Jimmy! I've never talked so much to any one before. Of course being agent for the property I have to keep my mouth shut. But what would you do? Turn them out? Aren't they safer here than in some other place? Peace Valley's slow moving."

He looked appealingly at Ned, for evidently that "blot on the landscape" rankled.

Ned said nothing. He was frowning, staring straight ahead of him, seeing nothing. Dabbs, glancing at him, puzzled, explained further: "Of course, I've only given you my idea of them. I'd not set you against them, for anything. In fact, they might amuse you."

"They wouldn't," Ned interrupted vehemently. "I don't want to know them."

The wagon gave a final lurch as they turned the corner near the Mannheim's back gateway. A slender blonde girl came through the wrought-iron gates at a breakneck speed, pulled along by an infuriated young collie on a leash. Neither the girl nor the dog seemed able to stop, and Jenny would not.

Horse, dog and girl seemed as one in the cloud of dust that enveloped them.

As Dabbs pulled at the reins, Ned jumped over the side of the wagon and landed at the girl's feet.

"Peter!" she shrieked. "My precious dog! My Peter! You've killed him."

"D—m Peter!" Ned muttered sullenly. "What are you doing here, Dorothy?"

The girl looked at him amazed, then at the wagon and Mr. Dabbs, who had kept his seat and regained control over the horse. Peter, who had not been killed, doubled back and was now cowering against the girl, growling.

Dabbs quietly descended and took the box containing the Mannheim order from the back of the wagon. Ned turned abruptly, went toward the wagon and climbed to the seat.

"I'll deliver the order at the next house, Uncle Claude, and come back for you," he announced, and was gone before Claude could protest.

The girl, her attractive face painted like a bisque doll, stood staring at the rapidly disappearing wagon. Claude, wisely concluding that he had nothing to keep him, shouldered the box and went toward the house.

When he returned, a few minutes later, the girl was still standing there, holding the dog and blocking his exit. Dabbs could see at once that he was not to escape easily.

"Nice boy, Ned," Dabbs remarked warily.

"Uncle Claude!" the girl exclaimed accusingly. "Are you the late Mrs. Rangeley's brother?"

"Mrs. Rangeley!" Dabbs echoed. "Mean Mrs. Carter, don't you Miss Selden?"

"No, I mean Ned Carter Rangeley's mother."

"Ned Carter Rangeley!" Dabbs repeated. "You mean my boy Ned?"

"Then you aren't his real uncle?"

"He has always called me 'uncle,' though the relationship isn't quite so close."

Dorothy Selden looked at him shrewdly. "I'm willing to bet every penny in my purse," and she jangled the little costly beaded article, and dropped it back into the deep trouser pocket of her expensive farmerette costume, "that you don't know who Loren Lorimer Rangeley is."

Dabbs could not help his jaw dropping a little. "I do, though," he answered quietly enough. "He is a big New York banker, one of the meanest men God ever let live."

"Knowing that," snapped the girl, "and knowing that Ned is his only son, why this silly pretense that his name is Carter only?"

"Ned has his reasons," he told her coldly, "and Rangeley deserves to be kept in the dark."

All right, then, Dorothy, just who is Loren Lorimer Rangeley? Does the plot get thicker or does it get thinner?

Good and Evil Omens Surround Honey Bees

Many women are interesting themselves in the art and business of bee-keeping, and with skillful management it can be made a profitable industry. Much ancient lore is associated with the keeping of honey bees. They must be told when there is a death or wedding in the household, and their habits of swarming are omens of good or evil. If they swarm on the ground or on a dead tree someone is going to die, or there will be a famine, or something dreadful will happen. It is astonishing that country people ever kept bees if they believed in superstitions so liable as these to make them uncomfortable. They do not worry the modern bee-keeper, for, like everything else, the business has been modernized and the old village straw beehive-maker has gone, together with many of the curious observances associated with bee-keeping.

Reader's Cycle

Every inveterate reader goes through an endless cycle in the kind of books he reads, according to one of the Detroit librarians. The cycle goes something like this: Fiction, poetry, biography, history, science—then it begins all over again with fiction. But it does not mean evolution for the reader, because on each lap he tends to improve the quality of the class of books he happens to be reading.

The KITCHEN CABINET

(©, 1932, Western Newspaper Union.)

A hearty welcome manifested in kindly and polite attentions will make a very plain meal more enjoyable than a banquet.

SALAD SUGGESTIONS

A salad is one dish of which we never tire. One reason for this may be that it appears in such a variety of combinations.

A left-over may be used in a salad without any question as to its right of second appearance.

Macaroni and Celery Salad.—Take one pint of boiled macaroni which has been cut into half-inch pieces, add one pint of celery cut into the same sized pieces, add one cupful of chopped nuts and one cupful of good salad dressing. Line a salad bowl with lettuce and heap into it the salad mixture. Chill and serve. This will serve eight portions.

Tomato and Cheese Salad.—Arrange small cups made from tomatoes on lettuce leaves, fill with cream cheese which has been seasoned well and mixed with chopped nuts. Add a spoonful of mayonnaise at the side of the dish.

Combination Salad.—When one has a little celery, a half cupful or less of crisp tender cabbage, cut the celery, add the cabbage (shredded), an apple finely diced, and a bit of red pepper or green if at hand, a tablespoonful of scraped onion; mix all with a good mayonnaise or well-seasoned boiled dressing and serve on lettuce.

Hot Potato Salad.—Wash six medium-sized potatoes and cook in boiling salted water until soft. Cool, remove the skins and cut into thin slices or cubes. Cover the bottom of a baking dish with potatoes, season with salt, pepper, sprinkle with finely chopped parsley. Mix two tablespoonfuls each of tarragon and cider vinegar and four tablespoonfuls of olive oil; add one slice of onion cut one-third of an inch thick. Bring to the boiling point, pour over the potatoes, cover, let stand in the oven until thoroughly hot.

Celery and Cabbage Salad.—Cut the outside leaves from a firm, hard head of cabbage. Cut out the center and shred with a sharp knife. Let stand one hour in ice water. Drain as dry as possible. Mix with equal parts of celery cut into small pieces. Moisten with cream dressing and refill the cabbage.

Delicious Desserts.

When one has a few bread crumbs, try the following recipe:

Queen of Puddings.—Take one pint of bread crumbs, one quart of milk, one cupful of sugar, the yolks of four eggs, one tablespoonful of butter and one teaspoonful of lemon extract. Mix and bake, spread a layer of jelly over the top. Cover with a meringue of the egg whites, beaten stiff with one cupful of sugar, and the juice and rind of a lemon. Brown in the oven.

Rice Pudding.—Cook one-half cupful of rice five minutes in a pint of milk, cool, add the yolks of four eggs well beaten, three-fourths of a cupful of sugar and one tablespoonful of butter, one-half cupful of raisins (chopped), a grated nutmeg, the whites of the eggs beaten stiff. Bake one hour and serve cold.

Frozen Peaches.—Take one can of peaches or twelve large ones, put through a sieve, add one pint of water, two cupfuls of sugar, the juice of a lemon and the whites of three eggs. Mix well and freeze either in a freezer or in a mold packed in ice and salt.

Another nice ice cream with peaches is prepared thus: Put a pint of peaches through a sieve, add one pint of cream and one pint of milk, the juice of a lemon and the beaten whites of two eggs. Freeze as usual.

Grape Juice Sauce.—Cook a tablespoonful of cornstarch with one cupful of boiling water, one-fourth of a cupful of sugar, a teaspoonful of lemon juice or vinegar and two tablespoonfuls of butter. Mix well and add one-half cupful of grape juice with a grating of nutmeg.

Bavarian Cream.—Take one quart of sweet cream, the yolks of four eggs, one-half box of gelatin, one cupful of sugar, two teaspoonfuls of vanilla. Soak the gelatin in one cupful of cold water for half an hour, then add one pint of boiling cream, add the yolks of the eggs well beaten, heat until it begins to thicken, then take from the heat and add another pint of cream beaten to a stiff froth. Mold and set on ice to chill.

Whole Chesapeake Family Built to Rugged Health

L. M. McMasters, his wife and three children, all ill. Entire family used Tanlac and grew back to vigorous health. Give full credit to Tanlac for quick recovery

Mr. McMasters lives on Sims Creek Road, Chesapeake, Ohio. Of his recent trying experience he says: "For two years stomach and liver trouble had gradually run me down and when constipation developed that seemed the last straw needed to break me, and to make things worse all of my family were sick more or less all the time. My wife was subject to nervous attacks that kept us all awake at night. The children caught colds for no apparent reason and were confined to bed for several days at a time. None of us were getting the proper nourishment, and temporary relief would be followed by fresh attacks.

"We decided to give Tanlac a trial and it put us all on our feet. Our grocery bills are much higher now. We have no expense for medicines for we all eat heartily, and our food does us good. That was some time ago and we've all enjoyed the finest health since, eating and sleeping normally and getting full value out of life. All the credit belongs to Tanlac."

If overwork or neglect have left their mark on you, try Tanlac. It is nature's own body builder, made from herbs, roots and barks. Your druggist has it. Over 52 million bottles sold.

Women Need a Mild Laxative —Not a "Physic"

Countless girls and women now know how foolish and needless it is to "purge" and "physic" themselves to avoid sick headache, dizziness, biliousness, sallow skin, colds, or sour, gassy stomach.

They have found that Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin helps to establish natural bowel "regularity" even for those heretofore chronically constipated. Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin not only causes a gentle, easy bowel movement but, best of all, it never gripes, sickens or upsets the most delicate girl or woman. Besides, it is absolutely harmless and so pleasant that even a cross, feverish, bilious, sick child gladly takes it.

Winter chills bring varied ills

—the time good elimination is most important

COLDS, chills and changes in temperature impose extra strain on our kidneys. Sluggishness of function is apt to permit some retention of body-poisons in the blood and make one more susceptible to the ills of winter. Presence of this unfiltered waste makes one listless, tired and achy—causes drowsy headaches, dizziness and often a toxic backache. Disturbed function is often evidenced by scanty or burning secretions. At such times a stimulant diuretic to the kidneys is indicated. Doan's Pills have been winning friends for more than forty years. Ask your neighbor!

When the whole family is getting its wardrobe together all at once, there is much rustle of fabrics, snipping of shears, whining of the sewing machine. It is fortunate then that Practical Patterns are handy, for these smart and useful patterns are designed for mother and big and little sister as well, and embody style correctness with effectiveness of design. There is a smart afternoon dress with tailored lines waiting to be cut after Practical Pattern Number 974.

A dress for the most difficult of all ages to fit is Number 973, which is especially suitable for Miss 16 to 20. While it is a frock for slender figures, however, this fashion can be adapted to the lines of the larger figure as well.

Both dresses pictured on this page can go under the smart topcoat which is Number 975. This is a sport coat designed to meet the possibilities for chic that rest in the gorgeous plaids that are being shown this season.

THE STUDENT PRINCE

Returning to Fort Wayne

Saturday, March 12, at the Shrine Auditorium, Fort Wayne, "The Student Prince" will return for a matinee (at 2:30) and evening performance (at 8:00 o'clock.) Never in the history of the theatre has a musical offering been so highly praised by public and critic alike, and so great has been its appeal, the Messrs. Shubert, fho are presenting the operetta, were forced to send out nine companies to meet the extraordinary demand to see its beauties and to listen to the charm and grace of its score.

It ran for seventeen months in New York; ran for over thirteen months in Chicago, and in the other largee cities of the United States established new records for length of engagement. The company coming to Fort Wayne just completed an engagement in Detroit and is said to be the finest singing aggregation of all "The Student Prince" companies. It is a larger company than seen in Ft. Wayne last season.

There is a mighty male chorus of sixty trained voices included in the personnel of one hundred.

"The Student Prince" was adapted from Old Heidelberg, a play Richard Mansfield used for years as a starring vehicle. It recites the story of a Prince who went to Heidelberg to finish his education only to fal in love with a waitress at an inn. For this barmaid the Prince was willing to renounce a throne, but the fine duplicity of court intrigue tore him away from his love and happiness. Throughout the operetta there is a note of tenderness that brings tears to the auditor's eyes.

For a musical feast see and hear "The Student Prince."

NUMEROUS CHANGES MADE IN FISH AND GAME LAWS

Closed Season, Hunting and Fishing Licenses and Bag Limits Revised by Bill Just Passed

Numerous changes are provided for in the fish and game regulations of Indiana as a result of the passage of a bill in the Indiana legislature which will become a law upon the signature of Governor Jackson and dtelared by him to be in force.

In view of these changes, George N. Manfeld, fish and game division superintendent, today pointed out .that it is best for those who fish and hunt to familiarize themselves with the new provisions, designed to better protect wld and aquatic life during propagation seasons and which, its authors believe, will go far toward perpetuating and increasing the supply. In a report to Richard Lieber, director of the department, Mr. Manfeld analysed these changes as follows:

Making Indiana game laws conform to the federal regulations relative to migratory birds, expecting the bag limit on ducks will be 15 and on geese 6 per day.

Requiring persons who fish in the Ohion river, Wabash river and Lake Michigan to keep their fishing tackle within one mile of these waters; also requiring private pond owners to have written permit to keep a seine or trap for use in their ponds, said devices to be kept on the premises where pond is located.

It will be lawful to take suckers, carp, dogfish and gar with a pitchfork without barbs, and the young of these species may be taken for bait with a minnow trap.

Making it unlawful to barter, exchange, sell or offer for sale, or purchase any native fish of any kind protecteed either by a size or bag limit. The term sale includes serving the same as part of a meal. Boarding houses, restaurants and hotels may prepare and serve fish caught by guests or boarders to them and their families.

The price of the resident license to be $1.00 as now, but to include hunting, fishing and trapping. All such licenses to expire on December 31 of each year instead of a year from date of issue. The non-resident fishing license is raised to $2.25, and to expire December 31 of the calendar year. The non-resident hunter's license will cost $15.50 as now, and to carry the privilege of hunting, fishing and trapping, same also to expire December 31 of the calendar year. Persons may fish in their own counties without license, and children under 18 will not be required to have a license to fish, whether they reside in the state or not. The section allowing the wives of men who have a license to fish free has been repealed. Residents of the state who own lands, but do not live on them masy hunt, fish or trap on their own land without a license. The word resident is defined to mean a person who has liveed in this state at least six months or more.

The closed season on smallmouth black bass, large-mouth black bass, yellow perch, pickeral or pike, silver bass, rock bass, crappie, pike-perch, (wall-eye) and red-eared sunfish will be from May to June 16, both dates inclusive.

It will be unlawful for any person to take or catch more than 25 bluegills, crappies, rock bass or red-eared sunfish. The aggregate of black bass or silver bass will be 6 per day with not more than 12 of all kinds in possession in two or more days' fishing. The limit will be 6 pike-perch or wall-eye. Two days' catch may be possessed in two or more days' fishing.

The length limit on the two black basses will be 11 nchees, on silver bass 10 inches; pike or pickerel and pike-perch 15 inches; crappie 6 inches; yellow perch 6 inches; rock bass, blue-gill or red-eared sunfish 5 inches.

Thee open season on rabbits will be from October 1 to January 11; on squirrels August 1 to November 1. The bag limit on rabbits will be 10 per day; on squirrels 5 per day. Protection to red squirrels (pineys) is withdrawn. The sale of rabbits will be prohibited in closed season and entirely prohibited on squirrels at any time except for breeding purposmay by permit, first obtained, kill rabbits when found doing damage to their property.

Under the new law, Justices of the Peace may issue seearch warrants to wardens to search for seines, fishing nets, fisn traps, fish speara, or for wild birds, wild animals, fish or parts thereof, the possession of which shall at the time be unlawful.

The minimum fine esatblished for violations of any of the above sections is $10.00.

Lesson for March 13

MAKING THE WORLD CHRISTIAN

LESSON TEXT—Matt. 28:16-20; Acts 16:6-15.

GOLDEN TEXT—Go ye therefore and teach all nations.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Telling Everybody About Jesus.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Winning the World for Christ.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—How We Can Spread the Gospel.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Christian Missions the Hope of the World.

I. The Great Commission (Matt. 28:16-20).

1. When and where given (v. 16).

It was shortly before the ascension in a mountain in Galilee where the disciples met Jesus according to appointment.

2. The foundation upon which the commission rests (vv. 17, 18).

In order to prepare the disciples to receive this commission, Christ declared to them that all power in heaven and in earth was given unto Him. Before the disciples would enter upon the execution of this commission they must be convinced of His Lordship. To create doubt in the minds of believers as to the deity of Jesus Christ is to cut the nerve of missionary endeavor.

3. What the commission is (vv. 19, 20).

1. "Go—teach all nations" (v. 19).

This means make disciples of all the nations, not Jews merely.

(2) "Baptize them in the name of the Triune God" (v. 19).

Those who have become disciples of the Lord should receive the rite which signifies their relation to him.

(3) "Teach them to observe all Christ's commandments" (v. 20).

Those who have become Christ's disciples should be taught obedience to all His commandments.

4. The promise attached (v. 20).

Those who obey the king in evangelizing the world have the promise of His unfailing presence.

II. Forbidden by the Holy Spirit to Preach in Asia Minor (Acts 16:6-8).

The inclination of Paul and his companions was to tarry in Asia Minor preaching the Word, but contrary to their inclination they were hurried along. We have here a fine lesson on divine guidance. The Holy Spirit is just as active and faithful in closing doors as in opening them. "The stops as well as the steps of good men are ordered of the Lord." We ought as truly to recognize God's hand in the "shut-ins" as in the "open-outs."

III. The Call to Macedonia (Acts 16:9-12).

The gospel having broken the confines of the Jewish city and country, the middle wall of partition having been abolished, the time has come for it to leap across the Aegean sea and begin its conquest on another continent.

1. The vision (v. 9).

Being hemmed in on all sides, a vision was given to Paul of a man of Macedonia pleading for help. This made plain to him the closed doors about him. In finding the divine will, we should look both ways.

2. The advance (vv. 10-12).

As soon as the divine way was known they moved forward therein.

IV. The First Convert in Europe (vv. 13-15).

The devout people were accustomed to worship by the riverside. To this humble gathering Paul came and preached to the women assembled there. A certain woman from Thyatira named Lydia, a proselyte, believed his message and was baptized.

The steps in Lydia's conversion are worthy of note for they are typical:

1. Attendance at the place of worship (v. 13).

Usually those whom God is calling are found at the place of prayer.

2. Listening to the preaching of the Word of God (vv. 13, 14).

The instrument used in the conversion of sinners is the Word of God (Rom. 10:17).

3. Her heart was opened by the Lord (v. 14).

Only the Lord can convert a soul. It is our business to preach the Word of God, and it is God's business to open the heart of the inquirer.

4. She was baptized (v. 15).

Every one whose heart the Lord has opened desires to confess Him in baptism.

5. Her household believed (v. 15).

When one is converted those in the home will find it out.

6. Practiced hospitality (v. 15).

Those who have experienced God's saving grace are thus disposed to have part in His work by rendering aid to His ministers.

Pursuit of Happiness

Many people are on the wrong scent in pursuit of happiness. They think it consists in having and getting, and being served by others. It consists in giving and in serving others.—Herald of Gospel Liberty.

Salvation is not from you, nor in you, nor by you, nor of you, but only in Christ, and by Christ, and of Christ, but thanks be to God is for you.—Central Bible Hall Record.

The DAIRY

PROPER FEEDING PAYS DAIRYMAN

The cost of feed is by far the largest single item in the cost of producing milk, and makes up one-half to two-thirds of the total gross cost. The labor cost will make up almost one-fifth to one-fourth of the total and all remaining costs combined usually do not run higher than 20 per cent, writes G. Hoebink of South Dakota in the Indiana Farmer's Guide.

An ideal combination of feeds consists of well-cured legume hay, corn silage or roots, and farm grains balanced with muscle and bone-building feeds such as ground soy beans, wheat bran, linseed-oil meal or cotton seed meal.

It is a good practice to feed three pounds of silage and one pound of hay per hundred pounds of weight to each cow per day. For instance, a cow weighing 1,000 pounds should receive about thirty pounds of silage and ten pounds of hay each day. When silage is not fed, approximately two pounds of dry roughage daily per hundred pounds live weight is a sufficient amount. Legume hay and good corn fodder make a desirable combination if the hay is limited.

A common rule for feeding grain is to feed cows, producing milk relatively high in butter-fat test, one pound of grain for every three pounds of milk produced and to cows producing milk of low butter-fat test, one pound of grain for every four pounds of milk produced. If this 1,000-pound cow was producing thirty pounds of milk daily, she would be fed from seven to ten pounds of grain each day, the amount of grain depending upon the fat test of the milk.

It is more profitable to feed a mixture of several grains than to feed a straight grain ration of corn, barley or oats. Mixing 1,000 pounds or more at a time saves labor. A desirable grain mixture is as follows: Ground oats, 300 pounds; ground corn 300 pounds; linseed meal, 200 pounds; wheat bran, 200 pounds. Ground barley may be substituted for the corn, oats, or wheat bran in this mixture, and ground soy beans may well replace the linseed meal.

Desirable Calf Rations for Animal for Home Use

Desirable rations for a calf nine months old that it is proposed to develop onto an animal suitable for home butchering would result from using a mixture consisting of equal parts of corn and oats, to which has been added 10 per cent of linseed meal. The animal can gradually be started on this combination, using two or three pounds per day, and increasing the amount gradually for 20 or 30 days until by the end of this period the youngster would be allowed to have all that he would consume with relish. This amount would vary according to his breeding and feeding qualities, but it is a safe enough policy to let him be the judge of the amount necessary to satisfy his craving for food. In addition, allow him some roughage, mixed hay or clover or alfalfa hay, yet when he is on a full ration of basic grain products you will find him devouring comparatively small amounts of hay.

All Experiments Prove Fall Freshening Best

In all of the dairy cow freshening experiments conducted as far back as Father Time can remember the experimenters always have arrived at the same results—that fall freshening is best.

There are several sound reasons why fall freshening means more dollars to the farmer.

In the first place September pastures are more succulent than August pastures. August is a complete "washout" as a pasture month, both cows and calves getting a poor start as a result.

The intense heat which accompanies August does not agree with either the cow or her offstring. Cooling rains usually fall in September, however, the pastures green up and consequently the cow freshening in this month gets a nice start.

Dairy Hints

A good cow cannot do her best on good roughages alone. She needs some feeds of less bulky and more concentrated character.

Frequent deliveries of cream to the market are essential for good quality. Cream should be delivered at least three times a week in winter.

See that the cow is perfectly clean when she is milked, as these germs likely fall into the milk while the cow is being milked.

The dairyman in need of protein supplements and mill feeds will probably be able to buy them at a lower figure now than a few weeks hence.

* * *

Calves raised on the minimum amount of milk, must begin to eat hay and grain at an early age. Only good quality alfalfa or clover hay should be fed.

SLEEVES PRIDE OF STYLISTS; GAY SCARF BECOMES IMPORTANT

IT IS an hour of triumph for the sleeve. Throughout spring fashioning artfully contrived sleeves are the pride of the stylist. Novelty is accented either in contrasting color or fabric attended by ingenious cut and design.

The trend is toward the large and voluminous sort, outstanding among which are the exaggerated bell type and the Russian peasant sleeves. Then there is the balloon contour which disposes its fullness below the elbow with fitted wristband, and the wing sleeve which has a cape-like aspect, the Vionnet model with the low-cut armhole, and the sleeve with a tight-fitting upper whose fullness is attached at the elbow, often slashed so as to reveal the forearm. Indeed, the subject of sleeves is exhaustless, judging from the bewildering array which distinguishes fashions of the now.

Sleeves of Russian Peasant Inspiration.

Materials have as much to do with sleeves as have their fashioning. Sometimes the fabric is the same as the dress, but of striking color contrast, usually ornamented with elaborate embroidery. Then again it is the material which is different, the color being a perfect match.

Especially advanced is the transparent sleeve accurately matched in color to the dress of heavier fabric. Lovely are the crepe de chine and satin crepe frocks which have shirred sleeves of self-colored georgette. The afternoon gown in the picture illustrates the new mode in the full measure of its attractiveness. These sleeves are of Russian peasant inspiration.

Another smart feature of this exquisite costume is the choker tie-collar. Many of the newer models boast tie-collars on this order, some tying at the back, others at the side. Speaking of this modish choker effect, reminds that necklines are also a theme of great importance. The very latest is the square-neck effect, with a bow and streamers of self material at one side.

As an accessory to sports clothes and street attire, the scarf is to play a tremendously important role this spring. It is not only the scarf itself, but the manner of wearing it which is going to count for smartness. Call it artistic temperament or feminine intuition as you will, some women know instinctively just how and when to trail a scarf with infinite grace or to pose it entrancingly across the shoulders in complement with the evening gown, and when and how to add the "touch that tells" to her sports or street costume by deftly winding it about the throat, then jauntily tying it in a perky bow.

This season more than ever, the mode expects women of fashion to give to the scarf personality, so to speak, by playing it up to its environment. Not only must the scarf itself be a vivid splash of color, in order to animate the spring sports or street costume, but it must be tied or knotted in a nonchalant "accidental on purpose" way, which expresses the art of "knowing how."

The very character of the new scarves invites a piquant saucy lilt in the tying thereof, for dashing in color are they and bold of design. Outstanding among stylish scarves are hand-blocked effects of vivid hue. These are shown in both square and oblong types. The 'kerchief type promises to be exceedingly popular, tied about the shoulders in a loose knot. All sorts of figures and grotesque designs are being painted on sports scarf ends—a white sailboat bouncing over waves, a figure of a tennis player in action and so on.

The last word in colorful silk neckpieces is the hand-painted or block printed necktie. This is worn with the blouse and the short-jacket tailored suit. These are very showy and add a fine dash of color to the costume.

The Scarf Takes on Importance.

The fad for black and white is being exploited both in scarves, and especially in hat and scarf sets. Silk prints are used mostly, both in the heavier crepes and foulards, also in sheer chiffons.

Matching scarf and hat sets are forespoken for the coming months. Print silk with plain satin interprets a fetching ensemble as pictured in this group to the left. The fact that the top crown of the hat is quilted, adds to its modishness. The scarf worn with the smart felt hat at the top to the right is a vividly hued hand-blocked type. Modernistic patterning and striking color impart chic to the hat below to the right. The young girl wearing the polka dot scarf evidently understands the art of tying it with "studied" carelessness.

Drink Water to Help Wash Out Kidney Poison

If Your Back Hurts or Bladder Bothers You, Begin Taking Salts

When your kidneys hurt and your back feels sore don't get scared and proceed to load your stomach with a lot of drugs that excite the kidneys and irritate the entire urinary tract. Keep your kidneys clean like you keep your bowels clean, by flushing them with a mild, harmless salts which helps to remove the body's urinous waste and stimulates them to their normal activity. The function of the kidneys is to filter the blood. In 24 hours they strain from it 500 grains of acid and waste, so we can readily understand the vital importance of keeping the kidneys active.

Drink lots of good water—you can't drink too much; also get from any pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast each morning for a few days and your kidneys may then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for years to help clean and stimulate clogged kidneys; also to neutralize the acids in the system so they are no longer a source of irritation, thus often relieving bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive, cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink, which everyone should take now and then to help keep their kidneys clean and active. Try this; also keep up the water drinking, and no doubt you will wonder what became of your kidney trouble and backache.

Makes Sure of Food

A London restaurant has accepted the offer of a forty-year-old man to supply him with two meals a day for the rest of his life for £5,000 ($24,500) cash. AFRAID

Russell M. Coryell

Having had all the failings of children when we ourselves were young, we, as parents, determined to raise our boy to have none of them. In the first place we decided that he was never to know the meaning of fear. There were to be no imaginary wolves lurking in the darkness or under his bed such as we had suffered from in our childhood.

For the first three years of his life the word "afraid" was never used in his presence, or if it was, it was spelled so that he could not get a hint of itts significance. Nobody was permitted to read "Litle Red Riding Hood" to him or to jump out from behind a door with a startling "Booh!" He was put on a regular time in his little bed upstaris and left there to go serenely to sleep while his parents sat down below. Fine! It worked like a charm.

On his third Christmas, with our permission, a doting aunt presented him with a gallant little rocking horse—mouth open as he strained at the bit and nostrils spread wide and red to indicate an indomitable spirit. The boy loved it. He stroked it and petted it in an ecstasy of delight. He patted its back and put his hand into the mouth to caress the red tongue and the white teeth; and at this point the aunt felt she must add a realistic touch to enhance the child's pleasure and cried out with mock alarm: "Look out he doesn't bite you!"

There was a gasp from my little boy. His hand was snatched out of the mouth and he stood petrified, waiting to be bitten. The aunt laughed merrily. We parants assured him it was a joke and after a moment he went on playing with his wooden horse—but still out of range of a possible vicious bite from the gaping jaws. Before Christmas day passed the incident seemed to have been dismissed for good and all. But it wasn't. My young son soon learned that his toy horse would not and could not bite but he also learned that real horses do bite, and he gave them a wide berth on the street from that day on.

Then there came the night when he woke up screamng that a horse had bitten him, and from then on he associated fear of horses with rapidly joined the ranks. It was useless to argue or explain. Fear is not a matter of logic. A single little sentence had startled fear into being but not all the sentences, however persuasive and reasonable, have yet been able to drive out fear. He is saddled with it until he shall reach an age when of itself it will go.

And until that time what are we two parents to do? How can we combat fear?

Some of our friends advise ignoring it; some of them advise discipline—put him in bed, blow out his light and leave him alone no matter what the boy does. Make him face it!

We are not taking anybody's advice, however. Parents never do. We are pampering our boy's fear of the darkness—at least so we are told—by letting him have a candle burning in his room till he has fallen asleep. I tried disciplining him just once and was convinced by his screams that if I kept it up I should be branding the fear more deeply into him. perhaps so deeply he would never get over it.

So I am pampering him, hoping to lead him by forgetfulness out of the dread clutch of fear. I know I can't discipline it out of him. I know I can't argue it out of him.

But I have reason to think I am weaning it out of him, for the other night, when I was putting him to bed my boy said: "Blow out the candle, Daddy. I want to try sleeeping the way you and Mother do in the dark."

So I blew it out and he went to sleep without a murmur.

I wish I could announce that from that night forth he never wanted the candle again, but that wouldn't be telling the truth. He wanted it the next night. I know, however, that the night isn't far off when he will again ask to have his candle blown out and that this will occur again and again until he has learned to prefer the darkness when he sleeps, just as his daddy and mother do.

No! Really?

THE DUCK'S PARADE

"QUACK, quack," said Mrs. Duck.

"Quack, quack," said Miss Duck.

"Quack, quack," said Mrs. Indian Runner Duck.

"Quack, quack," said Miss Indian Runner Duck.

And all the little ducklings said:

"Quack, quack, quack, quack."

Then Mrs. Duck said:

"Quack, quack, we are going to give a party. I am giving it in honor of my young daughter, Daisy Duck. She is such a perfect duck! Such a perfect duck! And I want to give her a party.

"It will be a swimming party."

"Quack, quack, oh dear," said Mrs. Indian Runner Duck.

"Quack, quack, oh dear," said Miss Indian Runner Duck.

"You know I'm not very fond of the water," said Mrs. Indian Runner Duck.

The Ducks Sang as They Marched Along.

"In fact," she added, "I don't like the water. And I don't believe I'll enjoy your party. In fact, I'm not sure but that I have another invitation on that day and wouldn't be able to accept your very kind thought of me."

Mrs. Indian Runner Duck felt that perhaps she had not been very polite and tried to make the last of her speech sound better than the first.

"Oh, said Mrs. Duck, "I really hadn't finished explaining about my party.

"It will be a swimming party at first for all those who care about swimming but after that it will be a barnyard party.

"We will have all sorts of fun and we will finish off with a splendid dinner.

"I plan to have many different kinds of games played and I thought we'd have a parade which would be a great deal of fun.

"Parades are always amusing.

"Our parade could be called the Duck's Waddling Parade and we could sing or quack as we marched along.

"I made up a marching song to sing as we waddled along. I suppose most would say we couldn't sing, but no matter, in our quacking way it is singing.

"And besides lots only make a noise who call it singing. So why should not the ducks do the same?"

And all the ducks quacked.

"The truth, quack, quack, the truth. Lots only make a noise and they call their noise singing, so why should not the ducks do the same? Why not, indeed? There is no reason why we should not. So we will. Quack, quack, we will."

And Mrs. Duck said:

"Quack, quack, I am so glad that all of you agree with me."

"Let us hear the song," they all called. So Mrs. Duck recited the marching song and this was it:

Quack, quack, quack,
Behind each other's back.
Let us march, march, march!
Quack, quack, quack,

And then she took a breath and began to recite the second verse of the marching song which went like this:

Quack, quack, quack,
Even if grace we lack
Let us march, march, march!
Quack, quack, quack,

The ducks all liked that verse and they quack-quacked for all they were worth.

Thus encouraged, Mrs. Duck went on:

Quack, quack, quack!
For waddling at least we've a knack.
So let's march, march, march.
Quack, quack, quack!

And yet again Mrs. Duck paused and then began once more to let them hear another verse:

Quack, quack, quack!
Let no one step on a tack
As we march, march, march.
Quack, quack, quack!

They all thought this was excellent advice and all said they would be careful not to do anything of this sort.

And then Mrs. Duck made them all practice their kind of singing and quack-quacking and told them more about the coming party and all decided it would be a splendid affair.

And indeed it was beyond even their high hopes

For Meditation

By LEONARD A. BARRETT

THE HUMAN ELEMENT IN INDUSTRY.

IN THE average manufacturing industry about 30 per cent of the cost of production is charged to raw material, the remaining 70 per cent, to labor. The successful purchase of raw material at the lowest possible market price is only one factor in anticipating profits. The most important element is not material but labor, not stock but men, not things but personality. Ethical values are as indispensable to success in business as are material values. The ratio of importance would seem to be as seventy is to thirty.

Labor refuses to be reduced to an automaton. Employment of men and women as machines creates reactions disturbing to industry and lessens profits. Labor is human and will not be dehumanized, without disastrous results. The human element in industry claims that its most valuable asset is not cotton, lumber or wool, but the capacities of men to create, produce and serve. The most important thing is not machinery, materials or markets, but men, and that the biggest thing in men is mind and heart. The mobilization of the human element in industry is the most important undeveloped resource in the business world today.

Success in modern industry argues that right is superior to might, that the competition which destroys must give way to the competition which builds up. The surest way to the realisation of profit is to safeguard production at its source. Inhuman treatment of labor either by unsanitary conditions, destructive environments or by wage which make impossible wholesome living conditions spells failure.

How It Started

By JEAN NEWTON

THE "MANSARD" ROOF

WE ARE all familiar with the mansard roof, which is constructed with a break in the steep sides of the ordinary A-shaped roof so that each side has two planes, which makes the rooms underneath habitable and eliminates the useless garret found under the other style of roof. Some of us have used the name "mansard" roof without knowing the origin of the term.

The "mansard" roof is named after Nicholas Francois Mansart, a famous French architect, who lived from 1598 to 1666. At the height of his influence Mansart designed most of the important public buildings erected at the time in Paris, as well as the famous chateau of Maison-sur-Seine for Louis XIV. His work is noted for its classical refinement and purity of detail. And one detail of his origination which has familiarized his name these many years to people who have no interest in the history of architecture is the now popular, though misspelled, mansard roof.

Looking Back For 50 Years

Fifty years ago this year a national banking system was started in the United States.

Today Americans have on deposit and subject to check or drawing interest the unheardof sum of $60,000,000,000

If you do not own a part of that vast sum, you can still profit through the experience of others. You can still make your dollars wor for you—and a working dollar is the only dollar worth having.

Or you can do your boy or girl a wonderful favor by taking even one dollar and starting an account for them—and then teaching them how thrift and saving has made thee United States the most prosperous, the most contented, the happiest nation in the world.

VOL. XII. ST. JOE, DeKALB COUNTY, INDIANA, THURSDAY, MARCH 17, 1927 NUMBER 11

WILL DISPOSES OF ESTATE VALUED AT ABOUT $12,000

The will of the late Elijah W. Saylor, who died at St. Joe February 27, has been probated in the office of County Clerk J. Harvey Knauer. It was executed January 5, 1926, with Dan M. Link and Clarence E. McClintock as witnesses.

The will disposed of $2,000 in personal property and $10,000 in real estate. The widow, Fanny Saylor, is bequeathed all the personal property. She is also to have the use of the farm during her lifetime. If the income proves insufficient to maintain her in comfort and to provide medical attendance, nursing and care in sickness, she is authorized to mortgage the farm for the purpose of raising additional money. At her death the residue of the property goes to a son, Fred Saylor.

Mrs. Saylor was nominated by her husband for executrix, but she renounced her right to serve and upon her application Frank L. Milliman of St. Joe, was appointed administrator. He qualified by filing $4,000 bond, with Mrs. Saylor and the son as sureties.

POTLCK SUPPER COMPLETED CONTEST

The local M. P. Church completed its reading bee Thursday evening, on the subject of "Stewardship." In response to the call of the annual conference to stress this phase of church life. Rev. McKnight instituted the contest idea for studying.

The church membership was divided into two groups, namely, Live Wires and Busy Bees, with three captains on each side. Each captain was assigned a certain number of families to place the literature with during the ten days.

Last Thursday evening the six captains were called to the church to have their counts canvassed by a special commitee headed by Prof. R. L. Case, assisted by B. E. Widney and F. B. Leighty.

When the points were totaled the Busy Bees had 8,580 points while the Live Wires totaled 5,840 points.

Pot luck super was furnished at the church Saturday evening by the defeated contestants, and a fairly good crowd was present to share in the good things.

Rev. F. W. Lineberry, President of the Indiana Conference was present and addressed the meeting on the idea of stewardship.

To give an idea of the amount of reading on this subject, the count showed that 600 printed leaflets and 86 books on tithing were read by 75 different people, 18 persons signed cards signifying their desire to try the plan of tithing their income and 9 expressed their wishes of forming an association within the local church. The latter will be in the hands of the pastor to complete.

The captains on the two sides who were responsible for the splendid work done were:—

Busy Bees, Mrs. DeLora Curie, Mrs. Lulu Brodbeck and Mrs. Lora Leighty.

Live Wires, Mrs. J. F. McKnight, B. E. Widney and Howard Shilling.

ASHER CULP WRITES OF FLORIDA

Tampa, Fla.
March 11, 1926.

Mr. Fred Leighty,
Dear Sir:—

Enclosed you will find my check of $3.00 to apply against my subscription to the St. Joe News. I know my subscription is in arrear but do not know how much. So please advise me in regard to same. I certainly apreciate the weekly visits of The News and always look forward to its appearance every Monday. Of course, some of the news is not so pleasant. Almost every week The News brings the message of some friends having passed to the Great Beyond. It certainly reminds us that our stay on this earth is only temporary. I have never known any community to make so many changes in the way of deaths as Spencerville and St. Joe has in the last six years.

We have certainly had some wonderful weather in Florida this winter. However, we had one unusual cold spell but it only lasted a few days. In certain parts of Florida it froze the orange and grape fruit trees as well as the vegetables. However, the damage in the vicinity of Tampa was very light.

Business in Tampa has been farly good this winter. Of course it is not near like it was last winter durng the rush. Tampa is known as "The year round city," for the reason that it is a commercial center and does not depend on tourists only for its prosperity. It is the largest sea port in Florida and supplies the country for several hundred miles with the necessaries of life. Some of the largest phosphate mines in the world are located near Tampa. This is being shipped to all parts of the world. I am very optomistic about the future of Tampa.

We have several families of your vicinity with us in Tampa this winter and we appreate this very much. Some of these are George Jenkins and wife, Frank Pervines and wife, Mrs. Belle Goldsmith, Miss Pearl Goldsmith, Mrs. Joy Goldsmith and daughter, Miss Laura Shutt and John Provines and wife.

John Provines and wife moved to Avon Park, Florida, recently, where he is manager of a drug store. George Jenkins and Frank Provines are with me in the lumber yard here. We recently visited Andrew Sponhour and Clarence Sponhour and families who live at New Port Richie, which is only about thirty miles from Tampa. We also have quite a number of friends from the vicinity of Goshen and Elkhart that live in St. Petersburg. You know St. Petersburg is only twenty miles from Tampa and these two cities are connected by what is known as the longest bridge in the world. This bridge is six miles long and owned by private parties. The toll charge to cross same is 50 cents for a car and driver and 10 cents for each additional passenger.

All our Indiana friends are well and pleased with Florida.

Wishing you the best of success,

I am Sincerely yours,

Asher Culp,
3111 San Juan St.

P. S.—I was very much interested last summer in an article you published in The News about Ybor City, Fla. It was described as a city of Spain in the United States. A city inhabited by Spanish people, using Spanish customs and ideas. I suppose you know that Ybor City is the Spanish section of Tampa. Most of the Spanish people are employed as cigar makers. Tampa manufactures more cigars than any other city in the United States. We have many Spanish customers and they are good customers, too. We have a Spanish salesman that solicits Spanish trade only. I thought you might be interested to know that we only live abou four miles from Ybor City.

FUR TOUCHES FOR SATIN COATS; SMALL HAT OF CROHET VISCA

BLACK satin registers high in the list of favorite mediums for the spring coat. Its style prestige is acclaimed in almost every display of advance fashions. Owing to its adaptability to summer as well as spring wear, the coat of black satin may rightly be considered as the best sort of an investment. The new models are wonderfully attractive, embodying, as they do in their styling, all the latest approved ideas of tucking, complicated seamwork, tier treatments, novelty sleeves and the hundred and one other trickeries which so add to their chic.

TWO MODISH BLACK SATIN COATS

Typical of the mode are two handsome exponents of the black satin class, as here pictured. The model to the left not only stresses the popular tier arrangements of wide folds on the skirt, but it exploits a fashionable black and white compose, in that it is collared with white ermine. Its crowning virtue is that it is made reversible. Quite a little attention is being directed toward the reversible coat this season, designers playing up to the adage that there should be "two sides to the story" of the coat—the one satin, the other kasha cloth in gray or beige.

A trimming of black monkey fur distinguishes the companion coat in the picture, which also is of black satin. The novelty collar is topped with a binding of white fur.

The use of the crepe side of the fabric in reverse is often advocated by designers. This gives opportunity to achieve very clever effects. Another point of interest is embroidery on the sleeves, where black and white stitch-

Oh, it's spring time in the realm of millinery, there's no mistaking that fact. There's the dainty little hats of visca straw, for instance, which abound in such plentiful number in the new showings, just to look at their adorable colorings brings the happy conviction of the passing of winter.

These cunning visca hats have a way of topping the spring frock and the spring coat to perfection. Their tones and tints seem to just naturally tune in with thoughts of sunshine and flowers, likewise with sprightly silk prints and gay crepes and weaves such as the mode features for smart spring apparel.

Yes, it's well worth while choosing a soft crocheted visca for the new chapeau. Some of them bespeak exquisite simplicity in that their only trimming consists of a band, bow and binding of grosgrain ribbon, such as the center model in this group defines. It is their colorings which differentiate them. There isn't a new spring shade missing in these soft, crushable beguiling visca hats.

Many of the visca straws have ripple brims as shown in the first model in this picture. Notice too, the handsomely designed crochet band which trims this pretty hat. That there is a trend to crochet effects is noticeable not only in the hat itself but in the trimming as well. Flowers and motifs of colorful crochet straw adorn many of the "last word" French chapeaux.

Ribbon cocardes are as much in fashion as ever, if not more so. The ery is worked in complement to the white fur on the collar. Quite unique is a touch of embroidery on the satin which backs up the white fur at the neck. It is so positioned on some of the new models that when the collar rolls up at the back even ever so slightly it reveals the embroidery design.

Many of the satin coats also boast shawl collars of flat fur, especially black and white spotted calfskin and ombre lapin fur.

hat at the top to the right boasts an intriguing ribbon motif and band.

Felt and straw in combination stands for the ultra chic. In the hat in the lower left corner, the crown is of visca, the brim of felt done in an elaborate cutout patterning.

A compose of faille silk and visca answer the style call in the model which concludes this group.

STORY FROM THE START

Claude Meinotte Dabbs returns from New York to his general grocery in Peace Valley, Pa. With him comes Ned Carter, a stranger, whom Dobbs introduces to "Aunt Lyddy," his old housekeeper, as a nephew. Later Dabbs admits to Aunt Lyddy that Carter is a chance acquaintance, veteran of the World war, whom he had met in New York and taken a liking to. Carter tells that he has broken with his family and his fiancee because of their ultra pacific leanings. With Dabbs Ned visits Clover Hollow. They almost run over a dog belonging to a girl whom Carter apparently recognizes. Ned delivers a grocery order, and in his absence the girl, Dorothy Selden, says that she knows Ned's last name to be Rangeley, and that he is the famous banker's son.

By the look in the girl's eyes, he knew that he had said the right thing. She apparently forgot Dabbs' existence as she stood there turning the situation over in her mind.

"Quarreled with papa and down here leading the simple life with a poor relation," she mused. "What a situation for the high and mighty Ned! I congratulate you, Mr. Dabbs. It is evident that Ned has seen the light and come over to us."

"'Us?' I don't think I understand."

"Joined the workers, the Intelligentia, the Bolsheviki of America."

"Not if I know Ned!"

Miss Selden looked at him, as one looks at the poor of understanding. Plainly she felt that any really up-to-date information would be lost upon Dabbs. She searched her mind for some expression used in the dark ages before the war.

"Don't you understand," she began condescendingly, "I'm what is called a radical. What you would probably call a Socialist."

Dabbs said nothing.

Disconcerted, Dorothy, unused to planting seed in ground totally uncultivated, began again: "A radical is—well—a radical is one who believes all men should be equal—"

"They are not," Dabbs interrupted, "and they can't be. Men aren't born equal, no matter what the Declaration says. Nor if you start them equal, do they stay so. Girl, the very best one can do is to try and give everybody an equal chance, and then watch the holes they land in."

"The world belongs to the workers," Dorothy began loftily.

"Sure. What's your trade?" Dabbs demanded.

Dorothy hesitated and was lost. "I—" she began.

Dabbs looked at her sympathetically. "I guess you're living on that 'unearned increment' the rest of the Clover Hollowers live on and despise so. And I guess you've got more of it than some of the others," he added, taking in comprehensively, but not offensively, her expensive playing-at-being-useful garments. "Well, I'm a grocer," and he shouldered his box and turned away. "If you'll excuse me, Miss Selden, I'll move along. The grocery business is sorta exacting in its demands, and I'll be going on down the road to the stonemason's. Mind telling my boy, Ned, to pick me up there when he passes?"

CHAPTER III

Ned, Jenny and the wagon were standing in the driveway of the Green's former residence. The sign on the gate posts indicated that this place was called "The White House."

Ned found it a charming place. The old stone house was a real bit of pre-Revolutionary Pennsylvania. The original outbuildings had been torn down, but enough of the old stone barn had been retained to make a practical, yet picturesque, garage.

Altogether a wonderful old place, in which everything that was old was used. There was nothing new, made to look like an obvious afterthought. All were blended into an harmonious whole, agreeable to the eye, and testifying to the skill of the architect.

As he jumped down from the wagon seat, Ned thought perplexedly that he had forgotten to ask the name of the people who lived here. How would he know which box to take out? This difficulty was solved for him by the fact, discovered immediately he examined the contents of the wagon, that all remaining packages bore the name "Johnston." This was evidently not the usual house-to-house delivery, but a special trip, mainly to the Johnston house.

Shouldering the box containing the bundles, he walked to the kitchen door [illegible] in his best grocery boy manner. There was no response. He knocked again and waited.

"Oh Grocer!" came in a strong, young contralto voice somewhere above his head.

Ned shifted the box a little to enable him to look upward.

From the rear hall window a girl leaned out. Ned wondered why he should think of extreme youth and fairy tales; then remembered the illustrations for "Rapunzel, Rapunzel, let down your hair." The girl had been brushing her hair, and it hung about her in dusky masses. The brush was still in her hand.

"Will you please put the box on the bench just outside the door? I'll be down as soon as I can open the door. When we arrived last night, we found the servants had left because it was too lonely."

Ned put down his box and sat waiting on the steps. He was weary from his unwonted early rising. He leaned his head against the pillar of the kitchen porch and closed his eyes. This was a queer adventure—yet it promised, at least for a time, to be diverting; and that was all one could really ask of anything in this life. If it grew humdrum and commonplace, or Dorothy became a nuisance, he would move on. He thought of his newly acquired uncle. There, at least, he had made no mistake. Whatever Claude Dabbs was or was not, he was a man, and he was honest. Ned admitted more than that. C. M. Dabbs had charm.

"Poor fellow. How tired you must be!" Ned turned as the words came from behind him.

"Nonsense," Ned said, finding himself blushing. "I'm not tired in the least, Miss—"

"Johnston, and I hope you've brought everything I ordered."

Ned began carrying in the order. He did not hurry too much about his task. It was pleasant to watch in the clean, white, cool kitchen, this girl who was not like the other girls he knew. She had something they did not have; or was it that he had never seen any of the other girls in just such an environment? Miss Johnston was smiling at him now across the white enameled table, on which they had spread and counted the groceries.

"I don't really know where the potatoes are kept," she said, "so put them in that big basket in the corner. You see, I don't know where everything belongs, yet."

"Why not leave them where they are," advised Ned. "The new cook will probably want to put them somewhere else anyway."

"Oh I think not, Mr.-Mr.-er-Dabbs."

"But I'm not Mr. Dabbs. I'm his—nephew. My name's Carter, Ned Carter."

Miss Johnston smiled, then frowned a little, a horseshoe shaped frown that drew her delicate black brows together.

"Try not to make so much noise with the potatoes, Mr. Carter. I don't want my mother disturbed."

Ned, who had been pouring the potatoes into the basket as might a small boy, and rather enjoying the noise, colored and stopped this demonstration of his muscular power. Instead of pouring them out as though they were canned peas, he lowered the bag discreetly and allowed the potatoes to escape as potatoes should.

"Much better," Miss Johnston admitted, and Ned found her charming as she stood there with slightly puckered brow. He forgot to object to the school-teacher manner with which she said it. "Now, if you'll put the gasoline in the shed at the side of the porch, why that will be all. Tell your uncle that, with the servants gone, I'll have to telephone him later about the chickens we ordered. I'm afraid we shan't want them."

Ned understood he was being dismissed, and picked up his empty potato sack. As he crossed the room he had a sudden inspiration.

"Miss Johnston, if there's anything Uncle can do before your new servants come, why, let us know. Uncle might be able to get some one in Peace Valley to come for a day and help you out."

"Oh, do ask him! It would help immensely."

Ned went out, determined that it should be done, and Mary decided that country people were really the salt of the earth. She also decided that this young man was decidedly too good-looking, with an air impossible to deny. How had he come by it in a country general store?

While she wondered, and put the groceries away, Dorothy Selden, who could have told her all about the air and how it was acquired, waited at the gate for the returning "grocer's boy."

He drove toward her whistling. In face and figure he was all that a lady might love, but his expression was far from being either pleasant or inviting. He stopped whistling when he saw Dorothy waiting alone, and a heavy frown came to his brow.

Dorothy swung herself into his path. Ned endeavored to keep on his way, but the girl was determined. Ned halted Jenny and waited.

"So, you've changed your mind?"

"No," Ned answered promptly, and then in true country fashion proceeded to answer one question by asking another. "Where's Uncle Claude?"

The girl ignored it, leaning on the wagon, insolently. "You didn't get across to fight," she jeered.

"No. Did you and father work together to prevent it? I've often wondered."

"You've quarreled with your charming but capitalistic father, and are down here working for your living."

Ned's mouth twisted into a reluctant smile. "Is that all you got after pumping C. M. Dabbs?"

"And you call yourself 'Carter,'" the girl finished ominously.

"Right. Don't give me away."

The girl nodded. "What am I to understand from that, but that you've seen the error of your ways and decided to join us."

"Us?"

"Why this pretense?" Miss Selden asked airily. "I assure you there's no need. I don't mind your following me down here. This is a refuge, a haven where people like ourselves may find freedom of speech, of thought, of action—"

Ned looked at her. "And costume?" he added.

Dorothy laughed, secure in the fact that whatever he thought of it, it was becoming. It was going to be interesting, having Ned around. He must have cared more than she thought, to have followed so soon. How had he known? But she kept these things to herself and continued her pose. "I'm a worker, too, Ned. Mrs. Mannheim—I came down here to stay with her, as you evidently discovered—has a community garden, and I, well I do my small share toward making it a success."

"Don't let me detain you," hinted Ned, lifting Jenny's reins, fearful that if he stayed longer he would spoil her delightful theory of pursuit by the discarded lover.

But Dorothy still held to the wagon and he could not go. "You remember Mrs. Mannheim?" she asked.

Ned nodded. "Oh, yes, I remember her well, but I'm not anxious to renew the acquaintance—under the circumstances. I hardly think she'd care to have 'the grocer's boy' calling."

"Oh, I don't think she'd mind, if I explain." Of course, it hasn't been done. Among our own social set distinctions simply do not exist, but we haven't included the village, yet."

"I'm sure that would never do. And now, please, where is—Uncle Claude?"

"At the stonemason's, across the bridge," Dorothy informed him, and for a moment relaxed her hold on the side of the wagon and stooped to recover Peter's leash.

A banker's son a grocer's boy! What will we be hearing next about Ned Carter Rangeley?

Little of Wild Life Is British in Origin

Very few of the animals best known in our countryside are British in origin. Indeed, with the possible exception of the fox, the badger, the otter, the hare, and the red deer, there are today few, if any, survivors of animals native to this country.

The rabbit, for example, was not known here in early Christian days. It is believed to have originated in Spain; very old coins have been found in that country imprinted with the figure of a rabbit. Rats are quite foreign to these shores, though they are now too firmly established here. The English black rat came from the Continent eight centuries ago.

Both the fallow and roe deer came to us from abroad, the first from Norway, the second from Asia. The pheasant found its way here in Roman times. The partridge, on the other hand, is perhaps the most British of all our game birds.—London Tit-Bits.

Massachusetts' Flag

The librarian of the Massachusetts Historical society says: "I do not find a record of the adoption of any provincial flag by Massachusetts, but I do find a resolve passed by Massachusetts on April 29, 1775, among several resolves relating to the encouragement of seamen to enlist in the Colony sea service: 'Resolved, That the uniform of the officers be green and white and that they furnish themselves accordingly, and the colors be a white flag with a green pine tree and an inscription, Appeal to Heaven.'"

THE CHRISTIAN'S HOPE

LESSON TEXT—John 14:1-3; II Cor. 5:1-10; I John 3:2, 3.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Our Heavenly Home.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Christ Preparing a Home for Christians.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Our Heavenly Home.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Beauty and Power of the Christian's Hope.

I. Assurance of a Heavenly Home (Jno. 14:1-3).

The announcement concerning the death of Christ, accompanied with the shaping of events which pointed to a speedy accomplishment of the same, shattered the disciples' hope. The Lord told them that He was going away and that they could not follow Him. This brought great grief to their hearts. They perhaps began to doubt His Messiahship, but He did not leave them comfortless.

1. He asked them to believe and trust in Himself as God (v. 1).

"Ye believe in God, believe also in me." Faith in the God-man, Christ Jesus, will steady the heart, no matter how great the sorrow or intense the grief. If we will but place the cares and burdens of life upon Him our tears shall be turned into joy and our despondency transformed into a radiant hope.

2. He assured them that He was going to prepare a place for them in His Father's house (v. 2). He assured them that that place would have an abundance of room, for there were "many mansions" in His Father's house. We should learn from this that heaven is not an imaginary place. It is a prepared place for a prepared people.

3. He assured them that He would come again and escort them to heaven (v. 3).

Jesus will not wait for His own to come to Him, but will personally come back to the earth and call forth from the graves those who have died in the faith (I Thess. 4:16, 17), and transform living believers and take them all to be with Himself in the heavenly home for evermore. When He said, "I will come again," He no doubt meant His personal, bodily and literal return to this earth.

II. Assurance of the Resurrection of the Body (II Cor. 5:1-10). That which nerved Paul for his conflict even when physical death threatened was the assurance that even such violence would but hasten his presence with the Lord. As he faced the uncertain future he was sure:

1. That his present body was only a tabernacle, a tent in which he lived temporarily (v. 1). Though this tent were destroyed he had nothing to fear, as there was a building to take its place. This house which is to take the place of the tent is

(1) From God.

(2) Not made with hands.

(3) It is eternal.

Our natural body at best crumbles to dust in about three score and ten years, but the resurrection body shall abide forever.

(4) It is to be "in the heavens."

2. He earnestly longed for the change (vv. 2-4). The human personality instinctively shrinks from a state of disembodiment, but the intelligent Christian earnestly longs for the exchange of the natural body for the spiritual. We long to put off the perishable and take on the imperishable.

3. This plan was wrought by God (v. 5).

God did not fashion the body for death, but for life. God is not the God of the dead but of the living.

4. Believers should be of good courage (vv. 6-8).

While we live in this body we are absent from the Lord, but because of the Holy Spirit dwelling within us, we confidently walk by faith, being more anxious to be absent from the body and present with the Lord.

5. The believer's chief concern in this life should be to please the Lord (vv. 9, 10).

Nothing matters—health, sickness, strength, weakness, fame or obscurity, friends or loneliness—provided at the end of the journey we hear the Lord's "well done, good and faithful servant."

III. Glorified With the Lord (I Jno. 2:2, 3).

We are now God's children, but the change which awaits the resurrection has not come yet. When it comes it will reveal our wonderful future. When the Son of God shall be manifest we shall be like Him in glory. When Christ shall come again the saints shall share His glory. This glorious hope will transform the life. The one who has it will keep himself pure even as He is pure.

The Charter Oak

THE bungling impatience of a tyrant's agent to destroy all evidence of American colonial liberty gave the New England colonies a splendid emblem which was to serve as an inspiration for lovers of liberty until the war for independence was fought and won a century later.

The colony of Connecticut was very proud of the charter granted it in 1662 by Charles II, which gave the community a large measure of freedom and independence. James II, who entertained continental notions of absolutism, determined that the colonies should come under more complete subjection. To this end he sent Sir Edmund Andros to America as royal governor general. Andros peremptorily demanded that the colonies surrender their charters. Connecticut refused.

After a year of storming and threatening, Sir Edmund left Boston and visited Hartford with a troop of soldiers to demand the charter in person. The assembly was in session, and into its hall marched the king's governor. His brusque demand was met by argument which lasted until darkness had settled down and candles had been lighted. At length Sir Edmund angrily demanded that the parchment be brought into the room. When the box containing the charter was placed on the table, Sir Edmund moved as though to seize it. At that instant a commotion arose among the crowd of spectators, a cloak was suddenly thrown with such dexterity as to snuff out all the candles, and Sir Edmund's voice was heard cursing and charging that treachery was forward.

When flint and steel had accomplished the slow work of relighting candles, it was found that the precious charter had disappeared. The royal governor general swore and stormed in vain. Assembly members knew no more than he what had become of the paper.

Later it was learned that some one—admiring colonists pointed to Capt. Joseph Wadsworth, a militia officer—had snatched the charter and borne it away to a hollow oak tree in Hartford, where it remained securely hidden.

The Charter Oak became the most famous tree in America and long served as a shrine for lovers of liberty.

The Importance of One Vote

BUT for the absence of one member from the hall of congress on a certain day in 1784, a measure would have been passed that would have prevented the American Civil war three-quarters of a century later.

Thomas Jefferson, author of the Declaration of Independence and founder of the Democratic party, was the determined foe of the institution of slavery, which his party was later to defend. Jefferson even inserted a clause against the slave trade in the Declaration of Independence, but it was struck out.

When Jefferson introduced a measure in 1784 for the government of the southwest territory "ceded or to be ceded" to the United States, it was found that a clause prohibiting slavery in this new territory was included. The measure affected Kentucky, Tennessee and Mississippi, and later would have affected the vast territory comprised in the Louisiana purchase. The clause failed by one vote. It was known that a certain New Jersey member, who was absent that day, would have voted for it.

Slavery in those days was not looked upon with great favor by any large section. New England states were rapidly emancipating the slaves within their borders, and in 1808 a federal law was passed prohibiting the slave trade. It was thought that slavery would gradually die out even in the South.

Then Whitney invented the cotton gin, which separated the seed from the fiber, and cotton took on new value. It became, in fact, the most important American crop, and slave labor could be effectually employed in raising it. The South now became more warmly attached to the institution than ever before, and the conditions that were to bring on the Civil war speedily developed.

Had the New Jersey opponent of slavery only been present on that day in 1784, the negro as property would have been confined to a few seaboard states in the South and slavery would have been well on the wane before cotton became king.

First Book in English

The oldest book in the English language is alleged to be "De Proprietatibus Rerum" by Bartholomew de Glanville, who wrote in the Fourteenth century. It was translated into English by Trevisa after it had been printed in folio form by Caxton in 1480, and probably the translation was made from the Caxton folio. The translation was published by Wynkin de Worde in 1507.

Cod Supply Still Strong

The total annual catch of cod on the Grand banks of Newfoundland amounts to over 200,000,000 fish, and this steady drain has continued for hundreds of years, yet the supply shows no sign of diminishing.

Two great snow owls, native birds of the northland each with a wing spread of five feet, have been captured in Tiffin township, north of Defiance, by LeRoy Rittenhouse and Hiram Baldwin. Rittenhouse trapped his bird on the farm of George Singer, when it alighted on a stump. Baldwin caught his after a terrific struggle in which the bird scratched his hands and arms and tore his coat with its claws. Baldwin came across the bird one night while driving. The lights of his automobile blinded it and Baldwin succeeded in its capture after a dangerous fight.

Youthfulness is the keynote of the mode. The matron must forget her years; the maid revel in them. The slenderizing straight line, unbroken from shoulder to toe, despite the changes that each season brings, still holds supremacy over the style. Two of the Practical Patterns presented herewith offer the unbroken straight line in dresses for street and afternoon wear. One of these is Number 969, a street frock with a front panel like an elongated apron. The dress effect is perfectly tailored, with a straight back. Two unique pockets are tucked into the corners of the panel.

Even the smallest girl in the family comes in for attention, and Number 966 is a child's coat which can be made of silk or light weight cloth by the mother who is looking ahead toward Spring, or of heavier material for present wear.

"How do you like your new tenants?" Mrs. Driver asked as she and Mrs. Yates sat in the rose arbor for their "weekly darn and visit."

"There are four in the family: the father, mother and the twin daughters," Mrs. Yates replied.

A smile twinkled in Mrs. Driver's eyes. "I understand," she murmured.

Mrs. Yates looked up inquiringly.

"You have told me something like that three times now; it is impossible that you have learned nothing more. What have you found out is not favorable and you are politely keeping it secret."

"S-s-h," cautioned Mrs. Yates.

Around the house came little Anne Rogers from across the street. She carried her much-loved puppy in her arms. "Let's play on this side of the house where it is shady," she said.

"We had better not," one of the twins quavered, "she might not like it."

"Who might not like it?" asked Anne.

"Mrs. Yates. She might get mad."

Mrs. Yates gave Mrs. Driver a look that said plainly, "Just listen and your question will be answered."

"No indeed!" Anne's voice piped eagerly, "Mrs. Yates will not mind. She likes to have the children play here." She paused a moment and laughed, "Why I never saw Mrs. Yates the least bit mad. I do not believe she ever would get mad. It would be rude, you know."

"Mother gets . . . ," one of the twins began, thought better of the confession and stopped.

Anne petted her puppy and he began gnawing her fingers. "What a bad little dog!" one of the twins exclaimed. "He is biting you!"

"He is cutting his teeth," Anne explained, "and likes to chew on things just as a baby does when it is cutting teeth."

Cautiously one of the twins reached a finger toward the puppy which awkwardly reached his paw toward her. "He is slapping at me!" the twin exclaimed.

"Maybe he wants to shake hands," Anne suggested. "I have been trying to teach him, though mother says he is rather young to learn tricks."

Just then a car drove up before Anne's house. "There's Uncle Herbert," she said. "I must go home and see him."

"Yes," a twin agreed, "he might get mad if you didn't."

Anne had started running, but she stopped suddenly and walked back slowly. "See here," she explained, looking solemnly at the twins, "no one around here ever getts mad." Then as Uncle Herbert's horn called a joyous "Honk, honk, honk," she ran home.

The twins stood in silence watching Anne and her uncle mount the steps together, then they looked a long time at each other.

"No one around here ever gets mad," said one as though she were repeating a lesson.

"I am so glad," said the other. "Let's go and tell Mother. I am sure she does not know."

Mrs. Driver smiled ruefully. "That is the secret: 'Mother does not know'"

"She is learning," Mrs. Yates amended hopefully. "Anne was over there a little while yesterday and I heard her giving just such replies as she gave today. I am sure she set Mrs. Brunson thinking for she was not nearly so shrill and fault-finding with the children the rest of the day.

"I am glad Anne has unconsciously taken the role of reformer. Her habit of putting a kindly construction on all that is said and done will help more than anything."

"BEAU GESTE" AT SHRINE AUDITORIUM

"Beau Geste," the sensation of the screen season in Chicago, will be seen at the Shrine Auditorium, Fort Wayne, for seven days, starting Sunday matinee, March 13, with daily matinees during the Ft. Wayne engagement.

"Beau Geste" is a spectacle of Herbert Brenon, for Adolph Zukor and Jesse L. Laskey, from the very popular novel of the same name by Major Percival Christopher Wren. Its cast would seem to be Who's Who of aristocratic filmdom since Mr. Brenon was given free rein in choosing players best adapted to portray the interesting characters in Major Wren's fascinating story. The title role is interpreted by none other than Ronald Colman, considered by many faithful fans to be the most promising successor to Rudolph Valentino. Other roles of importance are portrayed by Alice Joyce, Mary Brian, Noah Beery, Neil Hamilton, Ralph Forbes, Norman Trevor, William Powell, Victor McLaglan, Paul McAllister, and countless others. The environment of "Beau Geste" offers an immense field to Mr. Brenon's art, and he has availed himself of it in splendid fashion. An accompanying orchestra score has been composed for "Beau Geste" by Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld, and will be played by a special traveling orchestra of twenty.

BAND BENEFIT CARNIVAL AT H. S. GYM

Big Carnival! Big Time! High School Gymnasium, Saturday, March 26th. Come hear the band. See the man with the funny face. Knock down the nigger babies and have a good time.

Everyone is invited to attend the Benefit Carnival for the Band and to contribute something to build up a fund to keep this worthy organization in existance. Everyone appreciates the band during the summer months and should desire the entertainments that we have been enjoying to continue. If so, be prepared to attend the carnival the 26th and contribute something to help the cause along.

The management will accept all contributions offered, cash, flour, baked goods, corn, wheat, oats, chickens and anything you have to give. These articles can be given to the solicitors or brought to the gymnasium the 26th. At the gymnasium they will be sold to the highest bidder and all the proceeds go to the band.

Porter's Pain King

A Liniment

Quickly Checks Coughs and Colds. Used Since 1871

How many years has the "Pain King Man" been calling at your home?

More than 50 years ago, in 1871, Dr. Porter originated the idea of leaving medicine on a year's trial. Hundreds of thousands of bottles of Porter's Pain King are distributed every year on this fair plan by The Geo. H. Rundle Co., Piqua, Ohio.

There is such a steady, all-the-year-'round demand for Porter's Pain King, the original liniment, and Porter's Pain King Salve, that dealers everywhere now carry these standard home remedies in stock, and you need never be without them.

Many users have written letters telling how good Porter's Pain King is, how many things they use it for, and often adding, "I would not be without it." Read the directions wrapped around the bottle.

RICHES AT 112

Ben Hodge of Poplar Bluff is the oldest man in Missouri, and may soon be the richest, if the reports from England he recently received are verified, to the effect that he is chief heir to the estate of his grandfather, who died a multimillionaire. He lives alone upon a small farm and is more active than most men of fifty, taking care of all the farm work, and devoting his spare time to hunting and fishing. He will celebrate his one hundred twelfth birthday in April. What he will do with his money is not announced.

Polar Flyers Get Highest Honor

The much-coveted Congressional Medal of Honor, which was awarded by act of congress to Commander Richard E. Byrd, U. S. N., retired, and Warrant Machinist Floyd Bennett, U. S. N., for their flight over the North pole on May 9, 1926, was conferred on the intrepid flyers by President Coolidge at the White House. High officials of the navy, including Secretary Wilbur and Rear Admiral Moffett, chief of the bureau of aeronautics, witnessed the presentation.

They Are Taking Jaunts in the Air

Henry B. Dupont, of the powder-making family (left), and J. W. Beretta, New York engineer, dropped into the flying field of the Western Air Express at Los Angeles, completing a jaunt from Detroit. They immediately fell to grooming their plane for a hop to New York.

FARM POULTRY

BAD VENTILATION BIG LIABILITY

A poultry house without ventilation is a source of trouble and a liability to the owner, authorities at the college of agriculture, University of Illinois claim.

Proper ventilation is the changing of the air within the house without causing a drafty condition, and changing it often enough to take care of moisture. In other words the ideal desired by good ventilation is a house free from drafts and in a dry condition.

During winter months so many poultry keepers will make the mistake of closing their houses so tightly in an effort to get warmth that they will cause a stagnant air condition, and dampness will result. At no time during the year should the front of the house be entirely closed, and especially so if the pen is in any way crowded.

There are many schemes and mechanical devices made that will aid poultry-house ventilation, and while these have a value, the aim should be to establish conditions as efficient and fool proof as possible for getting fresh air into the house.

For the shed-roof type of house, the open front will solve the difficulty. This opening may have a rough weather protector of cotton, but a cotton screen is not necessary. Fresh air will never hurt the birds. Incidentally the open front will allow the birds direct sunlight on days of sunshine.

For the house with an A-shaped roof and which generally is wider than other types of houses, it would be advisable to put in a straw loft. The straw will insulate against cold and heat and will help to absorb moisture from the pen. It is advisable to have an opening in each gable end allowing for an air current over the straw. This is a very simple and efficient way of ventilating a house, and has the advantage of keeping the house cooler in summer and warmer in winter.

The one thing a person must guard against with a straw loft is the control of all mites and lice.

Pullets Hatched Early Begin to Lay in Fall

Early hatched pullets properly grown and matured will begin to lay during the fall and early winter, when fresh eggs are scarce and when egg prices are at their very highest point. It will make a great deal of difference in the returns from the flock whether the pullets lay fairly well during the winter or whether they do not begin to lay until spring, for in either case they will be consuming feed. Practically any pullet, whether late or early hatched, or even a very old hen, will lay during the spring season, but it is the early hatched pullets which must be depended upon for eggs during the fall and winter. The practice of hatching early as compared with hatching late will enable the poultry keeper to receive the very considerable added profit due to the production of winter eggs, and in many cases will make all the difference between loss and a good profit from the poultry flock; therefore, practice early hatching and secure winter eggs. It is very important.

Poultry Facts

Early roosting keeps the chicks from crowding into the corners.

Electric lights in winter is an artificial way of making things natural for hens, who do more work with longer days.

Never put chicks of different ages in the same coop or brooder unless there is a partition so that the tiny ones are separated from the older ones.

Don't neglect grass for the young chicks in the brooder house. It supplies the vitamines necessary to health and growth, that can be obtained nowhere else.

Poultrymen are placing stress upon the need of early hatching and early production from the pullets.

Duck eggs can be hatched very successfully in incubators, and most incubator manufacturers furnish special instructions for the hatching of duck eggs with their machines.

It takes 21 days for hen eggs to hatch; 28 days for duck eggs; 30 to 34 for goose eggs, and 28 days for turkey eggs. The time may vary somewhat according to conditions.

• • •

Even in the best of hatches there are always some chicks that are not just right. Such birds should be disposed of at once.

Exercise, grit and green feed all have their place in the development of the growing chick, but they cannot take the place of sunlight.

• • •

Sunshine is one of the necessities in successful chick raising. It prevents rickets or leg weakness, so common among chicks that are kept indoors during the early weeks of spring.

Exhaustion the Result of Thoughts of Work

A person may literally wear himself out doing nothing, according to William Frederick Book, professor of psychology at Indiana university. He cites in the American Magazine the case of a boy who was taken to a nerve specialist, whose examination revealed symptoms of overwork.

The physician rebuked the boy's parents for allowing him to become overworked, but learned, to his amazement, that the boy had done practically no work at all. The youth's one task was to carry one pan of water each day from a spring a quarter of a mile from his home, a task required by way of discipline. But the boy dreaded it so much that he wore himself out thinking about what a lot of hard work he had to do.

Curfew for Women

Magistrates in the little seaside town of Hastings, England, near where the Normans conquered King Harold in 1066, say that all women should be in their homes by ten o'clock at night. They were asked by a saloonkeeper, who wished to give a party to his women customers, for permission to keep his premises open after ten o'clock, the usual closing time. His application was refused on the ground that all women should be in their homes at that time.

New Airplane Idea

Air experts of the United States navy have designed airplanes which fold up their wings like birds, or collapse altogether, to fit merely into pigeonholes of enormous "floating garages." Great strides are being made in perfecting planes of these classes, especially craft which could be "entirely knocked down and its parts stacked together."

Tanlac Succeeds When Others Fail

Liver and Stomach Trouble of Year's Standing Relieved.

Frank Wright, 515 9th Street, Evansville, Ind., says: "Tanlac did what a lot of other medicines failed to. For a year I suffered from liver and stomach trouble. At night I tossed and turned, then I would get up in the morning tired and worn-out. Nervousness upset my stomach so that I could not eat without being tortured by indigestion.

"Now all the days of suffering are gone. I feel better than ever before. My stomach never bothers me. I can eat everything without suffering. I give Tanlac all the credit for my marvelous recovery. It toned up my liver, gave me good health."

This tonic usually frees the system of poison and drives out causes of pain. Builds strength and health. Get your first bottle of Tanlac from your druggist—today! Over 40 million bottles sold.

Have Kidneys Examined By Your Doctor

Take Salts to Wash Kidneys If Back Pains You or Bladder Bothers

Flush your kidneys by drinking a quart of water each day, also take salts occasionally, says a noted authority, who tells us that too much rich food forms acids which almost paralyze the kidneys in their efforts to expel it from the blood. They become sluggish and weaken; then you may suffer with a dull misery in the kidney region, sharp pains in the back or sick headache, dizziness, your stomach sours, tongue is coated, and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges. The urine gets cloudy, full of sediment, the channels often get sore and irritated, obliging you to seek relief two or three times during the night.

To help neutralize these irritating acids, to help cleanse the kidneys and flush off the body's urinous waste, get four ounces of Jad Salts from any pharmacy here; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days, and your kidneys may then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for years to help flush and stimulate sluggish kidneys; also to neutralize the acids in the system so they no longer irritate, thus often relieving bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive, cannot injure and makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink.

CHEESE SANDWICHES FOR AFTERNOON TEAS

Cream Cheese Sandwiches Prepared for Tea.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

These attractive combinations for afternoon tea are made with neufchatel or cream cheese as a basis. The round toasted crackers in the picture have the cream cheese on top, somewhat hollowed out and garnished with a colorful bit of jelly. The cheese softens the crackers on standing, so they should not be prepared until a short time before they are wanted.

Spread for Rolled Sandwiches.

The rolled sandwiches are spread on the loaf with cream cheese mixed with finely chopped watercress. Chow chow, chili sauce, or any other desired pickle mixture might have been used in place of the watercress. Another good spread for rolled sandwiches, suggested by the United States Department of Agriculture, consists of equal parts of soft cheese, chopped olives, pimentoes or green peppers, and nuts. Any two of these may be used with the cheese. Add salt and a little lemon juice if liked.

The bread for rolled sandwiches should be fresh and elastic in texture, so that it will not crumble or break when rolled. Spread the sandwich mixture on the cut end of the loaf, then with a very sharp knife cut off the thinnest possible slice, roll it up, and trim the ends. The knack comes with a little practice.

Finely Chopped Vegetables.

Many different finely chopped vegetables may be worked into cream cheese, seasoned and used for sandwich spreads. Some of the best liked are parsley, watercress, lettuce, spring onions, chives, radishes, cucumbers and celery. Onion or lemon juice may be included in the seasoning. These mixtures may also be used in the form of balls or stuffing for green peppers or celery to accompany salads.

HOW TO PREPARE GOOD STUFFINGS

Easy to Make If Proper Ingredients Are Handy.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

It is not hard to make a good stuffing if you have a few tasty seasonings on hand. The homemaker in the picture, which was taken by the United States Department of Agriculture, is making a stuffing for a flank steak, which she expects to roll up and bake; but the same stuffing ingredients could have been used for other meats, or for chicken or turkey. In this instance 1½ cupfuls of stale bread were used, 1 teaspoonful of salt, ½ teaspoonful pepper, 1 small onion, minced, ⅓ cupful of chopped celery, and 2 tablespoonfuls of butter or ¼ cupful of finely chopped fat, either beef suet or salt pork. The parsley seen in the picture was on hand for use as a garnish, but a tablespoonful might have been chopped fine and added to the stuffing.

Here is another stuffing which has been found particularly good with shoulder of lamb, in place of the shoulder blade, which the butcher will take out: 2 cupfuls dry bread crumbs, ½ pound cleaned spinach leaves, 4 tablespoonfuls butter, 2 tablespoonfuls of chopped celery, 1 tablespoonful chopped green pepper, 1 tablespoonful chopped onion, ½ teaspoonful salt, ¼ teaspoonful pepper. Cut the spinach up as small as possible, after thoroughly washing it. Put it in a pan with the green pepper, minced fine, the onion, and one-half the butter. Cook about 2 minutes—enough to wilt the spinach slightly. Stir constantly. Then push to one side of the pan, melt the remaining butter in the empty part, and mix it with the bread crumbs, so that they absorb the butter. This is simply an easy way of buttering the crumbs without using another pan. Mix the spinach and crumbs.

People have different preferences in regard to stuffing for poultry. Some like wet stuffing, some like dry. Many like poultry seasoning—sage and thyme—yet others do not. Some like onion flavor, others dislike it exceedly. For festive occasions chestnut or oyster stuffings are sometimes used. Here are two good poultry stuffings to suit various tastes, for each can be seasoned according to individual preference.

For a dry stuffing: Pull out the center of a loaf of stale bread and rub between the fingers until the crumbs are even in texture. For a quart of crumbs, melt 4 tablespoonfuls of butter in a pan and cook in it for about 5 minutes 1 tablespoonful of minced onion and 4 tablespoonfuls finely chopped celery stalks and tops. Do not allow these to dry. Mix the melted butter, onion, and celery with the bread crumbs, add about a teaspoonful of salt, and pepper according to taste. If you like poultry seasoning, add ½ teaspoonful poultry seasoning.

A moist stuffing may be made just the same way by mixing 1½ teaspoonfuls baking powder with the bread crumbs and adding ¼ cupful of boiling water after the bread crumbs and seasonings are combined.

In addition to stuffed flank steak, shoulder of lamb, or poultry, try the stuffing you prefer with other meats and also with fish. Have a breast of veal with spinach stuffing, or a boned fresh ham with sage and thyme stuffing, or baked sea trout with plain dry breadcrumb stuffing, seasoned with onion. Stuffed calf or beef heart is excellent baked. "Beef olives" are individual pieces of thin round steak rolled up with stuffing inside and baked en casserole in gravy. Whichever kind of stuffing you use, make a little more than you need and cook separately in a baking dish.

Cabbage and Apples Are Excellent When Baked

Cabbage, beets, carrots, turnips, celery, onions, squash—so runs the list of fresh vegetables available in many localities until the spring greens appear. There are tomatoes, beans, peas, corn, and many other kinds to be had in cans. These help out wonderfully in adding flavor and food value, but even so the home maker is often put to it to ring sufficient changes on the vegetables she can get to keep the menus from becoming monotonous.

One way to do this is to try various combinations of vegetables with each other, and also with apples, which are usually to be had throughout the winter. The bureau of home economics recommends the following dish to introduce a change.

Baked Cabbage and Apples.

2 quarts shredded cabbage.	1 teaspoonful sugar
1 quart sliced apples	2 teaspoonfuls salt
2 to 4 tablespoonfuls butter	1 cupful buttered crumbs

Grease a baking dish and make a layer of cabbage and then of apple, sprinkling with the sugar, salt, and dot with butter. Repeat until all the vegetable and other ingredients are used. On the last layer place the buttered crumbs. Cover and bake until the cabbage and apples are tender. Remove the top for the crumbs to brown. Serve from the dish.

Texture Very Important When Choosing Fabrics

Texture is a very important consideration when choosing materials for a garment. This is especially true in regard to stout figures; shiny fabrics, even though they are black, seem to increase the size of the wearer. Coarsely woven, thick, or fuzzy materials increase the apparent bulk of the figure. Soft, clinging materials should be chosen for the plump person rather than those which are stiff, such as organdie and taffeta. These may be worn by the more slender, youthful figure. Color, although not a texture, is another important factor. Light and bright colors tend to increase the size while dark neutral colors decrease the apparent size of the wearer.

V-Shaped Neckline

Variations of the V-shaped neckline will be found to be most becoming to the round face. The point may be slightly rounded or it may be made square. It is not always necessary for it to be pointed. A collar may or may not be used. The square neck is also becoming to this type of face although it is not as pleasing as the pointed neck. A round neck repeats the round line of the face making it appear more round.

Disease Works Havoc in Wild Duck Flocks

Creation of bird sanctuaries throughout the country where wild fowl may nest and feed in safety is proposed in a federal game refuge bill, and sportsmen are recommending its adoption to check the rapid decrease in the number of birds, says Popular Mechanics Magazine. The plan includes the establishment of public shooting grounds, adjacent to the preserves. According to experts, ducks in the western part of the country are threatened with extinction unless ways are found to combat a form of paralysis which afflicts them after drinking contaminated water. This disease is widespread near Great Salt lake. It afflicts other marsh birds as well as ducks and, when least prevalent, takes a toll of 30,000 to 100,000 yearly, while more than 1,000,000 ducks alone are killed in the worst years. The salts in the waters have made them poisonous to the fowls. The malady does not prove fatal if the birds can get fresh water in time.

TELLS FAT PEOPLE HOW TO RETAIN NORMAL WEIGHT

Harvard Medical Professor Sets Out Five Steps That Should Be Taken

Cambridge, Mass., Mar. 16.—A question that is paramount in the minds of many—how to get him—has been answered by a member of he faculty of theHarvard Medical School.

Dr. Lawrence T. Fairwell, instructor in physiology, is the authority of this good news to plump people. He has listed five steps which should be taken by those who wish to reduce:

—Submit to a thorough physical examination by your physician to discover any possible serious disease of the heart or kidneys. A possible diabetic condition should not be overlooked. Do not attempt, on any acount, o reduce without the advice of your physician.

2—Arrange a definite course of action and stick to it. Do not "break raining" by eating an occasional rich meal. You are wasting your time in trying to reduce unless you consistently guard yourself against tempting foods.

3—With the approval of your physician the restricted diet should be supplemented with exercise suitable to your individual needs.

4—Include a moderate amount of fresh milk and plenty of fresh fruit and vegetables in your diet.

5—Reduce at a consistent rate of aboutt one pound per week. Thus, if you are 25 pounds overweighe, plan to take at least six months to bring your weight to normal.

This program, Dr. Fairhall said, was for "the frankly obese." "For those who are moderately overweight—those who have traveled only a moderate distance on the road to obesity—the program is "Merely an increased amount of exercise and proper regulation and consistent reduction in food intake somewhat below your requirement will soon restore your weight to normal.

"Above all, the success of reducing depends upon the individual. Conscientious self-denial and rigorous adherence to the course of action adopted will inevitably bring results.

"The increased ease of living and buoyancy that comes with the discarding of excess weight more than repays the slight drudgery involved."

'PEACHES' LOSES HER DIVORCE SUIT, REPORT

The New York American in an article Tuesday stated that Edward W. "Daddy" Browning has won the separation suit he brought against his wife, the former "Peaches" Heenan.

"Peaches" has lost her counter suit against "Daddy" and with it any chance of getting alimony, according to the American.

In denying "Peaches" a separation, it is understood, the newspaper said, that Justice A. H. Seeger found her charges of alleged cruelty trivial and in some instances found it difficult to credit her testimony.

"This opinion of Judge Seeger will be filed, unless last minute changes are made in his plans, with a county clerk today," said the American.

"Elaborate precautions to prevent any leaks in the decision did not suceed in keeping the American from obtaining authoritative advance information of its contents.

"Justice Seeger repelled any suggestion that he make the decision public except by filing it at Carmel. In order to protect its secrecy until it should be actually on file he planned to give it and the exhibits in the case to a trusted messenger only.

"The next move in the case will eb for John E. Mack of Poughkeepsie, the successful lawyer in the case, to prepare findings of fact and conclusions of law in accopinion. Alternative findings may be submitted by Heenry Epstein, lawyer for 'Peaches.' The findings adopted by Justice Seeger will become the formal decision.

"Justice Seeger's dismissal of 'Peaches' "separation suit will compel her, if she desires future support from 'Daddy' to offer to come back to him on his own terms.

ST. JOE NEWS.

VOL. XLI. ST. JOE, DeKALB COUNTY, INDIANA, THURSDAY, MARCH 24, 1927 NUMBER 12

PASSING OF AGED CONCORD TOWNSHIP CITIZEN

Daniel Webster Baker, son of James and Barbara Rummel Baker, was born March 11, 1846 near Gettysburg, Pa., and departed this life March 16, 1927, at the age of 81 years and 5 days.

He was united in marriage to Rebecca Hay, October 12, 1872. To this union seven children were born: Enoch, having died in infancy and James, died at the age of 18 years, and the wife and mother passed to her heavenly reward March 26, 1922.

To mourn the loss of a father, grandfather and a brother the following survive, five children, Orla, Mrs. Effie Wilson, Mrs. Mame Gibford, Frank and Mrs. Laura Maurer, all of this community, sixteen grandchildren, 6 great grandchildren and three brothers, John Baker of Auburn, William of Concord and Joseph of Los Angeles, Cal. Two other brothers and three sisters preceded him in death.

Daniel Webster came to Indiana at the age of three years, as a member of one of the old pioneer families and has lived in this community ever since. Through the long years of sorrow, joy and toil he has seen many wonderful changes come over this community.

Through all these years he contributed much to the betterment of the community with the labor of his hands. From a land of a wilderness and swamps have come, first the log cabins, cleared farming land, splendid homes and all improvements. His labors helped to build the beautiful Concord church and in his declining year he looked upon this land mark with pride. The changing years rolled on and on about him and he came to his grave in full age, like as a shock of corn cometh in his season.

A great host of friends and neighbors paid their last respects to him at the funeral and extended their sympathy to his children.

Death, again has broken into the rank of the sacredness of family ties and the aged father has passed on. Yet he has lived his allotted time and has died at an old age and peaceful, the manner in which the human race should naturally pass away.

The funeral service was held at the Concord church Saturday morning, Rev. McKnight in charge. Burial in Riverside cemetery, E. R. Kinsey, funeral director.

Your Eyes and Your NERVES

Your eyes are directly connected with your nervous system. Strain your eyes and the effect may be felt almost anywhere in the body. Headaches are a common result, though there are many other attendant ills. When your eyes receive proper attention this nervous strain is removed, and usually the troubles vanish at once. Let us help you.

Give Your Carpenter Good Material

YOU wouldn't knowingly employ a poor carpenter to build your house; of course not; so be sure then that you supply a good workman with good materials. He can't build well with poor lumber. Give him our carefully manufactured lumber—lumber that comes full length—surfaced four sides, square cut both ends—even breadth and thickness carefully dressed and matched. He can do a better job quicker with lumber bearing the Long-Bell trade-mark. We would like to show you the quality of our lumber and have you look over the many practical building plans we have at our office.

PROSPECTS GOOD FOR CIGAR FACTORY AT ST. JOE

Allen H. Wright, cigar manufacturer of Hicksville, Ohio, made The News a visit Tuesday, prospecting for a suitable location for a sub-factory to be operated in connection with his Hicksville plant. His present quarters are about up to its capacity for production and by a branch factory, he will then be able to produce sufficient cigars to keep up with his salesmen. The matter of help will determine whether St. Joe can procure this factory and any girl or married lady up to fifty years wishing employment can leave their names with The News and then Mr. Wright will come to St. Joe and go over the matter and determine whether or not he can go ahead with the project.

It will be necessary to have at least twenty women to start with, starting in at a wage of $1.00 per day if they work for two months, or until such time that they can earn more at piece work. Otherwise they will be paid at actual piece work. In a very short time one will be able to earn from $1.50 to $2.50 per day and besides continue her household duties if a married lady.

While this notice is sudden, yet it needs action on the part of those who are willing and want work, as Mr. Wright is forced to get a greater production.

The county contest will be held Friday evening at Auburn.

BAND BENEFIT CARNIVAL AT H. S. GYM

Big Carnival! Big Time! High School Gymnasium, Saturday, March 26th. Come hear the band. See the man with the funny face. Knock down the nigger babies and have a good time.

Everyone is invited to attend the Benefit Carnival for the Band and to contribute something to build up a fund to keep this worthy organization in existance. Everyone appreciates the band during the summer months and should desire the entertainments that we have been enjoying to continue. If so, be prepared to attend the carnival the 26th and contribute something to help the cause along.

The management will accept all contributions offered, cash, flour, baked goods, corn, wheat, oats, chickens and anything you have to give. These articles can be given to the solicitors or brought to the gymnasium the 26th. At the gymnasium they will be sold to the highest bidder and all the proceeds go to the band.

CELEBRATES 57TH WEDDING ANNIVERSARY

Mr. and Mrs. Florance Buchanan, residents of St. Joe, celebrated their fifty-seventh wedding anniversary at the home of their daughter, Mrs. F. W. Rhoads and family, near Spencerville, on Sunday, although the event really took place on March 21, 1870, which day came on Monday this year.

When one looks ahead for fifty-seven years, he can hardly comprehend the vast changes and in looking back the time seems short, and many happy occurrances of their wedded life come to them, which leads one to believe that it has not been long since they started on the voyage of life together, full of hope, cheer, vigor and ambition, and now they are going down the western slope of life with health, sight and hearing impaired, their steps shortened, all of which causes them to think of the years gone by.

Mr. and Mrs. Buchanan were married at Auburn by the Rev. S. B. Ward, Baptist minister of that day, who was a close friend of the bride. After the marriage they returned to the Buchanan home near the Carr school house where an infare dinner was served by Mrs. Elizabeth Buchanan.

Emanuel Ulm and wife, then young lovers, were participants at the infare dinner and when celebrating the anniversary they reminded the aged couple of this fact, which was quite a coincident. Mrs. Rebecca Beams was also a guest Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. Ulm were married four years after the Buchanans.

For twenty-three years they lived on a farm east of Concord, and prior to this they lived on the old homestead and five years at Auburn. When they sold their farm they moved to St. Joe, where they still continue their home. Although they spent the past winter with the daughter and family they will soon return to St. Joe and enjoy their pleasant home.

The health of Mr. and Mrs. Buchanan has been fine for the past months, due undoubtedly to the fact that they did not have the cares of making and caring for their home, they were not necessarily exposed to the weather, which changes are hard on aged people.

They are receiving cards and letters of cougratulations daily from their friends and this continues the pleasure of the event. Beautiful roses were presented from J. E. Sturgis and family of Cincinnatti, and the Rhoads family.

TWO WANT TO ADMINISTER ESTATE OF G. F. BALTZ

An application for the appointment of Dr. Nelson J. Shook of Corunna, as administrator of the estate of the late George F. Baltz, who died in the Garrett hospital March 5, has been filed in the office of County Clerk J. Harvey Knauer by Milo J. Thomas of Corunna.

Mr. Baltz left $200 in personal property and $8,000 in real estate, according to the application His heirs are two children, Edith Kelley of Modesto, Calif., and a son who lives at Modesto. Dr. Shook filed $400 bond with Mr. Thomas as surety.

Don E. VanFleit was appointed administrator of the estate upon his own application March 12. Mr. VanFleit had been looking after some of Mr. Baltz's business. However, it is stated that Mr. Thomas is the largest creditor of the estate and that Dr Shook's appointment as administrator is in harmony with the deisres of the children. The court will decide after the April term opens whether Mr. VanFleit or Dr. Shook should administer the estate.

BRODBECK GOES TO HUNTINGTON JOB

R. W. Brodbeck, Wabash agent, started in as agent at Huntington Tuesday morning with an increase in salary over his St. Joe job, where he has worked for seven years. This information was given him Friday, when the bids for the Huntington job were decided upon by the company.

Mr. Brodbeck announced that his family will remain here until school closes and then they will take up their abode at Huntington.

A surprise supper was held Monday evening at the Methodist church in honor of their services at the church the past two years, to which a good crowd attended and enjoyed the fine supper. At 6:45 he left for Huntington where he started to work Tuesday morning.

FINISHED FLOORS KEPT IN CONDITION

String or Cloth Mop Is Almost a Necessity.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Finished floors can be kept in good condition with a comparatively small outlay of time and strength, but the method must be adapted to the kind of finish, says the United States Department of Agriculture. A string or cloth dust mop, such as is shown in the illustration, is almost a necessity in the home where the floors are varnished, waxed, oiled or painted. A cotton flannel bag may be drawn over the broom to serve the same purpose, but is not so convenient.

When the surface of the floor that is not covered by rugs is merely dusty, such a mop enables one to go over it quickly and easily. The mop should not be saturated with oil but may be slightly moistened with floor oil or kerosene unless the floor is waxed. If it is necessary to give a floor a good oiling, another mop or woolen cloth should be used and kept especially for the purpose.

In general, varnished floors retain their color and luster better if no water is used on them, but if very dirty they may be wiped with a cloth or mop wrung out of warm soapy water, wiped dry at once, and polished with an oiled cloth or mop.

Waxed floors should be swept with a soft brush or mop entirely free from oil. Oil softens wax and should never be used on it in any way. When a waxed floor becomes dull and grimy it should be given a more thorough cleaning with a cloth wrung out of warm soap water, or better still moistened with turpentine or gasoline. Both turpentine and gasoline are very inflammable, however, and should not be used in a room where there is an open flame of any kind. After the waxed floor is cleaned, rub on a new thin coating of wax and polish with a weighted brush or a woolen cloth.

Oiled floors should be swept with a soft brush and dusted with an oiled cloth or mop. They may be cleaned occasionally with a cloth wrung out of warm soapy water and then polished with a cloth moistened with kerosene or a good floor oil. Excess of oil should be avoided. Water and soap should be used very sparingly on oiled floors. Similar treatment is used for painted floors.

Various Excellent Uses for Cooked Rabbit Meat

Cold cooked rabbit may be ground up and used just as chicken or other cooked meat is used for hash, croquettes, shepherd's pie, or similar dishes, points out the United States Department of Agriculture. Meat loaf or meat balls may be made of raw chopped rabbit meat in the same way as beef or veal. Sausage cakes may be made from twice-ground rabbit meat with any preferred seasoning. If pork flavor is desired one part fat pork may be mixed with two parts ground rabbit meat. Very good sausage flavor will result from mixing the following proportions: three pounds twice-ground rabbit meat, one minced onion (which may be omitted), one tablespoonful salt, one teaspoonful pepper, one and one-half teaspoonfuls powdered sage, one bay leaf, pinch each of thyme and allspice, four to six tablespoonfuls finely crumbed dry bread or cracker crumbs, one beaten egg, and one-half cupful of rich sweet milk.

Lettuce Is Favorite of All Salad Vegetables

Many home makers think that a salad without lettuce is as impossible as an omelet without eggs. Though strictly speaking a stalk of celery or a radish eaten with salt is a salad, lettuce is the prime favorite of all salad vegetables. It is also one of the green-leaf group that contains vitamines and minerals. Like the others it supplies bulk too and so helps to keep the food moving through the digestive tract in a healthy way. Lettuce by itself is so mild in flavor that it needs a well-seasoned dressing. Adding a little roquefort cheese to French dressing or grating a little American cheese over the top after French or mayonnaise dressing has been added is an easy way of giving appetizing flavor to a plain lettuce salad.

PLAN FOR FRESH VEGETABLES FOR TABLE

Kitchen Garden on a Utah Farm.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

When you lay out your garden this spring be sure to allow for plenty of fresh vegetables for the table during the summer, as well as some for canning and some to store for winter use. Two vegetables other than potatoes should be served every day, according to nutrition specialists of the United States Department of Agriculture, to supply an abundance of vitamins in the diet. A salad of raw vegetables, or lettuce and fruit, may be counted as one of these vegetables, and if taken in addition to the other two vegetables suggested it increases still further the chance that sufficient vitamins are being provided.

Succession of Crops.

Plant the garden with one eye on the menus. Certain crops like snap beans, lettuce, peas and spinach can be planted at intervals throughout the season, and consequently they will seldom be missing from the family table, after the first crop has matured. A number of crops can be given a start of ten days to three weeks if the seeds are planted in a window box or "flat." Tomatoes, cabbage, peppers, eggplant, cauliflower and lettuce can thus be started early.

A small garden is not hard to take care of if it is carefully planned on paper before it is set out. On the farm a good-sized space can sometimes be devoted to what is usually known as the "farm" or "kitchen garden." A garden planted in long, narrow rows is easiest to cultivate. One long row may have several different vegetables planted in it.

Economize on Space.

Plant only such vegetables as will yield good returns for the table in proportion to the space they occupy. If available ground is limited, Potatoes, corn, cucumbers, melons and peas require considerable space. Lettuce, spinach, beets, carrots, snap beans or tomatoes are more economical of space and therefore adapted to growing in a small area.

The individual tastes of the family will, of course, determine largely what is to be planted in the garden. All the green-leaf vegetables, such as spinach, cabbage, kale, swiss chard, beet greens and lettuce, are rich in vitamins. Carrots, rutabagas, tomatoes and string beans are also excellent. All vegetables furnish minerals and roughage as well as vitamins, and so are important in the diet of most persons.

—15—

Not for long now could Polly count on blind obedience. It was not in the nature of things, nor the nature of a grown-up daughter. Polly decided the time had come for a frank confession.

While Mary brushed her hair, Polly announced that she meant to go to Venice and look about for a place to spend several months, cheaply and comfortably.

Mary said it sounded interesting, but did not commit herself farther. She was tired and hurt by these half-confidences.

Frankness was impossible, until her mother was frank with her. She would not degrade her mother's intelligence, or her own, by playing the hypocrite. Mary said she was sleepy and went to bed. But not to sleep.

Mrs. Johnston stayed in her own room, the door slightly open between them. She disrobed and stood in her dressing gown before the long mirror, a wonderful color study in a soft, clinging chiffon robe of blue, with her red hair flaming against white shoulders. Polly did not take her usual nightly delight in the spectacle. She braided her hair with no eyes for the vision in the mirror.

"Got to do it, Polly. Come," she said to herself and put down the comb. She went to the door and softly opened it.

"Mary, want to sleep?"

Mary shook her head, turned on the reading light, threw a rose-colored dressing gown over her shoulders and patted the bed beside her. She recognized from her mother's face that the time had come.

"I'd like immensely to have you come and talk yourself out to me. It's been—quite a while," she announced with a sly look up at her mother.

Mrs. Johnston sighed. There was no doubt she was in for it. She sat down, looked at Mary, shut her eyes and took the plunge.

"Mary, I'd like to talk about your father."

Mary sat up. Of all the unlikely things. Talk about her father! Bluebeard's door was about to be opened. From her earliest youth she could remember her mother saying: "Mustn't ask mother questions about father, Mary. It only makes Mumsy unhappy and miserable." What could it mean?

Mrs. Johnston settled herself back on Mary's bed.

"How much do you know about me, Mary?"

"Only that you're the nicest mother ever invented," Mary told her, honestly. "The best looking and the best friend a girl ever had."

Mrs. Johnston leaned over impulsively and kissed the girl.

"I only hope you'll think exactly the same when I get through."

"Hurry up, Mother, and tell. You sound like a 'best seller.'"

"I have known some less interesting plots. Well, we'll begin with the fact that I was born of poor people, in Limekilns, N. J. My mother and father both died when I was a little thing, about twelve, and a kind woman brought me up. She took me to New Brunswick, and sent me to school. I helped about the house after school hours. She kept a boarding house. I had only one relative in the whole world, my Uncle Michael, my mother's brother, and he was as crabbed an old bachelor as ever drew breath. He was supposed to be in Pennsylvania somewhere, working in the iron mines, when my people died. But nobody could find him, so Mrs. Bradley took me in.

"Mrs. Bradley died, and her sister came and took the house and ran it as a students' boarding house. I was inherited with the house, and kept right on working there. Mrs. Thomas, the sister, took no interest whatever in me. All she cared about was keeping the house clean and getting the work done. She didn't keep enough servants to do that comfortably, so I had to work from morning to night. It was ghastly."

She paused, looked at Mary shyly and began to describe the men at the boarding house. Mary listened, fascinated. To think that her mother was capable of keeping this odd past to herself all these years. It was most romantic. She waited eagerly for the first mention of her father. Her mother hadn't mentioned any Johnston yet, most of her talk was about some man named Dabbs. Her mind wandered off, thinking about the name and the man it suggested to her.

"It must be painful to have a name like that."

"Do you think so?" asked her mother, a little uncertainly. "Well, anyway, this young man lived in the house, but he never looked at me—"

"Mother!" scoffed Mary. "A lovely red-headed girl like you! I don't believe it."

"But you must, darling. There's a lot of difference between red-headed Mrs. Johnston, with lots of money and pretty clothes to set off her locks and hair, and a big, overworked, red-headed chambermaid in a boarding house.

"I hated nearly all men. I had a mind and hopes above my station. I was paid so little that I could only save money slowly. I wanted to get enough to nerve myself to leave that house. My ambition at that time was to be a school teacher."

She smiled at the girl and Mary smiled back.

"Mother, how brave you were. My heart just aches to think of you, with all your brilliant ideas, tied down that way."

"Mother, How Brave You Were."

"Bless you, Baby!" her mother exclaimed. "My lost uncle turned up just about then, and found me out. He was a terrible creature; six feet tall, very dry and brittle and had a bad cough, and a vile temper. What was left of his carroty hair had turned a yellow-gray. The poor thing hadn't long to live.

"He had worked too hard, and lived too roughly, to know how to take care of himself. He had plenty of money, I discovered, and while he knew how to take care of it, he didn't know how to spend it. He didn't want to leave it to any one, especially to a girl. But I was all he had—poor soul." For a moment, Mary's mother caressed the toe of her slipper in silence.

"But Mother, please," urged Mary, "how can I wait until you get to me?"

Her mother came back from some long unlit cavern of her mind.

"Of course," she admitted, "that would naturally interest you most. Though Uncle found me and told me of his money, he swore me to secrecy as far as Mrs. Thomas' boarding house was concerned. He was like a lot of unmarried people, tremendously keen about marrying off the rest of the world. Mrs. Thomas had had a bad first and a wretched second husband, and hated men even worse than I did. She assured Uncle that I was a good girl and kept myself to myself and was perfectly safe.

"Uncle went away without committing himself in any way, but two days later a letter came, saying I was to come to a certain address to see him. I went. It was a private sanitarium, and Uncle was very ill indeed.

"He had his lawyer with him, and then and there I was ordered to get married. Uncle wanted to know that his money was going to some properly married woman with a man to look after her. I think some woman had treated him badly when he was young and poor. He wanted me to get married before any one knew I had any chance of getting money. He wanted me tied up to a hard-working lad who would expect to work for me, and would start honest, as he said, and have a family at once, and as large a family as possible.

"I was shocked and angry, furiously angry. But oh, how I wanted that money! There it was, dangling in front of me, a chance to learn all the things I longed to know, a chance to travel, to have pretty clothes, all the things I'd sworn to have. My dearest day dreams could be realities now, but would be lost to me unless I had a man to hang them on. I, who hated men, who hadn't wanted, and never had had a young man."

"Oh Mother, what did you do?"

"I didn't know what to do. I came home simply beside myself. I couldn't confide in the cook or Mrs. Thomas. I knew what would happen. They would laugh at me—and despise me. It's odd, isn't it? It's always the women who've made the worst matrimonial blunders who laugh the hardest.

"I found Mrs. Thomas in a fine rage. I'd forgotten to do the third floor before I went out. That was the floor young De Harms, Woods and Dabbs occupied. I went up there as quickly as I could get my things off and began slapping things together. Young Dabbs' room I left to the last, because—well, because he was a decent young fellow and wasn't so fault-finding as the others."

"I thought you hated all men," commented Mary, slyly.

Her mother ignored her. "I went to his room. There he was, sitting all huddled up by the window. I asked him if he minded my doing up the room while he was there, and he said he didn't. He had a telegram clutched in his hand. I could see that he was troubled. By and by I couldn't stand it any longer. I forgot my own troubles. I'd never been so sorry for anyone in my life. I went up to him, and quite forgetting I was a servant, said:

"Mr. Dabbs — Claude — what's wrong?"

"Claude!" Mary exclaimed. "Claude Dabbs? What a funny name! Why, it's the same as—"

Her mother stopped her with a quick: "It was funnier than that. I discovered afterward it was Claude Melnotte Dabbs."

Mary's soft laugh rang out, and then she checked it.

"Oh Mother, I'm sorry. I'm so interested. Hurry and tell."

Her daughter's mirth was not the pleasantest sound in Mrs. Johnston's ears just then. "I discovered that this young man, with the funny name, was in great trouble. His father was dying and the boy had no money to go home with, and his mother was quite too poor to send him any."

"Oh, poor thing. Of course you loaned him your savings."

"I didn't. I told him my troubles, and offered him five hundred dollars—if he would marry me."

"Mother! You didn't!"

"Sorry dear, but I can't stop to make this romantic. I'm telling you the plain, unvarnished truth. I thought his troubles and mine showed me a way out. I said if he would marry me and show himself, to my uncle, I would give him five hundred dollars. He was to promise to go away and never try to see me again. He was to leave me to go my way alone, while he went his."

"But Mother! What a cold-blooded thing to do!"

"Wasn't it?" agreed Mrs. Johnston, much embarrassed. "But you see it didn't seem like that to me, Mary. Please remember that he was only my door of escape and it was absolutely a business proposition."

"Oh Mother!"

"I can't help it, Mary. That's what I offered him, and after the first moment of astonishment, and when he was convinced that I was not fooling him and would actually have the money—I had two hundred and fifty dollars of my own savings to show him—he agreed."

"Oh dear," groaned Mary, "then he was just as bad!"

"I don't know." Mrs. Johnston said thoughtfully. "I've often wondered. You see, his father was dying."

"That's so, I'd forgotten."

Mrs. Johnston looked as though she was about to say something in her own defense, thought better of it, and went on, doggedly: "Uncle wasn't told anything about the agreement. Both my uncle and his lawyer were favorably impressed with Claude.

"Uncle insisted that we have the ceremony performed at once, and that suited both of us. Claude looked sick with anxiety, and was eager to get it over and start home. We were married before a justice of the peace, who knew neither of us. Right after the ceremony Claude went home with half of the five hundred in his pocket. The other half was to be his when he signed the papers agreeing to leave me alone, and not to block any petition I might make for divorce, on the grounds of desertion, later. The lawyer had to have time to draw the documents up."

"Mother, I simply can't recognize you as the calculating girl who married that way!"

"You'll have to, Mary. I did it. Just in time, too, for my uncle died that night. I was free and the money was mine. I left the boarding house and went to a quiet little hotel. I never told the people at the boarding house anything about the money, or the marriage.

"The lawyer was kind. He made arrangements for me to go to France and live with some friends of his sister who would finish my education. I was supposed to be a young widow."

Occasions Which Make Silence a Sacrament

There was a whole world of wisdom in the words a wise man of old, in the ages of faith ascribed to his Creator: "Be still then and know that I am God!" A later philosopher has remarked that no two men can be said to be truly friends unless they are content to bask in each other's company without expression of words. There are occasions when silence is the sacrament of faith and reverent joy, the seal and sign of a living union with the infinite and confident fellowship with our fellow man. It is in the practice of this silence that we learn how to discipline life, and recognise the profanity of the glib commonplaces of mere passing companionship, of formal religion and the useless volubility of controversy. We refrain from words because they are inadequate to express our experience, and the certitude of faith and confidence surpasses the powers of speech. "The truth is best spoken not by us, but through us," says a philosopher writing to another big journal. "The witness of true discipleship has its own silent testimony to the truth."

REVIEW—STUDIES IN THE CHRISTIAN LIFE

GOLDEN TEXT—If ye love Me keep My commandments.—John 14:15.

PRIMARY TOPIC — What Jesus Wants Us to Do.

JUNIOR TOPIC—The Christian Way of Living.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—What It Means to Be a Christian.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Marks of a True Christian.

The following methods of review are suggested:

I. A Descriptive Essay Method.

Each member of the class should be assigned to the task a week ahead of the preparation of an essay on the topics involved in the quarterly lessons, as for example: What constitutes a true Christian. Following Christ. The prayer life of a Christian. The Christian and his Bible. The home life of a Christian. Christian stewardship. The Christian and the missionary obligation.

II. The Question Review Method.

The teacher will prepare a list of questions dealing with the various phases of the quarter's lessons. These will be written on slips of paper and the members of the class will draw them. As examples of questions note the following: What does following Christ involve? What is the Christian's responsibility as to his Bible? What is the Christian's obligation as to stewardship? What are the duties of the members of the home? What is the Christian's obligation as to the evangelization of the world? What is the Christian's hope? Is Christ coming again? Will there be a resurrection of the body?

III. The Summary Method.

This method can always be used to good advantage with the advanced classes. The outstanding fact or facts should be grasped and the principal teaching of the quarter's lessons stated. Suggestions:

Lesson for January 2.

Jesus first calls men to be His disciples. He then calls them to have fellowship in His service. Those who receive this two-fold call will walk as He walked.

Lesson for January 9.

The one who really follows Christ shall be hated and opposed. Having fellowship with Christ, he will love his enemies, do good to those who hate him, bless them that curse him, pray for those which despitefully use him.

Lesson for January 16.

The Bible furnishes the Christian with full knowledge of God and man's obligation to Him. The only way to be able to stand firm and true in the coming perilous times is to be thoroughly grounded in the knowledge of the Scriptures.

Lesson for January 23.

Jesus, though divine, resorted much to prayer. If he needed this fellowship, how much more do His followers need it.

Lesson for January 30.

Followers of Jesus may expect temptations, but divine help is available for every need.

Lesson for February 6.

To every believer has been given certain talents such as gifts for service, knowledge, time, money, to be used for the honor of His Lord. A time of reckoning is coming at which reward will be given for fidelity, and judgment meted out for infidelity.

Lesson for February 13.

The home is the oldest and most important institution in the world. The most effective way of making strong and pure the church, society and the nation is to make the home Christian.

Lesson for February 20.

The subject of the kingdom is under solemn obligation to permeate society and let his light shine so that the heavenly father may be glorified.

Lesson for February 27.

Every believer has two natures—the flesh and the spirit. The only way to overcome the flesh is to be filled with the Spirit.

Lesson for March 6.

The Lord permitted persecution to fall upon the church to cause the disciples to be scattered in order for the widening of the testimony.

Lesson for March 13.

Christ has imposed upon every disciple the obligation of witnessing for Him to all the nations of the world.

Lesson for March 20.

The Christian's hope is the personal return of Jesus Christ to take him to His heavenly home. When Christ comes, the body of the believer who has fallen asleep will be resurrected and living believers will be caught up into glory with Christ.

The War at Close Range Described in a Remarkable Series by an Officer of the Marines

Capt. JOHN W. THOMASON, Jr.

(Illustrated by the Author from Sketches Made on the Battlefield)

(© by the Bell Syndicate, Inc.)

Editor's Note: This story is a cross section of the war. As Captain Thomason is a marine officer, naturally the actual names, dates, and places mentioned will bear a definite relation to marine activities in France; there is no intention, however, to overshadow the rest of the fighting American units. This story is a Marine story, because the author is only familiar with the combat experiences of his own men—but every doughboy who saw service in the war will recognize these experiences and encounters as similar to his own.

INTRODUCTION

Seven years after the war, across the world from France, I met a major of the American general staff, who was on the Paris-Metz road that last week in May, 1918, and saw the boys going in. "They looked fine, coming in there," he said. "Tall fellows, healthy and fit—they looked hard and competent. We watched you going in, through those little tired Frenchmen, and we all felt better. We knew something was going to happen—" and we were silent over Chilean wine, in a place on the South Pacific, thinking of those days and those men. . . .

There is no sight in all the pageant of war like young, trained men going to battle. The columns look solid and businesslike. Each battalion is an entity, 1,200 men of one purpose. They go on like a river that flows very deep and strong. Uniforms are drab these days, but there are points of light on the helmets and the bayonets, and light in the quick, steady eyes and the brown young faces, greatly daring. There is no singing—veterans know, and they do not sing much—and there is no excitement at all; they are schooled craftsmen, going up to impose their will, with the tools of their trade, on another lot of fellows; and there is nothing to make a fuss about. Battles are not salubrious places, and every file knows that a great many more are going in than will come out again—out that is along with the job. And they have no illusions about the job.

There is nothing particularly glorious about sweaty fellows, laden with killing tools, going along to fight. And yet—such a column represents a great deal more than 28,000 individuals mustered into a division. All that is behind those men is in that column, too: the old battles, long forgotten, that secured our nation—Brandywine and Trenton and Yorktown, San Jacinto and Chapultepec, Gettysburg, Chickamauga, Antietam, El Caney; scores of skirmishes nearly every year—in which a man can be killed as dead as ever a chap was in the Argonne; traditions of things endured and things accomplished, such as regiments hand down forever; and the faith of men and the love of women; and that abstract thing called patriotism, which I never heard combat soldiers mention—all this passes into the forward zone, to the point of contact, where war is girt with horrors. And common men endure these horrors and overcome them, along with the insistent yearnings of the belly and the reasonable promptings of fear; and in this, I think, is glory.

They tell the tale of an American lady of notable good works, much esteemed by the French, who, at the end of June, 1918, visited one of the field-hospitals behind Degoutte's Sixth French army. Degoutte was fighting on the face of the Marne salient and the second American division, then in action around the Bois de Belleau, northwest of Chateau Thierry, was under his orders. It happened that occasional casualties of the Marine brigade of the Second American division, wounded toward the flank where Degoutte's own horizon-blue infantry joined on, were picked up by French stretcher bearers and evacuated to French hospitals. And this lady, looking down a long, crowded ward, saw on a pillow a face unlike the fiercely whiskered Gallic heads there displayed in rows.

"Oh," she said, "surely you are an American!"

"No, ma'am," the casualty answered, "I'm a marine."

The men who marched up the Paris-Metz road to meet the Boche in that spring of 1918, the Fifth and Sixth regiments of United States marines, were gathered from various places. In the big war companies, 250 strong, you could find every sort of man, from every sort of calling. There were northwesterners with straw-colored hair that looked white against their tanned skins, and delicately spoken chaps with the stamp of the eastern universities on them. There were large-boned fellows from Pacific coast lumber camps, and tall, lean southerners who swore amazingly in gentle, drawling voices. There were husky farmers from the corn-belt, and youngsters who had sprung, as it were, to arms from the necktie counter. And there were also a number of diverse people who ran curiously to type, with drilled shoulders and a bone-deep sunburn, and a tolerant scorn for nearly everything on earth. Their speech was flavored with navy words, and words culled from all the folk who live on the seas and the ports where our warships go. In easy hours their talk ran from the Tartar wall beyond Pekin to the southern islands, down under Manila; from Portsmouth Navy yard—New Hampshire and very cold—to obscure bush-whackings in the West Indies, where war is girt with horrors. And common men endure these horrors and overcome them, along with the insistent yearnings of the belly and the reasonable promptings of fear; and in this, I think, is glory.

Cacao chiefs, whimsically sanguinary, barefoot generals with names like Charlemagne and Christophe, waged war according to the precepts of the French revolution and the Cult of the Snake. They drank the eau de vie of Haute-Marne, and reminisced on saki, and vino, and Bacardi rum—strange drinks in strange cantinas at the far ends of the earth; and they spoke fondly of Milwaukee beer. Rifles were high and holy things to them; they also talked patronisingly of the war, and were concerned about rations. They were the Leathernecks, the Old Timers; collected from ship's guards and shore stations all over the earth to form the Fourth brigade of marines, the two rifle regiments, detached from the navy by order of the President for service with the American Expeditionary Forces. They were the old breed of American regular, regarding the service as home and war as an occupation; and they transmitted their temper and character and viewpoint to the high-hearted volunteer mass which filled the ranks of the Marine brigade.

It is a pleasure to record that they found good company in the army. The Second Division (United States Regular was the official designation) was composed of the Ninth and Twenty-third infantry, two old regiments with names from all of our wars on their battle-flags, the Second regiment of engineers—and engineers are always good—and the Twelfth, Fifteenth, and Seventeenth field artillery. It was a division distinguished by the quality of dash and animated by an especial pride of service. It carried to a high degree esprit de corps, which some Frenchman has defined as esteeming your own corps and looking down on all the other corps. And although it paid heavily in casualties for the things it did—in five months about 100 per cent—the Second division never lost its professional character.

In 1917, when trained soldiers in the United States were at a premium, the navy offered a brigade of marines for service in France; it was regarded desirable for marine officers to have experience in large operations with the army; for it is certain that close co-operation between the army and the navy is a necessary thing in these days of far-flung battle lines. The British distress at Gallipoli is a crying witness to this principle. In a navy transport, therefore, United States Ship Henderson, the Fifth regiment of marines embarked for France in June, 1917, with the first armed American forces. The Sixth marines followed. The two regiments constituted the Fourth brigade, and served in the Second division, United States Regular, until the division came home, in August, 1919. About 30,000 marines were sent to France; some 14,000 of these went as replacements to maintain the two regiments of the Fourth brigade. A brigade musters some 7,500 officers and men; this brigade took part in some very interesting events.

Hereafter I have written of the marines in the war with Germany; how they went up, and what they did there, and how some of them came out again. Being a marine, I have tried to set forth simple tales without comment. It is unnecessary to write what I think of my own people, nor would it be, perhaps, in the best taste.

And I have written of marines in this war because they are the folks I know about myself. Those battle fields were very large, and a man seldom saw much or very far beyond his own unit, if he had a job in hand. As a company officer, I always had a job. There is no intent to overlook those very gallant gentlemen, our friends, the army. Their story is ours too. JOHN W. THOMASON, JR.

CHAPTER I

Attack.

In the fields near Marigny marines of the First Battalion of the Fifth found an amiable cow. There had been nothing in the way of rations that day; there were no prospects. All hands took thought and designated a robust Polish corporal as executioner. He claimed to have been a butcher in a former existence. He was leading the cow decently away from the road when a long gray car boomed up, halted with the touch of swank that Headquarters chauffeurs always affect, and disgorged a very angry colonel.

"Lieutenant, what are you doing there—" he yelled.

"Sir, you see, the men haven't had anything to eat, and I thought, sir—we found this cow wanderin' around—we couldn't find any owner—we'd like to chip in and buy her—we were goin' to—"

"I see, sir, I see! You were going to kill this cow, the property of some worthy French family. You will bear in mind, lieutenant, that we are in France to protect the lives and property of our allies from the Germans—Release that animal at once! Your rations will be distributed as soon as possible—carry on—" The colonel departed, and four or five 77s crashed into a little wood two hundred yards up the road. There were more shells in the same place "Hi! Brother Boche must think there's a battery over there!"—"Well, there ain't—" the marines sat down in the wheat and observed the cow, abandoned by a vanished French family.

"I was a quartermaster sergeant once, sir," said the platoon sergeant dreamily. "I remember just what the cuts of beef are. There'd be fine sirloin on that cow-critter, now. . . . Mr. Ashby (another flight of 77s burst in the wood), if we was to take that cow over an' tie her in that brush—she oughten to be out here in the open, anyway—might draw fire . . . shell's liable to hit anything, you know, sir—"

"Sergeant, you heard what the colonel said. But if you think she'd be safer—I'd suggest volunteers. And by the way, sergeant, I want a piece of tenderloin—the T-bone part—"

The cow was duly secured in the wood, men risking their lives thereby. The Boche shelled methodically for two hours, and the marines were reduced to a fearful state of nerves—"Is that dam' heifer gonna live forever?—" Two of three kilometers away fighting was going on. The lieutenant, with his glass, picked up far, running figures on the slope of a hill. You caught a flicker, points of light on the gray-green fields—bayonets. Occasional wounded Frenchmen wandered back, weary, bearded men, very dirty. They looked with dull eyes at the Americans—"Tres mauvais, labas! Beaucoup Boche, la—" The marines were not especially interested. Their regiment had been a year in France, training. Now they, too, were dirty and tired and very hungry. The war would get along . . . it always had.

A week ago, Memorial day, there had been no drills. The Second Division, up from a tour in the quiet Verdun trenches, rested pleasantly around Bourmont. Rumors of an attack by the First division, at Cantigny, filtered in. Cantigny was a town up toward Montdidier. Notions of geography were the vaguest—but it was in the north, where all the heavy fighting was. It appeared that the Second was going up to relieve the First. . . . "Sure! we'll relieve 'em. But if they wanted a fight, why didn't they let us know in the first place? —We'd a-showed 'em what shock-troops can do!"

Look With Suspicion on Too-Good Youth

Poor little good boy! Nobody believes in him; everybody distrusts him. All the wise educators and psychologists peer at him suspiciously and solemnly announce that he can't possibly be approved of. If he is tractable and obedient they shake their heads dolorously and prophesy that it won't last; that he'll do something dreadful later in life to make up for it and he'd much better be getting his allowance of original sin out of his system while he's young, ingrowing sin being a serious complaint. Well, maybe. But somehow, we can't help wondering if it's quite as bad as all that. We always had a sneaking idea that the boys and girls who did as they were told and got into no serious mischief grow up to be the dependable, conscientious, industrious men and women who do the bulk of the world's work and do it quietly and efficiently, without ringing any bells or blowing any horns to call attention to themselves and that one or two of them may even have become presidents of banks or railroads or something. Probably we're wrong, but it's a comfortable theory, anyway.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Sun's "Looming"

The phenomenon of the sun setting and then coming into view again for a half minute or more is called "looming"—the coming into sight of objects normally below the horizon—and is owing to the downward bending of rays of light from the distant object by a shadow surface layer of cold, hence dense, air.

GIRLS' GINGHAMS AND PRINTS; BLACK THIN LACE DRESS FAVORED

How dear to our hearts are the ginghams of springtime, and all the fascinating new cotton weaves, for that matter. There's cotton charmeuse, for instance; the foulard type looks so like genuine silk, women are making them up for business as well as for afternoon frocks. Then there's printed voiles and rayons, and the cotton crepe prints are lovely. There's woven voiles too and madras which come in stunning plaided patterns.

What's more, in the making cotton fabrics are taking on a compelling style interest. In their styling they are flaunting the cunningest ever of fads and foibles. The bolero theme, for instance; it is charmingly introduced into the fashioning of ginghams and other plaited cottons, using white or solid colored material for the blouse and the cuffs and the collar and other details. The softer voiles show jabot treatments in skirts as well as the blouse, plaited tunics, surplice effects, and deep cape-like collars such as grace the gingham dress for the school girl as here pictured. The Fashion Art League of America assembled a collection of choicest ginghams and then asked one of its members to design several frocks for the school girl with the object of demonstrating the style possibilities of the "simple gingham" dress. For one of these charming models as shown in the illustration, the designer used white organdie for trimming. Also please observe that there is a deep cape collar effect, this being an outstanding style point in the fashioning of frocks to be tubbed.

Charming Schoolgirl Model.

It is surely a far cry from the humble bungalow apron of yesteryear, to the charming lovable, tubable morning, porch and afternoon dresses of today. There's "some class" to cotton goods as styled by the modernist. Which is a truth for the home dressmaker to keep in mind when making up the once-upon-a-time but not-now "simple housedress." Remember, too, there's inspiration a plenty in the new wash fabrics with their unique and artful prints, their dashing color and their sprightly freshness.

Every glimpse of the newer modes forespeaks a coming "lace season." Dresses of georgette in springlike colorings show interesting insets, borderings and other trimmings of lace, either beige or match-dye. Smart among blouses are those of all-over lace, either dyed or in natural ecru or white. These enter charmingly into the fashionable ensemble.

Perhaps the biggest success registered so far on the lace program, is the sheer filmy dinner or formal afternoon frock, all in black. It may be sleeved or unsleeved, according to latest fashion advice, although at the moment the mode shows a penchant for very long and very snug-fitting transparent lace sleeves. It is a question as to whether the white satin or pale pink underslip is most in vogue. Posed over a white slip, the black lace frock lends itself to the smart black and white vogue; over pink the ensemble is irresistible. Milady is free to take her choice.

As to the wisdom of including a handsome black lace frock in one's wardrobe for the coming months, too much cannot be said on the subject. One of the many points in favor of an exquisitely styled black lace dress is its happy faculty of being the "right dress for the right occasion," be that event dinner or bridge party, afternoon tea or reception, or any of the list of social happenings which call for charming semi-formal clothes.

Unusual and very effective is a black lace frock with yoke of white lace. This magpie compose of black and white is said to be a coming vogue for lace.

Two versions of the all-black lace vogue are pictured here These models emanate from no less a distinguished source than the Fashion Art League of America, which means that they are not only of authoritative style but they bear the cachet of highest art in dress creation.

The black lace yoke effect in the dance model to the left is characteristic of many of the filmy black lace gowns now so fashionable, in its sleevelessness it contrasts with the other frock, which introduces the Vionnet sleeve, making it of lace.

Not always is the filmy black dress of lace, for gauzy chiffon more often than not enters into composition with it. Another point of interest in the side hem of black malines often used as shown in the model in the picture to the left.

DIURETIC STIMULANT TO THE KIDNEYS

Mrs. Julia Browning, of Mulberry Grove, Ill., wrote us as follows: "For eight months I suffered with rheumatism and inflammation of the bladder. I had a swelling of the limbs, stiffness in the joints and cramps in the muscles. There was a sandy deposit in the urine. My head and back ached. I was tired and nervous and could not sleep, and became exhausted with the least exertion. Nothing seemed to do me any good until I saw your ad in the paper. Dodd's Pills have done me lots of good and I tell all my friends what helped me. I have taken three boxes in all and am greatly benefited. I have got others to use them." Grover Hill, Ohio, a small burg, suffered a fire a week ago Sunday morning, consuming a number of its business houses. The big question confronting them is, "Will it be rebuilt?" The editor of the Reporter is advocating a community hall in the rebuilding program.

The three year old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Carper, living west of Auburn Junction on the Garrett road, suffered a broken rib Tuesday shortly before noon when she was struck by an automobile in front of her parents' home. It is thought no serious complications will result.

Mr. and Mrs. Curtis Hursey are now residents of St. Joe, moving Saturday from south of Concord to the former Betz residence. The Hursey farm has been sold to Claron Daub, of near the Ohio line and his father moved Tuesday to occupy the farm. Claron has rented a farm for this year and then he will move here this fall.

A silver medal contest under the auspices of the local W. C. T. U., will be held at Lutheran church Friday evening, April 1, at 7:30 o'clock. The contestants are: Beatrice Storer, Mary Jane Curie, Enid Curie, Robert Wiers, John Woodcox and Dorothy Fetters. Besides these declamations a pleasing program of music is being arranged. No admission will be charged but an offering will be taken to help defray expenses.

Peter J. Lux of Shelbyville, Indiana, 3 times declared International Corn Champion in twice as many years, on being asked how he went about making preparations for championship competition, Mr. Lux replied, "I never think about championship honors at planting tme. I just go right ahead as though I never expected to enter competition. I select my seed with the utmost scrutiny, test it carefully, plant properly and cultivate well through the growing season. Given strong, healthy seed, and a seed bed well prepared in good soil, all that is necessary to grow championship corn is intelligent cultivation and hard work. The corn borer? Of course, it is a serious menace but one of these days we'll find out just how best to handle him and when we do, we'll take care of him just like we do everything else." And that, in a nutshell, is a champion's idea of how to be a champion.

Addressing the conference on the prevention of crime in Chicago—known the country over as the nation's crime capitol—George W. Kirchwey, former warden of Sing Sing prison and former dean of Columbia University law school, said: "Politics as the partner and beneficiary of crime, politics controlling the courts, police and state's attorney ever watchful to see that neither interferes with its source of frofit is today's stumbling block against which the public helplessly sees its hope of proper law enforcement dashed. It is this evil combination an aroused public must crush before conditions can become better, and life and property again be safe."

Harold Arthur Surfus, nine-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Surfus, of Garrett, passed away at Sacred Heart hospital at 1:30 o'clock Friday morning from injuries received when struck by a Dodge coupe driven by Dr. Chester Fox of Huntertown early Thursday evening. Dr. Fox was driving south on Cowen street on his way home. Ahead of him was a motor truck driven by Russell Loutzenhiser of Huntertown. Harold and neighbor boys were playing ball. The ball rolled on the pavement and Harold ran after it in front of the truck. He failed to notice Dr. Fox's car running around the truck. Harold was knocked down, his head striking the pavement and fracturing the skull at its base. His left arm was broken, also.

Parent-Teacher Association

The March P. T. A. meeting was held last Thursday night and was one of the best meetings in the history of the local organization.

The community singing was led by Roy Koch. The reading, "Two Temples" given by Mrs. Lena Meek, was appropriate and well received. The first temple was a building fine and grand erected by skilled workmen but destined only to ruin and decay. The second temple was built by a mother. It was built for time and all eternity and proved to be the immortal soul of a child.

Derwood Ridgway gave "A Fathers Hope" and well defined "dad's" place in the child life.

A male quartet composed of M. Sechler, R. Koch, H. Hull and E. Curie, rendered a selection that was a real treat to lovers of good music and again proved that no form of music in our community is more popular than that given by a male quartet.

Mrs. Mabel Thornton talked on the part of the home in child training. Rev. McKnight spoke of the part of the church in ideal training of children and Miss Brink gave the part of the school in training for good citizenship. Many fine thoughts were presented in all the talks and brought directly to our minds the unpreparedness and general unfitness for the greatest job on earth—parenthood.

Kenneth Ryan sang "Oh Dry Those Tears" in his usual pleasing way and Margaret Hamilton gave a clever reading "The Tomboy."

Mrs. Lora Leighty was the piano accompanist for all musical numbers.

A committee to nominate officers for next year was selected by the assembly as follows: Mrs. Pluma Hamilton, F. L. Milliman, Ora Baker, R. L. Case and Mrs. Thornton. Their report, which will be voted on at the April meeting, was as follows:

President, Derwood Ridgway.
1 Vice, Prin. of Schools.
2 Vice, Mrs. Marie Draggoo.
Secretary, Teacher 3-4th grade.

The president, Ralph Sechler announced the P. T. A. district convention to be held in Ft. Wayne, Saturday, March 26, and urged every one to attend who could possibly arrange to do so.

PLANS MADE FOR BOYS' PIG CLUB WORK DURING 1927

Meeting in Auburn Tuesday Night Attended by Vocational Instructors and Students

All of the high school vocational agricultural instructors in DeKalb county, forty-eight boys and a number of farmer pig breeders attended an enthusiastic meeting Tuesday night of the Boys' Pig club in the court house assembly room in Auburn.

The boys first went into executive session and held an election of officers. Leo Spitler of Spencerville, was named president of the club; Paul Schlosser of Ashley, vice president; Milton Clark and Marion Funk of Auburn, secretary and treasurer. Ford Diehl of Garrett, was selected as the organization yell leader. The latter was the champion red pig raiser in the club two years ago.

The boys decided to hold regular meetings on the third Tuesday night of each month the next one to be in Auburn on the night of April 19. At the meeting each officer with his group will be responsible for a short program. In addition to the program in course of preparation for the April meeting there will be six reels of motion pictures shown by E. E. Stinson, DeKalb county agricultural agent.

It was agreed by the boys that pig clubs be confined to Big Type Poland China, Duroc and Chester White pigs and that there will have to be at least five pigs by five members to make a class. It was also decided that membership dues of fifteen cents a month be assessed against each member to provide club feeds and for incidental expenses.

P. T. Brown of Purdue University, gave a talk on pig management. He emphasized that the boys feed a suitable ration, recommending six parts corn, two parts ground oats and one part tankage. In case plenty of milk is available, instead of the tankage, one pound of tankage may be replaced by eight pounds of skim milk or buttermilk. Mr. Brown declared that the best pig does not always win in a contest but often the boy wins who takes the best care of his pig.

Merritt Sechler of St. Joe, the owner of one of the best herds of Poland China pigs in northeastern Indiana offered to give a pure bred Big Poland China boar to the boy showing the champion Poland China gilt at the next show.

I left my dad, his farm, his plow,
Because my calf became his cow;
I left my dad, 'twas wrong of course,
Because my colt became his horse.
I left my dad to sow and reap,
Because my lamb became his sheep.
I dropped my hoe and stuck my fork,
Because my pig became his pork,
The garden truck I made to grow
Was his to sell and mine to hoe.

Why Another Didn't

With dad and me it's half and half
The cow I own was once his calf,
No town for mine, I will not bolt,
Because my horse was once his colt;
I'm going to stick right where I am,
Because my sheep was once his lamb.
I'll stay with dad—He gets my vote
Because my hog was once his shoat.
It's "fifty-fifty" with dad and me
A profit sharing company.

PATTERSON-FLETCHER'S LOWER COST OF CLOTHES

For Men in Northern Indiana and North-Western Ohio.

A new achievement of Patterson-Fletcher Company of Fort Wayne, is the selling of Hart, Schaffner & Marx suits at $25.00. We believe this is the lowest price in all the United States for Hart, Schaffner & Marx new spring suits.

Patterson-Fletcher's low overhead and their unusually small margin of profit, make it possible for them to sell correctly styled, new spring Hart, Schaffner & Marx suits for $25.00. Four hundred of these suits are to be sold between now and Easter.

Patterson-Fletcher's believe that there is a class of men who have longed to wear good clothing, but who have thought they could not pay more than $25.00. This announcement will please hundreds of men, who like correctly styled clothes.

A good character is something that men can bank on.

It takes a wasp to make a lazy man get a move on himself. All it has to do is to back against him and push.

POULTRY

THAWING FROZEN COMBS IS EASY

"Thaw frozen combs on poultry by applying snow or ice water," say poultrymen at the New York State College of Agriculture at Ithaca. "Carbolated grease, which may be purchased at most drug stores, will do the trick. A New Jersey agricultural bulletin suggests the following ointment: Five parts of refined petroleum, three parts of glycerin, and one part of turpentine by volume. This should be applied gently and rubbed in fairly well. Remove the black dead tissue from badly frozen combs, so that they will heal more quickly.

"At this time of year many flocks suffer from frozen combs. This trouble is particularly bad with roosters of the single-comb White Leghorn breed because their combs are so big. If a rooster's comb is badly frozen, it seriously affects his vigor and impairs his usefulness in the flock."

Poultrymen at the state college say that the best farmers in the state put their roosters in the breeding pens early in the winter and watch them carefully during the coldest weather so as to minimize the danger of freezing. The college recommends curtains in front of the roost on very cold nights in narrow houses. This is not recommended in houses that are wider than 15 feet. Another suggestion is the use of wooden floats with 1-inch holes in them to be placed in the drinking vessels. This reduces the danger of freezing, as it keeps the birds from dipping their wattles in the water when they drink.

In exceptional cases, it may be well to grease the combs and wattles of especially valuable birds during cold weather. The pens should be kept well ventilated at all times.

Sprouted Oats for Hens Is Most Excellent Plan

There is nothing in the world that will make the old hens feel as much like spring is here as a box of sprouted oats every day, experienced poultrymen say. Sprouting oats is not necessarily expensive or a lot of bother. Equipment may be homemade. A tub or keg will do to soak the oats in. Five or six boxes about 4 inches deep will do for the trays. A room which ranges from 50 to 80 degrees in temperature all the time is satisfactory. Soak the oats 12 hours in the tub or keg. Drain them and put them in a box where they should be kept moist until the sprouts are about ½ inch long. Feed them at that time, which is usually about five days after they are put to soak. Five or six boxes will make it possible to start a box each day and weed one regularly.

Green Feed Is Perfect for Poultry in Winter

Many poultry raisers are now feeding mash to their hens, but a lack of palatable, succulent feed is too often the limiting factor in winter poultry rations. Sprouted oats are one of the finest forms of succulence. The Nebraska Agricultural college poultrymen offer the following suggestions: Good heavy oats with strong germinating power produce best results. Soak the oats for about 24 hours. Drain off excess moisture. Turn into lard tub or candy pail which has holes in bottom to allow excess moisture to drain off. Add moisture later if necessary. Keep in fairly even moderate temperature. Feed when the sprouts are one-half to one inch long ("greening" is unnecessary).

Ration for Goslings

A ration recommended by the United States Department of Agriculture for goslings up to eight weeks of age is equal parts by measure of bran, mid dings and steamed cut clover or cooked vegetables. Feed morning, noon and night. If it is desirable to fatten them at this age or at ten weeks of age, they should be placed in the pen where they will not exercise too much, and fed corn meal mixed to a dry crumbly state, and beef scrap amounting to 20 per cent of the bulk of the corn meal.

Culling in the Spring

A little more culling in the spring may take out a few hens that do not look as good as breeders and layers as they did last fall. Sometimes a few hens become too fat. Maybe one or two will be heavy and listless and fail to scratch for grain or come from the roost promptly in the morning. A little about the condition of a flock can be told by opening the house suddenly on a sunny day. Watch the good hens flock out and begin to enjoy the range.

Better Hatching Eggs

A new requirement which must be met before eggs will hatch well, even under the best care, is called to the attention of poultry raisers by the investigators at the Missouri College of Agriculture. This new requirement is that the eggs must be from hens that have been fed a ration containing certain vitamines. Though not fully understood, the vitamines are substances that have a very important effect on the animal that eats these foods.

QUEER QUIRKS IN HUMAN DESTINY

Adversity Brought Good Fortune

WILLIAM the Conqueror would have met a far more determined foe in England if good fortune had not befallen his arms in the strange form of a temporary adversity. But for a gale that wrecked many of William's ships and piled the bodies of the drowned upon the coast of Normandy, the conqueror's army would have reached England before King Harold's army was exhausted by battle with an earlier invader, King Harold Hardrada of Norway, and the issue of Hastings very likely would have been different.

The duke of Normandy based his claim to England's throne upon a promise said to have been made by King Edward the confessor. To bolster this claim Duke William in 1065 imprisoned Earl Harold, who was visiting Normandy, and compelled him to swear he would support William's claim. In 1066 King Edward died and all England turned to Harold as next in right of succession. Harold rebounced the oath taken under duress and accepted.

Throughout the summer of that year Duke William prepared for war. The pope recognized his right, so knights throughout Christendom joined the Norman's party. An army of 50,000 knights and 10,000 inferior soldiers was gathered on the banks of the Dive river and a great fleet of vessels was assembled for the invasion of England.

King Harold on his side likewise made vast preparations for war. Both the English fleet and the English army were ready to repell invasion when news arrived that King Harold Hardrada, excited to the effort by Earl Tostig, renegade brother of Harold, had landed an army in Yorkshire. The English forces hastened thither and in a great battle at Stamford bridge destroyed King Hardrada and the flower of his nobility.

In the meantime William of Normandy, unaware of developments in England, was chafing under a delay occasioned by a northeast wind which held his fleet in port. When the wind did veer to the west, the fleet set sail and encountered a fierce gale that drove them back upon the French coast. Many ships were lost and many men drowned, but this new delay only served to allow time for the diversion of the English army to Yorkshire.

When William finally reached England his landing was unimpeded, as Harold and all his army were away fighting in Yorkshire.

The War of the Red Bull

MANY centuries ago in Ireland, when little provocation was required to start a war, Queen Medb of Connaught stole a red bull from King Concobar of Ulster, and prepared the way for the hero, Cuculaind, to take a place in history as the only warrior who ever put an army to flight after his death.

Medb didn't really need the red bull; she only took it in order to win an argument with her royal consort, Aillil, over whose wealth was greatest. The king and queen had listed their property separately and it was found the queen was a shade the poorer. The famous red bull would turn her defeat to victory, so she had it seized.

Concobar was very wroth and would listen to no proposals for reimbursement or restitution. But Concobar was not quite ready for war, so the Connaught folk sought advantage in a swift attack. Concobar sent the great champion, Cuculaind, to hold back the queen's forces at a ford of the River Dee, while the main army was being rallied. The rules of chivalry in that day provided that an army could not advance as long as a champion of the opposing force offered single combat. Cuculaind by mighty feats of arms held the queen at bay, beating her warriors one by one.

Finally Queen Medb prevailed upon the powerful Ferdiad, greatest of southern champions, to espouse her cause against his old friend Cuculaind. They fought for three days and so fiercely that "they cast the river out of its bed," frightened the horses of both armies and caused the timorous to flee. Cuculaind was wounded grievously but slew his opponent. The queen's forces fled but were pursued by Concobar and the incomparable Cuculaind. In a pitched battle, Cuculaind received a mortal wound; drawing the spear from his side he crept to a small lake, drank deeply and was refreshed though facing death.

He struggled to his feet and lashed himself with his belt to a stone pillar, set up of old to honor a fallen warrior, in order that he might die on his feet. Queen Medb's army, seeing a man whom they knew to have been wounded to death standing erect, concluded he was immortal and fled, leaving the victory to King Concobar of Ulster.

Speech and Action

Action hangs, as it were, "dissolved" in speech, in thoughts, whereof speech is the shadow; and precipitates itself therefrom. The kind of speech in a man betokens the kind of action you will get from him.—Carlyle.

A Word With the Old Folks

Elderly People Are Learning Importance of Good Elimination.

IN the later years of life there is apt to be a slowing up of the bodily functions. Good elimination, however, is just as essential to the old as to the young. Many old folks have learned the value of Doan's Pills when a stimulant diuretic to the kidneys is required. Scanty or burning passages of kidney secretions are often signs of improper kidney function. In most every community are scores of users and endorsers who acclaim the merit of Doan's. Ask your neighbor!

KEEP COUGHS OUT OF "DANGER ZONE"

Coughing irritates your throat and makes you cough more. The more you cough the harder it is to stop. And when you feel the cough spreading down into your bronchial tubes it is nearing the "danger zone"—for these tubes lead directly into your lungs.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral stops coughs quickly—almost instantly in spasmodic attacks. With the very first swallow you feel its comforting warmth. Real medicine, reaching deep down with its soothing, healing power. Absorbed through and through the irritated throat, chest and bronchial membranes, it quickly stops the cough, breaks up the cold and brings prompt, lasting relief.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral is hospital-proved. Prescribed by physicians. Pleasant to taste. All druggists—60c and, twice the quantity, $1.00.

THE FAITHFUL FRIEND

By FLORENCE HENDERSON

(Copyright by W. G. Chapman.)

FOR the lady who lived at Hillcrest, mistress of that splendid estate, Albion Weare had always entertained the highest respect—and something more. She was thirty, the bloom on her cheek a trifle faded, but his ideal still. How he reverenced her!

He did not know it, in his blind humility, but Miss Helen Tyrell respected him infinitely. Whenever she had a party of close friends at a social function at the elaborate old mansion, Albion was honored with an invitation. He was master complete of the violin, she a mistress of song and piano. Those hours of mutual music bewitchment neither would ever forget.

He was thinking of Miss Tyrell now, and very seriously. She was rich, he was poor. It was his humble trend of mind—ever descanting his real ability—that kept him back. As chemist of the great drug factory located at the edge of the town he was of value, but it was the policy of the company to take advantage of him.

Now he had made a discovery of importance. He had come across it quite by chance and in his own private laboratory at home. In it his employers had no part or parcel. It involved a new process for securing from illuminating oils over 50 per cent additional power.

"If I tell them up at the works about it they will simply appropriate it, just as they have other fruits of my labor," soliloquized Albion. "No, I feel certain my discovery is important and valuable. I have written to a broker in Chicago. He wants two thousand dollars advance fees and organization money. I have a thousand. If I could only borrow an additional like amount—but Miss Tyrell—no! no! I cannot bring myself to ask her for it."

How willingly, how gladly, would she have accommodated him! And he knew that this was so. He feared, however, to disturb their cherished harmonious relations. Business was a harsh element; it might lead to the impairment of their pure and tender friendship. So Albion put the suggestion of borrowing from Miss Tyrell completely out of his mind.

There was a last resource, but Albion hesitated for a long time before he was driven to employ it. This was to mortgage the quaint old-fashioned and not very valuable homestead in the village that had been left to him by his dead mother. He felt it almost sacrilegious the day he affixed his signature to a mortgage for one thousand dollars, but there was no way out of it if he expected to exploit his formula.

Albion did not inform Miss Tyrell of his plans. He secured a leave of absence of a month from the works and simply told her that he would probably be absent most of that time in the city. She missed him before he had been gone a week. She wrote him friendly letters showing that she esteemed him, and they were sweet balm to his anxious soul at the most trying period of his life.

For Albion, inexperienced in the ways of the professional promoter and financier, was suddenly confronted with worry and complication that tested all his faith and nerve. The broker had proceeded to develop his formula by organizing a stock company. This cost money. There was expensive advertising, there were large fees to pay to expert chemists and engineers. The money was soon used up.

"A thousand more and we shall see daylight," promised the broker.

"Impossible!" groaned Albion. "I have absolutely exhausted my last resource."

"Too bad to fail now, when a few weeks' further negotiations will place us in a fully organized condition. Are you willing to borrow the new thousand?"

"But I have no security to give," declared Albion gloomily.

"Oh, yes, you have," insisted the glib and resourceful promoter—"there's the stock of the company."

"It isn't worth its face—" began Albion.

"No, not yet, but it will be some time," declared the optimistic broker. "If you are willing to put up a controlling block of the stock as collateral I can get you the loan."

"Go ahead," acceded Albion, though not hopefully.

So, following devious ways, the broker financed the proposition along until one day the end came. The people who loaned the money demanded its return, with exorbitant interest as due, and threatened to seize and sell out the cherished life work of Albion for a mere song.

"I've got to go back home!" declared Albion. "I'm half sick, totally discouraged and almost hopeless of raising any more capital. How long have the creditors given us to pay the amount?"

"Ten days."

"I'll try," said Albion, but weakly.

He started for home really ill and arrived at the little quiet home town prostrated with a dangerous fever.

Of what transpired during the next three weeks Albion Weare knew little, and that during brief lucid moments. In one of these he smiled faintly as his nurse gently informed him that she had been sent by Miss Tyrell. Then within an hour Albion was back in the grasp of the wasting fever, raving over the lost investment, the days of grace, the end of which would see him bereft of his great discovery.

At times, however, his delirious mood grew into soft and tender appeals to the woman to whom he had never told his love. And in the adjoining room Helen Tyrell hid her blushing face in her hands, and her breath came quicker, and the swift tears told of the deep, heartfelt interest she felt in this lonely man, buffeted so cruelly by the adverse tides of fate.

One evening Miss Tyrell was visited by a stranger. He was the broker, who had vainly awaited the promised return of his client to the city. It was natural that he should tell the story disclosing the negotiations of Albion. In the wealthy heiress he found a willing and sympathetic auditor.

The nurse attending Albion hastened into the sick room one beautiful June morning at the unexpected call of her patient. Her face brightened, for in one glance at the bed she saw that the crisis had passed and the promise of convalescence in the wasted face.

He was straining his eyes toward a calendar upon the opposite wall. He motioned to the nurse weakly.

"Tell me," he spoke hoarsely—"the—the day of the month."

Innocently she named it. A deep groan burst from the lips of the sick man and he fell back prostrated, with the words:

"Six days too late! I have lost everything." Then he was awake and sensible for the rest of the day, but there was a set, hopeless expression to his face that the experienced nurse did not like to see there. When Miss Tyrell came she told her of the incident. In a moment Helen read the situation—and its remedy.

"Mr. Weare," she spoke gently, almost tenderly, as she approached the bedside of the patient.

His eager soul in his wasted face, Albion took her hand in a fervent clasp.

"Are you strong enough to hear a little, a very little about business?" she interrogated.

"I have little business left," he sighed, but gave a weak assent to her proposition.

And then she told of the broker coming to her, of redeeming the stock just in time, of her supplying new capital—and the company was a success!

"You did this all for me," he choked out, "because—"

"Because you are my dearest friend," she said, and her eyes were fond and loving. "Oh! why did you not tell me of your need for money? Alas! I can help you no further, for your discovery has made you very rich."

What came of it all? Greater wealth for faithful, patient Albion Weare—the added riches of the love of a true woman.

No Workable Scheme of Perpetual Motion

Perpetual motion has been the dream of inventors for many centuries. By perpetual motion is usually meant a mechanical device which will operate of its own power without such external aids as wind, gas, steam or any other element of force. Some have come very near to attaining a kind of perfection by a series of weights and balances; also by the use of quicksilver, but while these machines will operate for a time, they are unable in that time to develop sufficient power to work machinery or be of any real benefit. In the town of Minnedosa, Man., an old gentleman had for some years a machine of his own invention operated by a series of weights by which he was said to have run a small lathe. A scientist named Strutt has invented an apparatus which takes advantage of radium emanations upon a gold leaf electroscope. This perhaps comes near to an endless motion, but is maintained at the expense of the molecular energy of the radium.

The Sleeping Sentry

A family moved from the city into a suburban district, and were told that they ought to get a dog to guard the premises at night.

So they bought the largest dog that happened to be for sale in the kennels of a near-by dealer.

But, unfortunately, the house was burglarized shortly after and the dog slept peacefully through the proceedings. The householder decided to interview the dealer about the animal.

"Well," said the dealer on hearing the news, "you'd better buy a little dog I've got that will waken the big one!"

Cherry Time

Many years ago in a small New Hampshire city the cotton mills worked on most holidays, and on February 22 as two Englishmen were going to their dinner, one remarked to the other:

"I say, old boy, why are the bells ringing, what's the hullaballoo about?"

His companion replied scathingly, "You blooming idiot, don't you know it was Charlie Washington's birthday."

Traced to Middle Ages

John Philip Sousa said that according to historical records the beginning of the modern wind band may be traced from Central Europe in the Middle ages. Traveling minstrels gathering at great fairs, church festivals and state occasions often organized impromptu bands. These, Commander Sousa thought, were possibly the first of the modern bands.

If Back Hurts Begin on Salts

Flush Your Kidneys Occasionally by Drinking Quarts of Good Water

No man or woman can make a mistake by flushing the kidneys occasionally, says a well-known authority. Too much rich food creates acids which clog the kidney pores so that they sluggishly filter or strain only part of the waste and poisons from the blood. Then you get sick. Rheumatism, headaches, liver trouble, nervousness, constipation, dizziness, sleeplessness, bladder disorders often come from sluggish kidneys.

The moment you feel a dull ache in the kidneys or your back hurts, or if the urine is cloudy, offensive, full of sediment, irregular of passage, or attended by a sensation of scalding, begin to drink soft water in quantities; also get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any reliable pharmacy and take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys may then act fine.

This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for years to help flush clogged kidneys and stimulate them to activity, also to help neutralize the acids in the system so they no longer cause irritation, thus often relieving bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is inexpensive and cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink, which everyone can take now and then to help keep the kidneys clean and the blood pure, thereby often preventing serious kidney complications.

Region of Fertility Surrounds Old Gaza

The old town of Gaza still exists under the Arabic name of Gunseh, and with its 15,000 or 20,000 inhabitants, ranks as the second city in Palestine. The sea is now three miles away, though according to history it was once a seaport. Its harbor has filled in, and the sea-sand has encroached to quite a large extent upon the land.

The plain between Gunseh and the sea is an "uninterrupted line of old foundations and ruins, strewn with pottery and marbles."

Looking north and east, gardens and orchards of oranges, date palms and olive trees, stretch far away, succeeded by immense prairie-like fields of wheat, unbroken by fence, tree, or hedge, the old granary of Judah, extending with barely a hillock to interrupt it, right to the very foot of Mount Carmel.

Still View Lenin's Corpse

So well was the body of Lenin embalmed that thousands still view its lifelike lineaments daily at Moscow, though his death occurred several years ago. Recently the authorities were accused of substituting a wax figure for the corpse. They sent for a German scientist to open the case and prove to the public it was really Lenin's body. While in power Lenin tried to suppress all religion. Now the religious Russians whisper that the devil himself is preserving Lenin's body that he may burn it later.

"I Speak From Experience" Says Oscar Hurst of Princeton

Well known drug clerk weak and rundown by indigestion, now hail and hearty again. Gains 23 pounds and enjoys old time vigorous life. Uses and recommends Tanlac

Mr. Hurst is a drug clerk and lives at the Pullman Hotel, Princeton, Ind. His everyday duties bring him in contact with all kinds of people and all kinds of medicine. Here is his own story of what Tanlac has done for him:

"What I went through for years," he said, "I never want to endure again. My stomach seemed to go back on me altogether. First, I had indigestion, sour stomach and bad taste in my mouth. Then came attacks of heartburn and dizzy spells. I practically quit eating, for the slightest morsel of food caused palpitation of the heart and difficult breathing.

"My weight dropped from 136 lbs. to 113 lbs., was weak, listless and discouraged. I became cranky and irritable; my nerves were jumpy and I had spells of depression. I began to give up hope of ever being well again.

"I tried all kinds of remedies without success. Even Tanlac at first didn't seem to help much. But after the third bottle I noticed a marked improvement. All the distressing conditions gradually disappeared and I began to recover my lost weight. Now I'm 136 lbs. and work hard every day, and feel tip-top in every way. I'm a new man. What I'm telling you about Tanlac is no hearsay!

I speak from experience. You well know that when a drug clerk uses a remedy himself and recommends it, that remedy must have considerable merit."

Thousands of citizens in every state of the Union have had experiences similar to that of Mr. Hurst. If you're rundown from overwork, worry, or neglect, start building your way back to normalcy today. Get a trial bottle of Tanlac from your druggist. It is Nature's own remedy made from herbs, roots and barks, according to the famous Tanlac formula. Over 52 million bottles sold.

DR. W. B. CALDWELL AT THE AGE OF 83

Mother! It's Cruel to "Physic" Your Child

To Dr. W. B. Caldwell, of Monticello, Ill., a practicing physician for 47 years, it seemed cruel that so many constipated infants and children had to be kept constantly "stirred up" and half sick by taking cathartic pills, tablets, salts, calomel and nasty oils.

While he knew that constipation was the cause of nearly all children's little ills, he did not believe that a sickening "purge" or "physic" was necessary.

In Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin he discovered a laxative which helps to establish natural bowel "regularity" even if the child is chronically constipated. Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin not only causes gentle, easy bowel movement but, best of all, it never gripes, sickens or upsets the most delicate system. Besides, it is absolutely harmless, and so pleasant that even a cross, feverish, bilious, sick child gladly takes it.

A BARGAIN

Auto salesman who for three hours had been trying to sell a car:) "Now, sir, I'll throw in the clutch."

Uncle Hiram: 'T'll take her, then. I knew if I held out long enough I'd get something for nothing!"

Living together is an art; and in some homes it is a lost art.

THE BEST POLICY

If you build up a snug account at the bank, adding to it regularly as you do in paying insurance premiums, it is better than the best Insurance Policy.

It is ready for you any time—right now. You don't have to die to win. You don't need to lose a crop or livestock before you get the money. It is there, even if the home doesn't burn or a cyclone blow it away. An account at our Bank is the best kind of an insurance policy. It is always ready for you.

CONFIDENCE IS WHAT COUNTS.

MONEY THAT WORKS

A MAN visited our bank a few weeks ago who had just sold some property.

HE WAS not ready to invest the money again for a few months but he did not want the money to 'loaf' and earn nothing for him during that time.

SO HE wanted to know what he could do with the money to make it earn some profit and be available in case he needed it.

OF COURSE we suggested a Certificate of Deposit. You can have a "C. of D." for any amount and continue it as long as you wish. It pays a nice profit, too.

THERE IS no better plan for your money that is not otherwise employed. Let us tell you more about this plan.

VOL. XLI. ST. JOE, DeKALB COUNTY, INDIANA, THURSDAY, MARCH 31, 1927 NUMBER 13

Parent-Teacher Association

The twelfth district convention of the Parent-Teacher Association was held last Saturday in the Wayne street M. E. Church. Those in attendance from this place were Derwood Ridgway, Ralph Sechler and Mrs. F. R. Bowman.

The forenoon session was mostly reports of county and local presidents and showed that the district is well organized.

A fine luncheon was served from 12:00 to 1:30 with toasts and readings by Fort Wayne talent.

The first number of the afternoon program was a demonstration by the 4 H Purdue Girls Club. A model Parent-Teacher meeting was conducted by Fort Wayne ladies and an educational talk on "Boys" was given by Mr. John Anguish, Boy Scout Executive.

The principal address was given by Mrs. Homer J. Miller of South Bend, Preesident of Indiana Parent-Teacher Association. Her subject was "Opening Opportunities" and proved to be interesting and instructive. She particularly stressed the fact that the P. T. A. is for one purpose only—Child welfare.

The next district convention will be entertained at Howe, Lagrange county.

People Have Abnormal Vision

Because their eyes are abnormal. A perfect pair of eyes cannot help but give perfect sight. And an imperfect pair are forced to give imperfect sight. It requires so slight deviation from normal to cause trouble that just about everyone's eyes are more or less defective. Be interested enough to learn their condition here.

SPENCERVILLE YOUNG LADY HONORED

By Receiving Letter From College President Commending Her Work

Miss Garnet Beams, daughter of George Beams, now in her second year of primary training at Wittenberg College, is evidently getting along fine in her course, as vidienced by the accompanying letter written her by R. E. Tulloss, President of the college.

"Once more it is my privilege to send a note of congratulations and encouragement to those students who have attained high scholarship standing. It is a pleasure to find your name upon the list of those who by their superior work are deserving of this special recognition.

A record such as yours indicates both ability and application. The attainment of such a record is most commendable. The administrative staff and the faculty of Wittenberg join in sending this expression of appreciation and good will."

BUTLER SCHOOL HOUSE ROBBED

The school house was entered by burglars Saturday night. Damage was done to property and money taken, approximately seventy-five dollars. Entrance was gained by breaking a pane of glass in the upper sash of Superintendent Woodeen's office, and reaching in and unfastening the catch, and raising the lower sash. Evidently the work was done by some one perfectly familiar with the room, as four matches were found on the floor with only the heads burned off.

The burglars went directly to a four-door cupboard and pried the door off where the cash box was kept, took it and the contents and left without opening the other doors.—Record.

SHEEP DOGS ARE STILL ACTIVE

A sheep dog was in the Harp Leighty flock last Sunday night. The sheep were enclosed in a small lot and shed for the night and the cur jumped the fence and had the sheep correlled in the shed, barking for dear life, trying to get them to run out. None of the sheep were injured although some wool had been pulled off. Jim slipped out and hurled a club at the dog and he soon made a getaway. Practically every owner of sheep reports their flocks molested this spring and fall and the dog tax will not begin to meet the loss. Every dog that is allowed to run about ought to be killed.

RECEIVES VALUABLE SERVICE MEDAL

S. S. Widney, local representative of the Insurance Company of North America, for the past twenty-five years, has been highly honored by the company representative, State Agent Barr, who called last Wednesday and delivered a beautiful medal of service. Along with the medal came a letter from the general manager of Chicago words of congratulation. In part, the letter follows:

"More than a hundred years ago, it was the practice of a policyholder to demand and pay for a "badge" to put upon his house when he was insured so that all might know of his business foresight. Today, it seems to us that we should provide men who have served the Company for more than a quarter of a century with a "bandge" of honor that they may let it be known that they too, had foresight in the selection of a Company of the high standing of the Insurance Company of North America.

"What more appropriate form could be taken than a miniature reproduction in gold of this historic house plate of more than a century ago?

"We trust you will honor us by wearing this token of our very high regard."

Mr. Widney would be pleased to show any of his friends this reward of service, who may call on him.

CELEBRATES WEDDING ANNIVERSARY SUNDAY

Fifty-nine years ago last Sunday, March 27, 1868, Jacob Baltz and Miss Emma Sechler were united in marriage, and at their present home in Spencerville, the event was celebrated by their children and families, last Sunday. The celebration was a complete surprise to them, and of course a fine basket dinner was brought by the guests.

Just a few particulars of the marriage are gathered. The affair took place at the Sechler home just north of St. Joe, then in the log cabin, being performed by the Rev. John C. Kissel, a German Reformed minister, who preached at Concord and Orangeville.

Mrs. Baltz remembers that she attended church that Sunday at Concord, making the drive in a spring wagon, then a very popular vehicle.

Shortly after their marriage Mr. Baltz took a position in the Orangeville mill, where he worked for 2 years with William Andrews. Then they went to Allen county for sixteen years, where his parents lived and later coming to Spencerville, starting in the blacksmithing trade and where they have lived for 43 years.

About a year ago Mr. Baltz had a stroke of paralysis, but is now nearly recovered.

BIRTHDAY SURPRISE FOR B. E. WIDNEY

Twenty-two old friends and neighbors of B. E. Widney, gathered at his home Tuesday to surprise him on his 65th birthday, and all the plans worked to perfection. Mr. Widney was about the farm working. The guests arrived early and the machines were put away so he would not surmise. When dinner was ready, Byron came in and here the guests were. Really if he had been asked his age right then, he couldn't have told because of his complete surprise.

Tables were spread and beautifully decorated with carnations, the hostess being assisted by Mrs. Anna Mumaw and Mrs. Avis Staman.

The event was also to honor the 62nd birthday of Mrs. Joe Hull and the 65th birthday of Mrs. Frank Sechler. The honored guests were given a special table at the noon hour and each received a boquet of carnations. Besides the carnations, a pot of lilies and other remembrances were presented Mr. Widney.

The rest of the day was spent in visiting and talking of their younger days.

STORY FROM THE START

Claude Melnotte Dabbs returns from New York to his general grocery in Peace Valley, Pa. With him comes Ned Carter, a stranger, whom Dabbs introduces to "Aunt Lyddy," his old housekeeper, as a nephew. Later Dabbs admits to Aunt Lyddy that Carter is a chance acquaintance, veteran of the World war, whom he had met in New York and taken a liking to. Carter tells that he has broken with his family and his fiancee because of their ultra-pacific leanings. With Dabbs Ned visits Clover Hollow. They almost run over a dog belonging to a girl whom Carter apparently recognizes. Ned delivers a grocery order, and in his absence the girl, Dorothy Selden, says that she knows Ned's last name to be Rangeley, and that he is the famous banker's son. Next morning Ned begins work as a delivery boy. Delivering an order marked "Johnston" at the "White House," he meets a girl who tells him she and her mother are alone, the servants having left. Ned promises to get help. Meeting Dorothy, his former fiancee, he evades telling why he is in Peace Valley. Ned arranges with Ettie Pulsifer to do housework at the Johnstons', but she is unable to start work at once. Ned goes to report to Mary Johnston.

Mary opened her mouth to annihilate this pushing young person, but at that moment the telephone bell rang, and with a little nod of dismissal, she hurried to answer it.

Ned looked idly about him. Then the great idea came to him. He grinned, snatched up a gingham kitchen apron from the back of a chair and tied it across his chest. He turned the hot water on a pan full of dishes and reached for the dish mop. He knew that camp, motor boat and army experiences would stand him in good stead now. He would show this girl what an excellent job he could do. He commenced to wash dishes in a slow, orderly fashion.

At the telephone, Mary was talking to Mr. Dabbs. She had closed the door. No sound from the kitchen reached her. Yes, she told him, she was Miss Johnston, and his nephew had gone. She was ever so much obliged. If Mrs. Pulsifer could come at noon, it would be a great help.

Mary left the telephone with shining eyes. How kind these country people were! Imagine a grocer taking all that trouble in the city! She must tell mother. It would amuse her, if the headache was not too bad. With a little run she took the stairs, three steps at a time, and softly opened the door of the great front bedroom.

It was a lovely room, darkened now, beautifully arranged and furnished. Nothing in it was as beautiful as the woman who was lying upon the bed, staring at the ceiling. She looked scarcely older than Mary herself. Tumbled masses of red hair spread over the pillow. She turned her face quickly from Mary.

"Mother, I'm going to bring you some tea and toast in a jiffy, unless you feel like coming down."

"I don't want anything. Don't trouble," came in a soft murmur from the bed.

"Oh, mother, don't take it so hard! I'm getting on famously and the country people here are wonderful. What do you think! The grocer—the one with a funny little short name—Dabbs—that's it, is sending a woman to cook and clean for us this afternoon. By tomorrow we'll have not only a clean house, but probably a new batch of maids and a cook from the city. Then you can be properly fed."

Her mother raised herself on one elbow, staring at her daughter with level, unblinking brown eyes. Seen face to face she appeared older than Mary, but one would hardly have classified them as mother and daughter. Sisters would have been a reasonable guess.

"Mary, what did you say the grocer's name was?"

"Dabbs," repeated Mary. "Funny name."

"Isn't this place called Clover Hollow?"

"Yes, mother, but the grocer comes from Peace Valley. There are no shops in Clover Hollow."

Mary's mother sank back on her pillows and muttered something that sounded like: "Oh my soul! The last straw!"

Mary looked puzzled and a little frightened. This was the first time in her life that she had known her strong, capable mother to give way to her nerves.

"Mother, can't you tell me what's wrong?"

"No, I can't just now, Mary-girl. It's a little financial bother, and until I understand it better myself, I can't talk about it. Run along like a good child. My head will soon be all right again." Then the head was lifted and the eyes fixed upon her daughter. "Oh do take that ugly apron off!"

"I've been so busy I forgot it." Mary was more hurt than apologetic. To tidy a big house like this, and make something to eat, was quite an achievement, for any girl, and especially one unaccustomed to doing it. She had looked for praise.

"It makes you look—" her mother gave an odd, hysterical giggle—"it makes you look—like a grocer's daughter. For heaven's sake, take it off!"

Mary went downstairs more slowly than she had come up. She wished her mother would confide in her, for she must be awfully worried about money to act like this. Mary wondered, idly, if it meant that they would have to give up the proposed trip to California and Honolulu this fall. They might possibly have to stay in New York all winter. They might even be so poor that they would have to stay here in the country. There was something that appealed to Mary in this thought, if only mother could be kept amused.

Ever since Mary's childhood, she had realized that the first duty of the world and the people therein, herself included, was to keep mother amused. When she was not amused, Mary's heavens were dark. It was not that it took so much to amuse her. Sometimes a new book or a visit from a friend, and the sun shone again; but woe betide any place or person boring her for two consecutive days. They were immediately obliterated from her life.

Mary sat down to rest on one of the steps. Her thoughts went back through the years to all the hotel suites they had occupied—the rented villas, apartments in Spain, Italy and France. All had been delightful, but she would love to stay here and see an American winter. To watch the seasons change from spring to summer, summer to autumn, autumn to winter, here in her own country! It would be delightful, wonderful.

Mary rose slowly and went down stairs. One thing certain, she must not bother mother now, and she must make her a cup of tea.

Mary opened the door leading to the kitchen. Then she stared with astonishment and dismay at the grocer's boy drying the dishes.

"Oh!" exclaimed Mary.

The "grocer's boy" began tugging at his apron strings, wishing that he had heard her coming. "Must look a fool," was his thought.

"It was very kind of you, but entirely unnecessary." Mary spoke severely.

Her tone reminded Ned of all he had forgotten about his apparent station in life. Suddenly he disliked this blue-eyed girl intensely, if she was that kind.

He slipped out of the offending apron, took up his hat, and looked at her gravely. "I'll bring Mrs. Pulsifer up after luncheon," he offered, limply.

Mary's sense of humor, which had momentarily deserted her, returned. She thought herself a fool to handle the incident, however annoying, in this manner.

"Oh, Mr. Carter, will you please bring up two pounds of Graham flour, and some table salt—I don't remember how salt comes—and three cakes of soap. I'm awfully grateful for all you've done for me."

She blushed vividly at the end of her speech. Ned instantly forgave her everything.

"It's nothing. Uncle orders me to do these things," Ned lied cheerfully.

He made an elaborate note in a book, which Mary, now aroused to note this young man's customs and manners, saw was a little red leather diary and rather elegant at that. It was not at all the usual orderbook of a grocer's clerk. Her suspicions grew.

"May I ask," said Ned, feeling very businesslike, "if that was uncle on the telephone? Because, that's why I waited. I knew he might call up."

Mary admitted that it had been his uncle.

"Did he want me?" Ned inquired, a shade uncomfortably.

Grasping her chance, Mary answered demurely: "I don't know. I told him that you had gone. I should think, if you are in the habit of spending most of your working hours washing dishes for any customer whose help leaves her, you might be a very nice man, but a pretty poor grocer."

Ned laughed. "I wasn't concerned about Uncle Claude wanting me, but about his requiring the car. Don't get a false idea from me of how the grocery business is run, Miss Johnston. The shop is Uncle Claude's. I'm allowed to do odd jobs, while visiting him."

Mary's eyes unconsciously took in the young man's outer garments. She had been so domestically absorbed that she had only concerned herself with his actions and intentions. Now, she realized that before her was a young man, clad in garments far too sophisticated and too well cut to belong to any grocer's assistant in Peace Valley. Undoubtedly she was being "had" by this young man. Mary's blue eyes snapped.

"I admire your uncle," she said with feeling and obvious emphasis.

"He's my hero, too, just now," Ned agreed.

Mary could not keep from laughter, and somehow laughter cleared the air and seemed to leave all explanations for a future time. Ned went gayly down the steps. At the foot he turned and looked back at the girl. She stood watching him from the doorway. He had not the slightest doubt she was speculating about him. He devoutly hoped so!

That afternoon Ned helped Mrs. Pulsifer out and ushered her into the Johnston kitchen, which was empty, and urged her toward the dishes piled on a tray. Not knowing the etiquette of work by the day, Ned feared she might resent not being ceremoniously welcomed. He watched her begin her task and, much relieved, went into the garden.

He found Mary there, investigating the growth of lilies in a small flower bed under the side window. He was whistling, and she rose from the ground and put a finger to her lips. He stopped instantly.

"I think my mother's asleep," was the low-toned explanation she gave him, with a gesture toward an upper window. Ned explained briefly the arrival and temporary employment of Mrs. Pulsifer.

Mary, delighted to hear this, intimated politely that he had now done all and more than was expected and might add to her debt of gratitude by his departure.

It being a lovely spring afternoon, warm and delightful, Ned had no idea whatever of doing this and obtusely followed her into the kitchen. He insisted, pleasantly, that having brought Mrs. Pulsifer there, he must introduce her.

The introduction performed, Ned still lingered. Mary ignored him, but Mrs. Pulsifer had been young once and scented an approaching romance more readily than might be supposed. She was the type of woman who would always be on the side of the man, right or wrong. With a sly glance at Ned, she asked Mary if it would not be "a kinda good time to get a smifft of fresh air?"

"I need no telling. I've set things to rights often enough for the Greens, who usta have this house, you go down along with Ned Carter here and pick and choose something for dinner. He'd bring you back in a jiffy. Ain't no sense in you two wimen ruining your delicat stummicks with canned trash—with me here to cook. You can git a chicken in no time."

The thought of providing something appetising for her mother appealed to Mary. She made a dignified exit to consult her mother.

> Claude has something on his chest. And he won't be satisfied until he gets it off.

Scoffer Met Match in Witty Preacher

Doctor Parker, famous English pulpit orator, on one occasion was receiving a good deal of attention at a London club to which he had been invited. All was going well until one of the audience, perhaps somewhat irritated at finding a Christian minister the center of so much flattering attention, launched out into an attack upon Christianity. He said that, after all, the benefits of Christianity had been tremendously overrated, and that in beneficent influence upon mankind many inventions had done more than Christianity. "For instance," he said, "I consider that the discovery of gas has done more for mankind than the Christian religion." The clubmen instantly resented this insult to their guest. There were hisses and cries of "Shame" and "Withdraw." Doctor Parker arose and said, "Hush, do not let us quarrel with our friend. He is simply stating his belief. When I am nearing my latter end I will call for the consolation of the Christian religion, but our friend here, on his death-bed, will call for the gas man."—Montreal Family Herald.

LACE TRIM NOW IS POPULAR; INLAYS USED FOR ORNAMENT

A "LACE SEASON" such as reigns throughout all fashionland bespeaks none other than the alluringly feminine, and this is exactly in accordance with the demand of the mode. The new colorful chiffon and georgette frocks with their dainty lace adornment are all that imagination may picture in the way of an exquisitely feminized styling. All grace, all charm, all loveliness are they. The model here illustrated is distinctly characteristic of the present moment fashion trend.

Artistic placement, as well as the lace itself, impart enchantment to this gown. Insets such as are here shown are much in favor for lace-styling. In the colorful dressy georgette frock, but especially are cream or lace yokes introduced into the simple black dress.

Hand beading and embroidery on lace are the "last word" in the lace program.

Because of their style importance, one is led to begin with pockets in telling the story of the season's sports coats. Decorative as well as useful pockets are an outstanding factor in modern coat styling.

Now that the pocket is depended upon to individualize the coat, designers are bending every effort to devise unique and interesting effects. One of the most successful is that of a this instance, cream lace is cunningly positioned to help form a bell sleeve, also to embellish the skirt hemline, and to add a unique touch to the girdle. For this "sweetly feminine" frock choose almond green georgette with cream lace for the color scheme, although any of the new colors will be just as effective, such as pink beige, bois de rose, valencia blue, grecian rose, meadow pink, monkey-skin or orchid.

Filmy lace dyed to match the chiffon as well as heavy cream lace, comes the style message from many leading ateliers of Paris.

A fascinating feature of the new lace program is that it abounds in such delightful revelations of ingenious design. Refreshingly "different" is a cream lace blouse posed over an accordion-plaited chiffon skirt, the latter styled with inset lace drapes. A below-the-elbow puff of the chiffon for the sleeve, with a bow of this material at the neck and for the tie girdle, interrelates this gown.

Lace yokes and sleeves are an outstanding style element in spring dress fashioning. This applies not only to contrasting cloth inlay. It seems as if a patch of solid-colored fabric or leather serves to make the novelty worsted of which the sports coat is made look all the more novel by way of contrast.

A tweed and a homespun novelty mixture coat are shown in this picture, each accentuating pockets with inlays, the model to the left using velours, while the other employs bright-colored suede.

Belts, too, play an interesting part in the fashioning of coats. Sometimes they unite with the pocket in achieving chic. In the model to the right a tiny suede belt, matching the inlays on collar, cuffs and pocket, slips under a buttoned contrivance—such in trigiing details as this affording fascinating variety to sports coats modes.

Two Stylish Sports Coats.

Swagger coats, either of plain or novelty cloaking, feature patches of inlays and insets of flat furs. At the moment interest is concentrated on pony skin, shaved lamb and spotted calfskin.

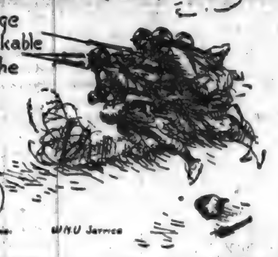
The War at Close Range Described In a Remarkable Series By an Officer of the Marines —



Capt. John W. Thomason, Jr.

(Illustrated by the Author from Sketches Made on the Battlefield)

Copyright 1926 by The Bell Syndicate Inc. WNU Service

STORY FROM THE START

The author describes how the First battalion of the Fifth marines are quartered near Marigny during the first part of June, 1918, when they are suddenly sent up north to relieve the First division, bearing the brunt of the German offensive.

The division set out in camions; in the neighborhood of Meaux they were turned around and sent out the Paris-Metz road, along which the civilian population from the country between the Chemin des Dames and the Marne, together with the debris of a French army, was coming back. The civilians walked with their faces much on their shoulders, and there was horror in their eyes. The marines took notice of another side of war. . . . "Hard on poor folks, war is." "You said it!"— "Say—think about my folks, an' your folks, out on the road like that! . . ." "Yeh. I'm thinkin' about it. An' when we meet that Boche, I'm gonna do something about it—Look—right nice-lookin' girl, yonder!"

There were French soldiers in the rout, too. Nearly all were wounded, or in the last stages of exhaustion. They did not appear to be first-line troops; they were old bearded fellows of forty and forty-five, territorials; or mean, unpleasant-looking Algerians, such troops as are put in to hold a quiet sector. Seven or eight divisions of them had been in the line between Soissons and Rheims, which was, until May 27, a quiet sector. On that day forty-odd divisions, a tidal wave of fighting Germans, with the greatest artillery concentration the Boche ever effected, were flung upon them, and they were swept away, as a levee goes before a flood. They had fought; they had come back, fighting, thirty-five miles in three days; and the Boche though slowed up, was still advancing. They were holding him along the Marne, and at Chateau-Thierry a machine-gun battalion of the American Third division was piling up his dead in heaps around the bridge-heads but to the northwest he was still coming. And to the northwest the Second Division was gathering. During the second, third and fourth of June it grouped itself, first the Fourth brigade of marines, with some guns, and then the regular infantrymen of the Ninth and Twenty-third. Already, around Hautevesnes, there had been a brush with advancing Germans, and the Germans were given a new experience: rifle-fire that begins to kill at 800 yards; they found it very interesting. This was June 5; the battalion near Marigny, on the left of the Marine Brigade, had a feeling that they were going in tomorrow. . . . The men thought lazily on events, and lounged in the wheat, and watched that clump of trees—and at last an agonized bellow came on the echo of a bursting shell— "Well—she's stopped one! Thought she musta dug in— "Le's go get it—"

Presently there was lots of steak, and later a bitter lesson was repeated —mustn't build cooking-fires with green wood, where the Boche can see the smoke. But everybody lay down on full bellies. Before dark the last French were falling back. Some time during the night Brigade sent battle orders to the First battalion of the Fifth marines, and at dawn they were in a wood near Champillon. Nearly every man had steaks in his mess-pan, and there was hope for cooking them for breakfast. Instead. . . .

The platoons came out of the woods as dawn was getting gray. The light was strong when they advanced into the open wheat, now all starred with dewy poppies, red as blood. To the east the sun appeared, immensely red and round, a handbreadth above the horizon; a German shell burst black across the face of it, just to the left of the line. Men turned their heads to see, and many there looked no more upon the sun forever. "Boys, it's a fine, clear mornin'! Guess we can chow after we get done molestin' these here Heinies, hey?"— One old non-com—was it Jerry Finnegan of the Forty-ninth?—had out a can of salmon, boarded somehow against hard times. He haggled it open with his bayonet, and went forward so, eating chunks of goldfish from off that wicked knife. Two hours later Sergeant Jerry Finnegan lay dead across a Maxim gun with his bayonet in the body of the gunner. . . .

It was a beautiful deployment, lines all dressed and guiding true. Such matters were of deep concern to this outfit. The day was without a cloud, promising heat later, but now it was pleasant in the wheat, and the woods around looked blue and cool.

Across his wheatfield there were more woods, and in the edge of these woods the old Boche, lots of him, infantry and machine-guns. Surely he had seen the platoons forming a few hundred yards away—it is possible that he did not believe his eyes. He let them come close before he opened fire. The American fighting man has his failings. He is prone to many regrettable errors. But the sagacious enemy will never let him get close enough to see whom he is attacking. When he has seen the enemy, the American regular will come on in. To stop him you must kill him. And when he is properly trained and has somebody to say "Come on!" to him, he will stand as much killing as anybody on earth.

The platoons, assailed now by a fury of small-arms fire, narrowed their eyes and inclined their bodies forward, like men in heavy rain, and went on. Second waves reinforced the first, fourth waves the third, as prescribed. Officers yelled "Battle-sight! fire at will"—and the leaders, making out green-gray, clumsy uniforms and round pot-helmets in the gloom of the woods, took it up with Springfields, aimed shots. Automatic riflemen brought their chaut-chauts into action from the hip—a chaut-chaut is as accurate from the hip as it ever is—and wrangled furiously with their ammunition-carriers— "Come on, kid—bag o' clips!—" "Aw—I lent it to Ed to carry, last night—didn't think—" "Yeh, and Ed lent it to a fence-post when he got tired—get me some off a casualty, before I—" A very respectable volume of fire came from the advancing platoons. There was yelling and swearing in the wheat, and the lines, much thinned, got into the woods. Some grenades went off; there was screaming and a tumult, and the "taka-taka-taka-taka" of the Maxim guns died down. "Hi! Sergeant!—hold on! Major said he wanted some prisoners—" "Well, sir, they looked like they was gonna start somethin'—" "All right! All right! but you catch some alive the next place, you hear?—"Quickly, now—get some kind of a line—" "Can't make four waves—" "Well, make two—an' put the chaut-chauts in the second—no use gettin' 'em bumped off before we can use 'em—" The attack went on, platoons much smaller, sergeants and corporals commanding many of them.

A spray of fugitive Boche went before the attack, holding where the ground offered cover, working his light machine-guns with devilish skill, retiring, on the whole, commendably. He had not expected to fight a defensive battle here, and was not heavily intrenched, but the place was stiff with his troops, and he was in good quality, as marine casualty lists were presently to show.

There was more wheat, and more woods, and obscure savage fighting among individuals in the brushy ravine. The attack, especially the inboard platoons of the Forty-ninth and Sixty-seventh companies, burst from the trees upon a gentle slope of wheat that mounted to a crest of orderly pines black against the sky. A three-cornered coppice this side of the pines commanded the slope; now it blazed with machine-guns and rifles; the air was populous with wicked keening noises.

Most of the front waves went down; all hands, very sensibly, flung themselves prone. "Can't walk up to these babies—" "No—won't be enough of us left to get on with the war—" "Pass the word: crawl forward, keepin' touch with the man on your right! Fire where you can—"

Sweating, hot, and angry with a bleak, cold anger, the marines worked forward. They were there, and the Germans were there. An officer, risking his head above the wheat, observed progress, and detached a corporal with his squad to get forward by the flank. "Get far enough past the flank gun, now, close as you can, and rush it—we'll keep it busy." . . . Nothing sounds as mad as rifle-fire, staccato, furious— The corporal judged that he was far enough, and raised with a yell, his squad leaping with him. He was not past the flank; two guns swung that way, and cut the squad down like a grass-hook levels a clump of weeds. . . . They lay there for days, eight marines in a dozen yards, face down on their rifles. But they had done their job. The men in the wheat were close enough to use the split-second interval in the firing. They got in, cursing and stabbing.

Meanwhile, to the left a little group of men lay in the wheat under the very muzzle of a gun that clipped the stalks around their ears and riddled their combat packs—firing high by a matter of inches and the mercy of God. A man can stand just so much of that. Life presently ceases to be desirable; the only desirable thing is to kill that gunner, kill him with your hands! One of them, a corporal named Geer, said: "By God, let's get him!" And they got him. One fellow seized the spitting muzzle and up-ended it on the gunner; he lost a hand in the matter. Bayonets flashed in, and a rifle-butt rose and fell. The battle tore through the coppice. The machine-gunners were brave men, and many of the Prussian infantry were brave men, and they died. A few streamed back through the brush, and hunters and hunted burst in a frantic medley on the open at the crest of the hill. Impartial machine-guns, down the hill to the left, took toll of both. Presently the remnants of the assault companies were panting in the trees on the edge of the hill. It was the objective of the attack, but distance had ceased to have any meaning, time was not, and the country was full of square patches of woods. In the valley below were more Germans, and on the next hill. Most of the officers were down, and all hands went up.

They went down the brushy slope, across a little run, across a road where two heavy Maxims were caught sitting, and mopped up and up the next long, smooth slope.

Some marines branched off down that road and went into the town of Torcy. There was fighting in Torcy, and a French avion reported Americans in it, but they never came out again . . . a handful of impudent fellows against a battalion of Sturm-truppen. . . . Then the men who mounted the slope found themselves in a cleared area, full of orderly French wood piles, and apparently there was a machine-gun in every woodpile. Jerry Finnegan died here, sprawled across one of them. Lieutenant Somers died here. One lieutenant found himself behind a woodpile, with a big auto-rifleman. Just across from them, very near, a machine-gun behind another woodpile was searching for them. The lieutenant, all his world narrowed to that little place, peered vainly for a loophole; the sticks were pumping and shaking as the Maxim flailed them; bullets rang under his helmet. "Here, Morgan," he said, "I'll poke my tin hat around this side, and you watch and see if you can get the chaut-chaut on them—" He stuck the helmet on his bayonet, and thrust it out. Something struck it violently from the point, and the rifle made his fingers tingle. The chaut-chaut went off, once. In the same breath there was an odd noise above him. . . the machine-gun . . . he looked up. Morgan's body was slumping down to its knees; it leaned forward against the wood, the chaut-chaut, still grasped in a clenched hand, coming to the ground butt first. The man's head was gone from the eyes up; his helmet slid stickily back over his combat pack and lay on the ground. . . .

"My mother," reflected the lieutenant "will never find my grave in this place!" He picked up the chaut-chaut, and examined it professionally, noting a spatter of little red drops on the breech and the fact that the clip showed one round expended. The charging handle was back. He got to his feet with deliberation, laid the gun across the woodpile, and sighted . . . three Boche with very red faces, their eyes looked pale under their deep helmets. . . . He gave them the whole clip, and they appeared to wilt. Then he came away from there. Later he was in the little run at the foot of the hill with three men, all wounded. He never knew how he got there it just happened.

Jackson by No Means Lacking in Education

John Quincy Adams declined to attend the ceremonies at Harvard college in 1833 when the honorary degree of doctor of laws was conferred upon Andrew Jackson, then President of the United States.

His reason, according to his diary, was that "as an affectionate child of our alma mater, I would not be present to witness her disgrace in conferring her highest literary honors upon a barbarian who could not write a sentence of grammar and hardly could spell his own name."

Adams' estimate of Jackson has been challenged by Dr. Archibald Henderson, who tells in the Raleigh (N. C.) News and Observer, the result of his exhaustive researches regarding Jackson's early life. He finds that Jackson, as a boy, received a better education than the average child of his station in life.

Later he attended Waxhaw academy. He continued his studies in that part of Carolina known then as New Acquisition. An account of the life of Rev. Francis Cummins, once a teacher at Bethel, S. C., shows that Jackson was one of his pupils and there is evidence that for a short time Jackson attended Queen's museum in Charlotte, N. C.

Havens for Autoists

On a steep, winding automobile route recently opened to the summit of the Puy de Dome, at Clermont-Ferrand, France, certain points have been made wider to harbor disabled cars. The road is about three miles long to the observatory, 5,000 feet above sea level. Auto busses make regular trips and other cars must pay toll.

The Fateful Cup of Alboin

ABSENT-MINDEDNESS and a capacity for passionate love combined to start Alboin, a German prince, on a career of conquest that resulted in founding the state of Lombardy in Italy and the blending of Teutonic blood with Latin blood in the Sixth century A. D.

This Alboin, son of King Audoin, king of the Lombards (Longbeards), killed Thurismond, son of the king of the Gepidae, but in the heat of battle forgot to seize his arms as a trophy of victory. Alboin was disciplined by his father for this neglect and determined to repair it by demanding Thurismond's arms of his father. The king of the Gepidae, a punctilious warrior, granted the request. While at the court of the Gepidae Alboin saw Rosamond, granddaughter of the king, and fell in love. His request for her hand was refused, so Alboin made an attack on her honor.

War followed and the Gepidae were defeated. Rosamond was won. The victory spread the fame of Alboin, now king of the Lombards, and when he announced a plan for the conquest of a fertile country in Italy, volunteers flocked to his standard, including Saxons, Germans, Bulgarians and Scythians. The invasion succeeded and the Lombard kingdom was set up in northern Italy in 568, A. D.

But the strange career of Alboin of the Longbeards was doomed to a tragic end. One night at a banquet he brought out a wine cup made from the skull of Rosamond's slain father, and, after drinking from it, he commanded that the queen do likewise. Burning with shame at the humiliation, Rosamond obeyed, but promised herself revenge. If she had ever loved her rude lord this offense estranged her. Helmichis, armor-bearer of the king, was enlisted by the queen in a regicide plot. Helmichis bribed Peredeus, a strong swordsman, to assist in the murder, for the king was a valiant opponent. Rosamond secured the king's sword before the attack and he was slain in his bedchamber.

Queen Rosamond's ending was no less tragic. She married Helmichis and they sought sanctuary at the court of Ravenna, where the Greek governor, Longinus, became enamored of her beauty. Rosamond sought to rid herself of Helmichis by poisoning him, in order to wed Longinus, but Helmichis, discerning the poison in his wine, compelled her to drain the glass, and both died.

A Victory Without Profit

THE battle of New Orleans was fought after a treaty of peace had been signed by the United States and England and therefore served no good purpose except to prepare a great political career for the victor, Gen. Andrew Jackson, known to his frontier admirers as "Old Hickory."

Jackson was in many respects a typical product of the frontier. Tall and of tough fiber, he was loyal, unselfish and a proud, implacable enemy. A high temper, reckless courage and punctilious ideas of personal honor made him a man of unquestioned consequence in an age when dueling was still fashionable, and a fine intellect fitted him for the place he was to occupy in national politics.

During the War of 1812 Jackson, as a leader of militia in the South, carried on a successful campaign against the hostile Creek Indians, overcoming many obstacles common to militia warfare of that period. When William Henry Harrison resigned as a major of the regular army, Andrew Jackson was elevated to that rank, and sent against the Indians of Florida, who had been stirred to hostility by British agents.

News that the British planned an attack on New Orleans drew Jackson and his scanty force to that city in January, 1815. Sir Edward Pakenham, brother-in-law of the duke of Wellington, landed a force below New Orleans in January, 1815. Jackson added volunteers to his little army and constructed fortifications of bales of cotton on a position between the city and the attacking force. Pakenham recklessly assaulted the entrenched forces and was badly beaten, being himself killed in action. The battle occurred on January 8, 1815, fifteen days after the treaty of Ghent had been signed, but before the news of peace could reach this country. Notwithstanding the military futility of the victory, Americans were filled with joy over it, for they had not forgotten the burning of Washington by the British six months before.

Jackson became a popular hero and in 1824 received a plurality—but not a majority—in the race for President. The house of representatitves elected John Quincy Adams and Jackson became a martyr. Four years later he was elected and in 1832 was re-elected.

Wonderful Reproduction

A prominent scientist relates experiments in which he saw, among salamanders, the four legs, with their 96 bones besides the tail with its vertebrae, reproduce six times within three months; while in others the lower jaw with all its muscles, vessels and teeth was regenerated. Another saw even the eye restored within the space of a year if the optic nerve remained behind the orbit.

PETER BECOMES A DISCIPLE OF JESUS

LESSON TEXT—Mark 1:14-18; 29-31.

GOLDEN TEXT—Come ye after Me and I will make you to become fishers of men.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Peter Follows Jesus.

JUNIOR TOPIC—The Great Decision.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Making the Great Decision.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Answering Christ's Call.

I. Jesus Preaching in Galilee (vv. 14, 15).

The reason for Christ changing from Judea to Galilee was the growing opposition to Him. He accepted the fate of John, the Baptist, as foreshadowing His own death. The rejection of the forerunner meant the rejection of Him whose advent he heralded.

1. What He preached (v. 14).

The gospel of the kingdom of God which meant the good news of the near approach of the kingdom of God when the rule of God as predicted by the prophets would be realized.

2. How He preached it (v. 15).

(1) "The time is fulfilled and the kingdom of God is at hand."

This meant that the time had now come for the appearance of the Messiah and the establishment of His kingdom.

(2) "Repent."

This meant that the people should turn around, change their minds and attitude toward Christ and accept Him as their King. The message of repentance is one which needs to be sounded out today.

(3) "Believe the gospel." Then, as now, men needed to believe the gospel of Christ.

II. Jesus Called Peter and Andrew to Become Fishers of Men. Jesus called this pair of brothers for service in His kingdom. It is usually best to perform the Lord's service in pairs. This has a threefold value. It makes testimony effective; it provides fellowship on the part of workers and protection of the witnesses. It is to be noted that these men had previously been called to be disciples of Christ (John 1:36-42). They are now called to service. Observe:

1. From what they were called (v. 16).

They were called from positions of definite service. They were fishers. God always chooses His servants from the ranks of the employed.

2. To what they were called (v. 17).

To be "fishers of men." They no doubt had been successful fishers. The qualities which made them good fishermen, namely, patience, bravery to face the storm and darkness of the night, and perseverance, which led them to toil all night though no fish were caught, would make them good fishers of men.

3. Their obedience (v. 18).

"Straightway they forsook their nets and followed Him."

To obey meant sacrifice, painful separation, the giving up of all business interests and leaving father behind. Regardless of the cost, they yielded prompt obedience.

III. Jesus Entering Simon Peter's House (vv. 29-31)

Soon after the call of Peter and Andrew, Jesus called James and John, after which they entered the synagogue at Capernaum, where He cast out an evil spirit. This miracle caused His fame to be spread abroad.

1. A loved one ill (v. 30).

When Jesus entered this home He found Peter's mother-in-law with a burning fever. We know that among the closest followers of Jesus there are suffering ones and anxious and burdened hearts. To all such Jesus comes with loving sympathy and power to help.

2. "They tell Him of her" (v. 31).

This was the proper thing to do. We should bring to the attention of Jesus those of our families who have need of bodily or spiritual healing.

3. He healed her (v. 31).

"He came and took her by the hand and lifted her up." This act showed the nearness, sympathetic tenderness and power of Jesus. At His touch the fever departed and strength was imparted to her body.

4. "She ministered unto them" (v. 31).

This act shows:

(1) That the cure was instantaneous and complete. When Jesus heals there is no halfway business.

(2) Gratitude on the part of the one healed. She thus expressed her appreciation of what Jesus had done. All those who have experienced the healing power of Jesus will express their gratitude in loving service to the Lord and His disciples.

God's Indulgence

God is not over-indulgent. He is too loving for that. Because He loves us, and plans for our growth, He cannot let our faults go without correction. His justice stands side by side with His mercy, and cannot be evaded or left out of account.—Southern Methodist.

HOW SHALL MOTHER CHOOSE HER TASKS?
Katharine D. Hill

It is often so very difficult for a mother to know how best to spend her time and strength. And if she has other interests besides feeding, clothing and housing her family, her problem is still greater.

Last summer I seized a most unusual opportunity, and I left my little ones in other careful hands for an hour or so each day while I attended a university course. One day shortly after my return from class, I was folding down a hugh basketful of clothes fresh and white from my line, and as I laid aside the little undergarments to be worn unironed, I commented laughingly, "My poor children! Mother attends lecture courses and they have to wear clothes that are not ironed!"

Some time later as I mused over my remark I began to wonder if I had not uttered a grave condemnation against myself. But I am convinced that I am right in the standard I have set for myself in such matters.

I want to do for the children that which will be best for them not only today but ten or twenty years from today. I am trying to provide not only a happy childhood but also a full, rich maturity. By such a standard I test my daily work.

Tradition teaches that my children shall wear clothes inside and outside that are ironed, that unless I can hire someone else to do it, I must slave at a board instead of attending concerts or lecture courses. Experience teaches that a large percentage of mothers faithful to this tradition fall short in the task God gave them to do. These women are usually ideal mothers to little children, but when adolescence comes, trailing its manifold dangers, these mothers can no longer serve their best. Bodies and nerves are spent in ceasless labors, minds once keen are dulled by the deadly monotony of such tasks as ironing seven little union suits for each of three children every week, for twelve or thirteen years.

I want to give my husband and children the best of all I have. I try to keep the little ones as clean as healthy children can be, not only for today's health, but for the strength of the bodies they will need to do life's work. I try to direct their thoughts and feelings so that they may conduct their little lives rightly today and may achieve Godly manhood and womanhood. And through it all and for it all I must leave undone many of the things of the passing moment that I may spend my time and strength on things of far-reaching consequences; and at the same time I must keep myself fit to serve my grown boys and girls at a time when they most need a mother who is keen, sympathetic and strong.

Another business house has added to its equipment. Wm. Harman has added a meat slicer which enables better service to his customers.

Wm. Pepple is improving slowly, being on the sick list the past week. Mrs. E. R. Kinsey has had a siege of tonsilitis also but is better.

Happiness costs so little and comes so easy to children that it ought to be the business of all grown people to give them as much as possible.

Gallstone Troubles Explained

KANSAS CITY DOCTOR GIVES GOOD ADVICE TO SUFFERERS FROM GALLSTONES OF THE LIVER

Gallstone sufferers, especially those whose suffering has about driven them to an operation, will welcome the joyous news that a large percentage of cases of this painful, health destroying disease may now be successfully treated without surgery.

To Dr. E. E. Paddock, a Kansas City physician, who for 30 years has specialized in the treatment of diseases of the gall bladder, gall ducts and the liver, belongs the credit for a remarkable home medical treatment that sufferers the country over declare has brought relief and has made hundreds of operations unnecessary.

According to Dr. Paddock, surgery is resorted to in many cases where medical treatment would be effective. It is Dr. Paddock's claim the knife should be used only in emergency cases, and that surgery removes only the effect—the cause remaining—unless medical treatment is taken to correct the trouble. Dr. Paddock is a strong advocate of the use of medicines to escape the necessity and danger of an operation. His book fully explains his method of treatment and offers convincing evidence of its efficiency.

Anyone who is afflicted or who is suspicious of any catarrhal inflammation and infection of the gall bladder or gall ducts associated with gallstones of the liver, should send for Dr. Paddock's booklet, "The Liver and Gall Bladder." A copy will be sent free and postpaid to any who request it. In this booklet the Doctor tells the story of his long experience in treating catarrhal conditions associated with gallstones of the liver with medicine. He explains the symptoms by which the disease may be recognized before it reaches an acute stage—and why these symptoms, unheeded, may cause indescribable suffering and ill health. Just fill in and mail the coupon below and the booklet will be sent free and without any obligation whatsoever. Send for it today.

SHERWOOD ELEVATOR CLOSES

The Co-operative elevator at Sherwood, after running for about nine years, will soon quit business. Failure to make it pay the past year is the reason given by members of the company. The date of closing has not been given, but merchandise now on hand is being closed out. Whether the property will be sold will be determined at a later meeting.

WANTS TO ABANDON LINE

The Indiana Service Corporation has filed a petition with the public service commission at Indianapolis asking authority to abandon the interurban line which operates between Decatur and Ft. Wayne. Failure to show a profit is the reason assigned for abandoning service between these two cities. The company will retain the right-of-way for power transmission lines but will tear up the tracks.

STARTING NEW BRANCH

The Economy Cleaning Co. of Auburn, is opening a branch at Butler with Elmer Kiger of Butler in charge. Pressing will be done at Butler but the cleaning will be done in the plant in Auburn.

BROKEN DISHES

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

TRY as we will, be careful still,
We folks who wash the dishes,
Whate'er we do, we break a few,
No matter what one wishes.
Yes, something slips from out the hand,
Or on a cup a plate will land.
You knock your arm, you hear a crash,
And there's a saucer gone to smash.

Yet some folks seem to think a dream
Should never have a waking,
That hearts should choose and never lose
And never know an aching.
They seem to think that they at least
Should set the board and have the feast
And go along the way they wish
Through life, and never break a dish.

And sometimes when you break one then
It's not a ten-cent matter:
Fate smashes up your choicest cup,
Perhaps your biggest platter.
You don't know when, you don't know why,
But you will find, for so have I,
We're walloped by the hand of fate,
And often with our finest plate.

But when you do break something new,
Or something old you cherish,
I tell you what will help a lot,
Although a dish may perish:
One platter isn't ev'rything—
Go in the pantry when bereft
And count the dishes you have left!

SOMETHING TO THINK ABOUT

By F. A. WALKER

THE TURNING POINT

IN THE life of every aspiring human being there comes at some period of its passage the moment that calls for cool deliberation, and a finer adjustment of purposes as regards the future.

Face to face with stern realities, as the clock ticks off the minutes, what must be done? In what direction shall the turn be made?

The raw youth and the green girl, who have been playing the butterfly, are moved suddenly to a sense of their dependence, and as likely as not, if they be serious-minded, an overwhelming consciousness of their inability crowds in upon their addled brain until they are hopelessly overcome with indecision.

They had not until now an idea that life could be so real and earnest. Facing the turning point they see with new eyes.

They are standing today where they stood only a little while ago, their care-worn fathers and mothers, overcome with forebodings and apprehensions.

They recall how often their loving parents have tried to impress upon them the importance of becoming habitually industrious, of having a high purpose in life, of not running away from the battle.

In their reflections they are conscious that they are at the turning point, and that they, and they alone, must decide which way to shift.

They are irresolute and afraid. It is better at such times to push forward pluckily and make a fail than to lose courage or stand idle.

To the faithful and unafraid an honorable defeat is a form of victory.

A defeat of this kind teaches humility and reveals their own defects. If they have within them the right spirit, they find a new strength and confidence which sustain them, and the way to the coveted goal is made clear.

It is folly to assume that you or I can spring up in a clap and go leaping to the heights.

The right thing to do is to learn to labor in patience and faith, to keep going between the failures, to patch up unworthiness and pack the heart with resolutions, to pray for help and keep ever in mind, "Ask, and it shall be given you."

ASSISTANT NAMED TO COUNTY AGENT

H. N. Muller to be in Charge of Corn Borer Control Work In DeKalb County

H. N. Muller arrived in Auburn Monday to assist in the corn borer control work. Mr. Muller came to DeKalb county as assistant county ageente, his duties being corn borer educational work exclusively. Mr. Muller's headquarters will be at the county agent's office and anyone desiring information on the educational phase and information on how to turn corn stalks under, is invited to get in touch with Mr. Muller.

As soon as weather conditions permit, Mr. Mulleer plans to have method demonstrations in variour parts of the county to show farmers how to best take care of corn stalks with machinery that is available on the average farm. There are several methods of taking care of corn stalks and just what method will work best on each individual farm, will have to be decided at these demonstration meetings and by experimenting on the farmer' own land.

S. D. Hull of Columbus has been appointed as assistant county agent in Allen county and will act under the direction of W. F. Burbank, the county agent. Assistant county agents have been appointed for corn borer service in five otheere northeastern Indiana counties. They will relieve the county agents from all educational duties caused by the corn borer infestation so that the regular extension program of Purdue University may be continued as usual. The two agricultural engineers of Purdue University who have been assigned to the entire district for the purpose of holding educational meetings and demonstrations are T. E. Hinten and R. H. Wildman.

Other appointments which became effective Monday were: Whitley county, Maurice Douglas, Flat Rock; Steuben county, James Covert, of Franklin county; Noble county, D. C. Scott, of Spencer; LaGrange county, H. S. Agster, of Rensaalaer.

HART, SCHAFFNER & MARX SUITS Selling at $25 in Fort Wayne.

The selling of Hart, Schaffner & Marx new spring suits at $25 by the Patterson-Fletcher Company of Fort Wayne is attracting nationwide attention. This unusually low price, for the world famous make of correctly styled mens' clothing, has been accomplished by Patterson-Fletcher Company through their volume operating and their unusually low overhead. Selling Hart, Schaffner & Marx suits at $25.00, Patterson-Fletcher's are giving to men of Northern Indiana undoubtedly the greatest values in mens' clothes ever offered in the United States.

JOINING "THE BIG PARADE"

Capacity Audiences Mark Runs in New York, Boston, Chicago, Philadelphia

The universanl desire to join "The Big Parade" was manifested during the engagements in New York, Boston, Chicago and Philadelphia, where it was first shown, by long lines extending a block from the box offices of the theatres in those cities. So great was the demand for this attraction that difficulty was experienced in keeping the tickets out of the hands of speculators. But there should be no occasion for ticket speculation in Fort Wayne for theatre patrons need only to watch the newspapers for the announcement of the advance ticket sale at the Shrine Auditorium Theatre, where "The Big Parade" will be shown on Friday and Saturday of this week. When this attraction is shown in Fort Wayne it will be by a touring unit carrying a twenty piece orchestra and the same presentation used during the New York engagement, which is now in its second year of capacity business. King Vidor made this picture for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer from Laurence Stalling's original screen story. John Gilbert is starred and he is supported by Renee Adoree, Karl Dane, Tom O'Brien, Hobart Bosworth, Claire McDowell, Claire Adams and other well-known screen players.

GOOD COW OUTDOES WORK OF A HORSE

A horse would have to work continuously slightly more than 18½ hours every day to do the same amount of useful work as the dairy cow. Prof. W. W. Yapp, prominent dairy cattle judge and a member of the dairy department of the college of agriculture, University of Illinois, makes this comparison to show that it is necessary for the dairy cow to have a strong constitution in order to do her work day in and day out, month in and month out and year in and year out. Such a constitution is indicated by a full, broad chest and a strong, vigorous, rugged appearance, he says.

In addition to constitution and general health, there are three other characteristics of a dairy cow that should be taken into consideration in picking out a cow, according to Professor Yapp. These are dairy tendency, feeding capacity and development of the milking organs. These three characteristics, together with constitution and general health, are associated with the ability of the animals to produce milk and butterfat. The degree to which the cow excells in all of them is taken as the indication of her probable productive ability.

Dairy tendency in reality characterizes the dairy cow and is understood to mean her ability to utilize feed for milk and butterfat production. Dairy tendency in highly developed dairy cows is so pronounced, so well developed, that the animal will, if not given enough feed, deplete her own body tissues, even to removing the calcium from her bones in order to supply the necessary constituents for the milk which she produces. The extreme development of this character is highly prized by dairymen and is among the first characteristics to be considered in choosing an animal.

The constituents of which milk and butterfat are composed must come from the feed and water consumed by the dairy cow. Furthermore, all of the body processes including digestion and assimilation require energy which must come from feed. Therefore, it is necessary for the cow to have ample capacity to enable her to eat enough feed for all of these processes. A Holstein cow weighing 1,500 pounds and giving 40 pounds of 3.5 per cent milk requires for all purposes, 45 pounds of silage, 15 pounds of alfalfa hay, 7 pounds of ground corn, 4 pounds of wheat bran and 1 pound of oil meal or a total of 72 pounds of feed.

A cow making exceptional productions sometimes eats 150 to 200 pounds of feed, exclusive of water, containing as much as 50 to 60 pounds dry matter. Furthermore, the digestive system of the cow is designed by nature to most efficiently utilize bulky feeds. Such feeds further tax the digestive system of the individual.

A large well-developed udder characterizes the dairy cow in heavy flow of milk. The entire mammary system, including udder, milk veins and milk wells is correlated to production. It is seldom, indeed, that cows with small and poorly formed udders produce large yields of milk and fat.

All of these characteristics are important in the selection of a dairy cow. It is seldom advisable to choose an animal which is especially strong in some but not in all of these characteristics. Even with strict observance of the form of a dairy cow, such observations are at best but an approximation of the productive capacity of the animal and are best used to detect wide, rather than small, differences in production.

Many Dairy Calves Are Overlooked in Winter

Many dairy calves are neglected during the winter months because the owners feel that feed is too expensive and that it does not pay to give the calves proper care. When these same men try to buy heifers or young cows, however, they find that good ones are very expensive.

Calves should have skim milk at least until they are six months old. They will come through the winter in fine shape when this is available along with a limited amount of grain and good alfalfa hay. Such calves should gain around one pound per day or slightly more. A fine heifer will result when this gain is not lost by improper feeding later in the life of the calf.

Some of the best grains to use along with skim milk in calf feeding are cracked corn, ground oats, ground barley and bran. These can be used alone or in combination and supply the needed fat that has been taken out of the skim milk. Corn is especially good as a feed to supply fat.

Machines Save Labor

Milking machines will save labor if a sufficient number of cows are being milked. The herd should number at least ten cows before a milker is a time-saving investment. A mechanical milker will not injure the udder or the cow or cause her to dry up if reasonable care is observed in its operation. Stripping after the machine is necessary to avoid drying up of the cow. Do not leave the milker on the cow too long after practically all the milk is drawn.

W. H. Stearn Gains 15 lbs. Appetite Keen As Razor

Respected Indianapolis carpenter suffered agony for six years. Could not eat or sleep. Weak, wornout and discouraged.. Now, at 67, enjoys good health, exudes good cheer, enthusiasm and energy. Gives full credit to Tanlac

Mr. W. H. Stearn lives at 1211 No. Oakland Avenue, Indianapolis. At 67 years he works steadily as a journeyman carpenter, meeting the competition of men half his age, and holding his own with the best. But for six years he had a different story to tell. Here it is, in his own words:

"I was so rundown from indigestion that my system was completely shattered. When a big contract obliged me to speed up and work overtime, my day's work almost killed me. Sometimes I was actually too weak to raise my hammer or pull my saw. My head and back ached terribly, and when I tried to bend over my head whirled and I was too weak to stand on my feet. Constipation and sluggish liver bothered me and my hand trembled from nervousness. At night I tossed and rolled in bed. Though my work demands plenty of food, my appetite was shot to pieces and I hardly ate enough to keep body and soul together.

"Tanlac helped me so that I now eat and sleep normally again. I'm as energetic as a man of 35 or 40 and don't have to ask odds of younger men. My appetite is like the keen edge of a freshly honed razor and I digest my food like a boy back from the skating pond. The old dizziness, weakness, aches and pains never rack me now. I give all credit to Tanlac for my present fine health, and recommend all other sufferers to try it."

You can profit from Mr. Stearn's experience. If overwork or neglect has left its mark on you, get a trial bottle of Tanlac. It is nature's own tonic and body builder, made from herbs, roots and barks. Your druggist has it; start in on Tanlac today. Over 52 million bottles already sold.

Help Kidneys By Drinking More Water

Take Salts to Flush Kidneys and Help Neutralize Irritating Acids

Kidney and bladder irritations often result from acidity, says a noted authority. The kidneys help filter this acid from the blood and pass it on to the bladder, where it may remain to irritate and inflame, causing a burning, scalding sensation, or setting up an irritation at the neck of the bladder, obliging you to seek relief two or three times during the night. The sufferer is in constant dread; the water passes sometimes with a scalding sensation and is very profuse; again, there is difficulty in voiding it.

Bladder weakness, most folks call it because they can't control urination. While it is extremely annoying and sometimes very painful, this is often one of the most simple ailments to overcome. Begin drinking lots of soft water, also get about four ounces of Jad Salts from your pharmacist and take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast. Continue this for two or three days. This will help neutralize the acids in the system so they no longer are a source of irritation to the bladder and urinary organs, which then act normal again.

Jad Salts is inexpensive, and is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and is used by thousands of folks who are subject to urinary disorders caused by acid irritation. Jad Salts causes no bad effects whatever.

Here you have a pleasant, effervescent lithia-water drink which may quickly relieve your bladder irritation.

A QUICKER WAY TO END COLDS!

To quickly break up a cough or cold, it is necessary to do two things:
1—Get rid of phlegm. 2—Heal irritation in lining of throat, chest and bronchial tubes.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral accomplishes this by its powerful double action. It cuts away phlegm because its medication penetrates through and through the linings of throat, chest and bronchial tubes. You feel almost instant relief, all the way down. Then it is absorbed into the irritated membranes, just as ink soaks into a blotter. As its soothing, healing properties are absorbed by the membranes themselves, it stops the cough, breaks up the cold and brings prompt, lasting relief.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral is hospital-proved. Prescribed by physicians. Pleasant to taste. 60c and, twice the quantity, $1.00, at all druggists.

GOLDENROD EGGS ARE SOURCE OF VITAMINE

Goldenrod Eggs Prepared for Lunch.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

If you are accustomed to serving a hot lunch in the middle of the day, have goldenrod eggs once in a while. Or use them as a supper dish occasionally. They are tempting and nourishing. Eggs, particularly the yolks, supply iron and other valuable minerals, and are a good source of vitamine A. The bureau of home economics gives these directions for preparing goldenrod eggs:

Cooking Goldenrod Eggs.

Hard cook as many eggs as you need, allowing 2 for each person. Cook them in boiling water for 15 minutes, or place them in boiling water and then keep the pan in a warm place, covered, for 30 minutes. Plunge the eggs into cold water and remove the shells. Separate the whites from the yolks. Cut the former into small pieces and reheat in white sauce when wanted. Use a double boiler and allow 1 cupful of sauce to each 6 eggs. A tablespoonful of chopped green pepper or minced parsley may be added. To make white sauce: Melt 2 tablespoonfuls of butter, blend with 2 tablespoonfuls of flour; thin gradually with 1 cupful of milk, season with ¼ teaspoonful salt and a little pepper or paprika. Add the milk very gradually and stir all the time to prevent lumping.

How to Serve.

When almost ready to serve the eggs, make toast, cutting it to any desired shape, and buttering it while hot. Pour the egg-whites in the sauce over the toast, either on individual warm plates or on a platter. Sprinkle over the top of each portion some of the yolks put through a ricer or a sieve to give the effect of goldenrod. Garnish with parsley and serve hot.

Members of Household Enjoy a Lenten Supper

Call it supper or lunch, as you please, and serve it either at the end of the day or in the middle of it, according to the special needs of your household. The boys, including father, will like this menu because it contains fried potatoes; the children will like it because there are chocolate cakes for dessert, and you will like it because it is easy to prepare and it satisfies your unspoken determination to supply as many vitamines as possible in all the family meals.

Here's the menu, followed by directions for cooking most of the foods suggested. The recipes are given by the bureau of home economics. The supper includes cabbage, spaghetti and cheese, fried potatoes, canned peaches, and brownies.

For the cabbage, spaghetti and cheese, you will need four cupfuls of shredded cabbage, two cupfuls of cooked spaghetti, two cupfuls of milk, four tablespoonfuls of flour, four tablespoonfuls of butter, one-half pound American cheese, one teaspoonful of salt. Cook the spaghetti in boiling salted water until tender. Make a sauce of the flour, butter, milk, and salt. Shave up the cheese and add it to the hot sauce. Put the three ingredients—cabbage, spaghetti, and sauce—in a buttered baking dish, in layers, and cover the top with buttered bread crumbs. Cook for 20 or 30 minutes in a moderate oven.

Cooked potatoes can be browned quickly and easily in a little butter at rather a low temperature, and for children are preferable fried in this way rather than in any of the ways that make them greasy or hard. Slow cooking in only a little fat makes a golden brown crust over the outside, while the inside remains soft, and yet does not absorb the fat. There are three other fine points in frying potatoes: Use a heavy skillet; let the pieces brown on one side before turning them; and cook only enough at one time to cover the bottom of the skillet in a fairly thin layer.

The brownies, which are good keepers—if you can keep any sort of cakes or cookies in your house—are, as the name suggests, made with chocolate. The ingredients are: one-half cupful of butter, two ounces or squares of unsweetened chocolate, two eggs, one cupful finely chopped nuts, one cupful flour, one cupful sugar, one teaspoonful baking powder, one-half teaspoonful salt, one-half teaspoonful vanilla.

Melt the butter and chocolate together. Beat the eggs lightly, add the sugar, and stir until it dissolves. Add the chopped nuts, which have been mixed with the flour. Pour into a warmed, greased pan, lined with greased paper. Spread the mixture evenly and bake in a moderate oven (328 to 375 degrees Fahrenheit) for 40 or 45 minutes. Turn from the pan and remove the paper from the cake while it is hot. If this is not done, the paper will stick. Cut the cake into strips a little more than an inch wide and about three inches long. These brownies will keep fresh for some time in a tin box.

Dried Beans Useful as Substitutes for Meat

Many people believe that beans, such as the navy, lima and other kinds of dried beans, are substitutes for meat from the standpoint of their nutritive value. Recent research by the United States Department of Agriculture on the kind of protein contained in different foods has shown that the protein of meat is superior to that of beans from the standpoint of meeting the needs of the body. The protein in meat is called "complete" or "efficient" while that in beans is called "incomplete," because it lacks certain essential acids. The average meal that Americans eat, however, usually contains bread and other foods that contain some kind of protein. Generally a combination of these with the protein in beans will supply the body what it needs. So far as nutritive value goes it is therefore all right to use beans occasionally in place of meat for dinner.

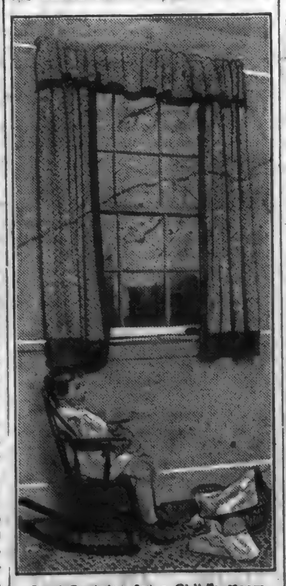
FURNISHINGS FOR CHILDREN'S ROOM

Curtains Should Be Sturdy, Simple and Decorative.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

When the children are little their bedroom is often their playroom, too. As soon as they are old enough to observe them, children take great delight in the furnishings of the nursery. Curtains for the children's room should be sturdy, simple, decidedly decorative. The colors in them should be pure in value, rather than dainty pastel shades. These make little appeal to a small child. Because of the need for sunlight and air, glass curtains are omitted unless the situation of the window makes this impossible. For naptime the light may be modified by a dark shade or screen of some sort.

Here is an attractive window treatment for a child's room, suggested by the United States Department of Agriculture. The curtains are of a fast-colored print, in a blue and red pattern, with a blue border on both curtains and valance. The valance and side draperies are hung on separate rods so the draperies can be brought together at naptime. As both walls and woodwork of the nursery are a light warm gray in color, these gay curtains are very attractive. There is a hit-and-miss rag rug on the floor, mostly red, blue and gray. Gingham, Japanese crepe, or appliqued unbleached muslin could have been used with good effect. Motifs for applique may be cut from cretonnes and figured ginghams and color ideas may be taken from the child's favorite picture book.



Good Curtains for a Child's Room.

Clean Tarnished Silver by Electrolytic Method

Tarnish on silver can be removed by the electrolytic method. Various commercial devices for this can be bought for use at home, or it can be done in the following way: Fill an enameled or agateware kettle partly full of water in which has been dissolved one teaspoonful of either washing soda or baking soda and one teaspoonful of salt to each quart of water, heat this solution to the boiling point, put in strips of aluminum or bright zinc, add the tarnished silver, and boil it. The silver must be covered completely by the water and each piece must be in contact with the aluminum or zinc, either directly or through other silver. When the tarnish has disappeared, the silver should be removed from the kettle, washed, and dried with a clean, soft cloth.

POULTRY

NEGLECT CAUSES MOST FAILURES

When farm poultry flocks are given the right attention, the grower meets with success in his efforts; but, lack of attention to the flock nearly always results in failure to produce profits.

"Ninety per cent of the calls that we get for help with poultry are caused from lack of atttention to simple details in handling the flock," says Allen G. Oliver, poultry extension specialist at North Carolina State college. "Rarely do we get a call from those thousands of farmers who give their birds the right attention. If I were to sum up the most prevailing causes of failure, I would list the following ten:

"The poultry house allowed to be dark, damp and drafty.

"Drinking fountains or troughs allowed to be dirty and filthy or the birds drink from stagnant pools of water.

"Lack of fresh air and sunshine, nature's disinfectants, in the house.

"Failure to clean and disinfect the house at regular intervals.

"Keeping the flock penned up in unsanitary houses and yards.

"Allowing dead poultry to remain exposed.

"Allowing sick poultry to run with remainder of the flock.

"Building the poultry house in a low, damp location.

"Failure to provide sufficient, clean water and shade in summer.

"Permitting lice, mites and other vermin to infest birds and houses."

These ten things, states Mr. Oliver, cause most of the failures and each of them could be easily overcome. They are plain, common-sense precautions which may be observed without great outlay of money and the most that is needed for their observance is some work and a proper regard for the dumb creatures.

Mr. Oliver makes the added precaution that birds should not be crowded in the house during the day nor on the roosts at night. Each hen needs about three square feet of floor space and from seven to ten inches of roosting space. Plenty of clean water and well-kept quarters are always needed for success with poultry.

Correct Time to Start Young Turkeys in Spring

April and May are probably the best times to start the young turkeys, as the natural conditions are then very favorable to young bird life.

You can place the eggs under an old hen of the American or Asiatic breeds but White Leghorns will not be satisfactory. A Plymouth Rock or Brahma hen usually makes a fine mother. The first feed for poults can be bread soaked in milk and squeesed dry, or finely chopped hard-boiled egg mixed with the crumbs from corn bread. After a few days they will be able to use fine chick feed. Young poults thrive the best when they have a range well supplied with insect life and green feed. Turkeys are seed eaters and insect eaters. They do not thrive on sloppy mashes.

A Plymouth Rock hen will cover nine or ten turkey eggs. Be sure the hen is satisfied with her nest before giving her the turkey eggs. Then the management of the hen during the period of incubation is about the same as in hatching chickens except that it takes about 28 days.

Feeding Young Ducks Often Much Neglected

Ducks should start laying as soon as the spring weather arrives. If they do not start laying when expected, see to it that they get feed which supplies the protein and mineral needs. A good laying mash such as is used for laying hens, in connection with scratch grains, will be very satisfactory. Very often the ducks are not given the attention which the chickens receive as they rustle for most of their feed in the summer time and are expected to do this same way the remainder of the year whether the hunting is good or not.

Money From Chickens

More profit can be made from a few chickens that are properly housed and fed, than from a large number that are crowded into a house that is not suited for more than half that number. Overcrowding makes it practically impossible to properly ventilate a building or to keep the building in good sanitary condition. Either condition encourages colds, roup and other contagious diseases. Sanitation is the backbone of successful poultry raising.

Green Feed Necessary

Green feed or a satisfactory substitute is necessary for egg production. Sprouted oats is excellent—probably the best. The time and bother has limited their use. Many are using mangels, carrots, cabbage or lettuce with economy and success. The use of leafy alfalfa or clover in racks or baskets is rapidly increasing. It is the best substitute commonly available. Alfalfa meal in the mash is being widely used and if made of the best quality hay is satisfactory.

Still Have Faith in Odd "Medicine"

Faith in a bottle of medicine for all real and imaginary ailments is a characteristic of the English working classes. In insurance practice, in which the check of expense does not act and the physicians are complaisant, this leads to much wasteful expenditure on drugs. In London the insured numbered 1,860,786, July 6, last year, and for these 7,408,518 prescriptions were issued in the course of a year—an average of more than four apiece for the whole number and a much higher figure (not given) for those who were ill or thought themselves so ill as to consult a panel physician. The cost of the drugs was more than $5,000,000. One defense of this extensive drugging is that the bottle of medicine has a psychologic effect on the insured person which makes him feel better. After this, should the poor savage be despised for his faith in incantations and charms? —American Medical Journal.

Treasury Experts Not Easy Persons to Fool

Many and clever are the "get-rich-quick" schemes that flood the United States treasury, but the experts there are practically fool-proof. The government redeems all torn, burned or otherwise damaged money, thus saving the people millions of dollars annually. By giving good money for mutilated money the Treasury department saved citizens $4,000,000,000 during 1925. Appeals for redemption of money that is retrieved from animals' stomachs, that is partly chewed by infants, or that is burned are granted if two-thirds of it is turned in and the serial number is legible. Recently a man sent in a cigar box full of green paper. He said it was $148 that rats had chewed up. But the experts found that it contained mostly paper and only a $1 bill that had been run through a meatchopper.

TWO AGED RESIDENTS PASSED AWAY

William Malone

William Malone was born in Knox county, Ohio, October 2, 1845 and departed this life March 22, 1927. Aged 81 years, 5 months and 20 days. He died at the home of his son, Jasper at Battle Creek, Michigan.

He came to this county when a young man and married Susan Amelia Thomas October 20, 1881. To this union was born two sons, James F. and William Jasper.

William Malone was the son of James and Mary Malone and was one of a family of eight children, one of a family of eight chuldren, four boys and four girls, all of which are deceased except two. The brothers were, Henry, Hammon and Jacob. The sisters were, Margaret, Sarah Jane, Harriet and Mary. Those living are Sarah Jane White and Harriet Mathews.

He was a member of the Church of Christ at St. Joe, uniting with the church in 1910. He was a kind and loving husband and father and will be missed in the community in which he has lived for years. He leaves to mourn their loss, a widow, two children, five grandchildren, two sisters and a host of friends.

The funeral was conducted at the St. Joe church by Rev. Eldrich, Thursday at 10:00 o'clock. Burial was made at Riverside cemetery with E. R. Kinsey, funeral director.

CARD OF THANKS

We wish to thank the neighbors and friends who so kindly assisted us in any way during the burial of our dear father, also the donors of flowers.

Mr. and Mrs. James Malone.
Mr. and Mrs. Jasper Malone.

George W. Woodcox

George W. Woodcox, son of Cornelius and Mary Woodcox was born November 6, 1837 and died March 22, 1927 at the age of 89 years, 4 months and 16 days. Old age being the attributing cause.

December 26, 1860, he was married to Jane Robinson and three children, Clyde, Ward and Minnie, deceased, were born. Mrs. Woodcox died August 12, 1869.

The second marriage was with Martha Calender on March 16, 1870, and to this union eight sons and three daughters were born. Of this family, Ora and Cora, twins, died in infancy, Bert the sixth son, died in October 1918, immediately after being drafted in the World War.

The children still living are: Iona, Clarence, Musie and Charles of St. Joe; Arthur of Auburn; Edward of Logansport; Elgin of Lisco, Nebraska and Laura of Brook, Indiana. All the children were in attendance at the funeral.

The funeral was held from the Christian church Thursday afternoon. Rev. J. N. Scholes, officiating with E. R. Kinsey, as funeral director. Burial in Riverside cemetery.

"Wash" as he was familiarly known by his friends was, at the time of his death the oldest settler of DeKalb county. At an early day he taught school for several years, later served as Justice of the Peace of Concord township for several terms. He owned and operated the first general store of St. Joe. For many years he was a contractor on public works, and throughout his long life was noted for his energy and ambition.

CARD OF THANKS

We wish to thank our many friends and neighbors for their kindness and sympathy during the sickness and death of husband and father.

Mrs. Woodcox and Children.

ASKING FOR INCREASE IN RATES

The Ohio Power company, with a franchise that has fifteen years yet to run, has presented to the village council of Hicksville, Ohio, a request of fifty years franchise extension, along with increases in the rates sought in a new contract. The old contract expired Jan. 1. The power company proposes to raise the minimum monthly bill from 50 cents to $1, to charge 10 cents per kilowatt hour instead of 9 cents for domestic lighting, and to raise the power from 5 cents to 8 cents per kilowatt. The company also proposes to annul the present 10 per cent discount for prompt payment and to substitute a penalty for late payments.

Dog Barred From School

An injunction restraining a little girl from taking her pet dog to school with her has been granted by a Montreal court.

A Trifle Forward

"You should see the altar at our church," bragged the young man. "Lead me to it," she replied, and she had him.

She may have been a trifle forward, but times have changed. At least she knew what she wanted. So does our Bank. We want more business, more customers, more accounts. We want to build up the strongest, most reliable bank in this part of the state. We want you to take advantage of the facilities we offer. There's safety, stability and security at our Bank.

THE WHY of SUPERSTITIONS

By H. IRVING KING

THE NIGHTMARE

IN MANY sections of the country it is customary for people subject to nightmare to sleep with a pair of scissors or a knife under the pillow as a preventive against the affliction. In some sections they will tell you that the nightmare is caused "by an evil spirit struggling with one."

This conception of nightmare as an evil spirit is a conception of primitive man and one which exists in the mimicism of primitive races today, as well as among the superstitions of the civilized peoples. And anyone who has ever experienced nightmare cannot wonder. Shakespeare, in a song in "King Lear," makes St. Withold say when he meets "the nightmare and her nine fold," "Arroint thee, witch! arroint thee!" and the first definition of nightmare given by the Century dictionary is "An incubus, or evil spirit that oppresses people during sleep." Some of us may be content to ascribe our nightmare to a poorly-made Welsh rarebit instead of a witch or an evil spirit but not so our ancestors or our more superstitious neighbors.

In folklore, then, the nightmare being a witch or an evil spirit, what is more potent to keep it away than a piece of cold iron which, as is well known, from the beginning of the Iron age witches and evil spirits have abhorred and feared? The reason for the fear and abhorrence of iron by evil spirits has brought forth much discussion. The belief began when man first tried to work iron ore into a usable metal and from the superstition under consideration, and from numerous other current superstitions, we see that it has not entirely vanished.

WHEN I WAS TWENTY-ONE

BY JOSEPH KAYE

At 21: Samuel Insull Was Edison's Secretary.

"AT ABOUT this time I was engaged as Mr. Edison's private secretary, a position I had long waited and strived for.

"I had to work in the office all day, look after the financial and business end and very often I would be with Mr. Edison at his laboratory most of the nights. We usually worked about four nights in seven. We seldom worked on Sunday nights but as a rule we were at it during most of Monday and Tuesday nights. By Wednesday night we were so exhausted through lack of sleep that we usually spent the night in bed.

"Thursday and Friday nights saw us busy again until well into the morning. I have known Edison to work night and day ten days on end. He seemed to be able to go without sleep as long as a camel can go without water.

"In the office I was expected to clean up the correspondence with Edison's laconic comments as a guide as to the character of the answer to make. It was a very common thing for Edison to write the words 'yes' or 'no' and this would be all I had on which to base my answer.—SAMUEL INSULL."

TODAY—Mr. Insull is head of the Commonwealth Edison company of Chicago, the largest power plant, it is said, for producing electricity in the world and is one of the greatest figures in the financial and business life of this country.

For a job on the side, Mr. Insull directs the destinies of the Chicago Civic Opera association, which is to the West what the Metropolitan Opera company is to the East.

Mother's Cook Book

Home is the resort of love, of joy, of peace and plenty, where supporting and supported, polished friends and dear relations mingle into bliss.—Thompson.

A FEW SOUPS

A GOOD hot soup is not only a good appetizer, but a nourishing beginning to a meal.

Puree of Celery.

Cut two bunches of celery into small pieces and parboil, then drain and fry in butter. Add salt, pepper and nutmeg to season; cover with veal stock and simmer one hour. Blend two tablespoonfuls of butter with two of flour, add a quart of veal stock and the celery and cook until thick; rub through a sieve, reheat, add two cupfuls of hot milk, a pinch of sugar and a tablespoonful of butter. Serve with croutons.

Puree a la Croisay.

Put into a saucepan a carrot, a turnip and an onion cut fine, two cupfuls of beans, two leeks and a small bunch of parsley. Fry the vegetables in butter and dredge with flour, add a can of tomatoes and two quarts of veal stock, with a stalk of celery and cook until thick. Rub through a sieve, reheat, season with salt, pepper and a bit of sugar and butter. Add one cupful of cooked peas and one cupful of boiling cream.

Soup Soubise.

Slice thin two spanish onions and cook ten minutes in one-fourth of a cupful of butter, stirring constantly. Add one quart of white stock and cook slowly for 20 minutes, then strain. Dilute three tablespoonfuls of flour with enough water to pour, add to the soup and bring to the boiling point. Add one cupful of cream, one tablespoonful of chopped green peppers or one-fourth of a cupful of grated cheese. Season with salt and pepper.

Chicken Salad.

Take two cupfuls of chicken cut into small pieces, add one cupful of celery, one cupful of diced cucumber and two tablespoonfuls of capers. Season with salt and pepper and mix with boiled dressing, to which an equal amount of whipped cream has been added. Serve on lettuce.

MONEY THAT WORKS

A MAN visited our bank a few weeks ago who had just sold some property.

HE WAS not ready to invest the money again for a few months but he did not want the money to 'loaf' and earn nothing for him during that time.

SO HE wanted to know what he could do with the money to make it earn some profit and be available in case he needed it.

OF COURSE we suggested a Certificate of Deposit. You can have a "C. of D." for any amount and continue it as long as you wish. It pays a nice profit, too.

THERE IS no better plan for your money that is not otherwise employed. Let us tell you more about this plan.

No one can know Condition of his eyes

Without undergoing an examination. No one can tell anything about the eyes merely by looking at them. They must be examined by instruments that detect the slightest deviation from normal. So there is very little use asking anyone if his eyes are normal. He doesn't know. But our examination would tell him. Then we could correct the defects we found.

TRUSTEES MEETING HELD AT ST. JOE

The trustees held their monthly meeting at St. Joe Monday where they were guests of Trustee O. K. Shull of Concord township. Mrs. Shull served a delicious dinner with the assistance of the girls of the freshman class in home economics taught by Miss Ima Bray.

The trusteees held a morning session in the new comunity and high school building. Reports were made to them by County Attendance Officer Ed Koons, County Agent E. E. Stinson and the county nurse, Miss Marion Sweeney. Miss Sweeney announced that a county public health day will be observed in Auburn Saturday, April 30, and she asked for the cooperation of the schools. The program as outlined will include plays, music, health drills and a Maypole dance on the court house lawn.

CHURCH VACATION SCHOOL FOR ST. JOE AND THE COMMUNITY THIS SUMMER

One leader in religious work has said, "The church which does not provide a Vacation School for its children is delinquent in its duty. Worse, if possible, it is lost in a great opportunity. Idle children spoiling for something to do, idle churches yawning in empty indolence, a generation growing up in ignorance of the Bible and unacquainted with the person and teachings of the Christ—here are factors that challenge attention. The Vacation Church School is the answer."

It is realized today that the time allotted on Sunday to the religious training of boys and girls is not sufficient for permeating the life with ideas and ideals for assurance of really practicing the principles of Christian living. As these facts are faced, that in Indiana some 551,000 boys and girls under twelve years of age are receiving no religious instruction, the others receiving but one-half hour per week, the church is confronted with a new responsibility. Dr. Athearn says, "The twin evils of ignorance and Godlessness are the only enemies which a democracy need fear. If it cannot conquer them it cannot survive." The Vacation Church Schools can help eliminate the possible menace of Godlessness in the life of our democracy. Now, conscious that spiritual illiteracy undermines society, the church must face anew the task of teaching religion.

The Vacation Church School is a school conducted during the summer for two hours and a half each day, 5 days a week for a period of four or five weeks. The program is planned to train boys and girls in worship, in church hymns and music, Bible study, missionary and other expressional activities. This opportunity increases the time, making consecutive instruction more effective. This should be used as a real supplement for the Sunday School. It should be done by the churches and the church people in the name of the church.

To you who are interested in the church schools of this community are aware of the fact it is now a part of the school standard, that each school have a Daily Vacation School, and last fall a committee was appointed to supervise and make arrangements for this school. A number of meetings have been held and another will be held tonight (Thursday) to rush to completion the final plans of operation.

The movement is co-operative and entirely interdenominational and each child will be given an oportunity to attend the vacation school. Many children are in homes where older ones are indifferent toward the church program; others are in non-church homes or in homes where excuses are given for the child's absence if one church or denomination sponsors the work.

The school will be conducted along the lines advised by authorities and St. Joe will probably require at least a three group school as follows:—

Group I or Kindergarten—children below public school age.

Group II or Primary—children of the first, second, third grades in public school.

Group III or Junior—children 9 to 11 years, or the fourth, fifth and sixth grades in public schools.

The committee will need the hearty support of every home and every church in the community.

Later we will give further details of the plans and progress.

IN MEMORY OF MARTIN TUSTISON

The life of Martin Tustison will be held before the members of the St. Joe Lutheran Church constantly, because of the beautiful memorial, in the form of a marble baptismal fount, just recently installed in the chuurh by the Tustison heirs from the estate of the deceased.

The gift to the church is indeed an appropriate one. While there were no requests in the will for a memorial, yet, Gray Woodcox, who received the greater portion of the property, thought it due the church that some kind of a memorial be left. At the suggestion of Mrs. Bessie Tustison, the church s now in possession of this valuable piece of marble work. The fount stands approximately three feet tall, the top being solid and smooth and well polished. An aluminum tray is placed in the cavity on top for the placing of water when baptismal services are observed.

The name of Martin Tustison is held dear by the Lutheran people as he was a faithful member of the church. He served many years as their custodian of the church and lawn and in these duties he took a great interest. He was a financial supporter of the church in all its departments, and exceptionally faithful in attending all the services. In his passing the church suffered a great loss.

He was a man of even temper, always holding the ordinances of the church as a rule of living.

The church had not been notified of this memorial being given and when the Sunday School opened last Sunday morning it was located in the front of the church.

The entire congregation feels deeply indebted to Mr. Gray Woodcox for the rembrance.

OBITUARY

Franklin H. Cotrill, son of John and Maria Cotrill, was born in Wilmington, township, DeKalb county, Indiana, March 19, 1860, and departed this life at the home of his son in Concord township, March 29, 1927, aged 67 years and 10 days.

He spent practically his entire life in DeKalb county, with the exception of about 3 years residence in the western states, principally Iowa, Missouri, Kansas and Arkansas.

Returning to Indiana he was united in marriage to Miss Corlista Smith, November 23, 1885. To this union were born three children, two sons and one daughter. The oldest son, Vance, died in February, 1887. The wife and companion was called to her reward in 1897. He is survived by the daughter, Mrs. Fay Bahrens of New York City, the son, George Cotrill, with whom he resided, one granddaughter, Alice May Cotrill and two sisters, Mrs. Kate Fusselman and Mrs. Ida Traxler.

He was an indulgent father, a good friend and neighbor; ever ready to help the needy in sickness or distress, and gave freely of his means to all worthy enterprises.

The funeral services were held at the Newville United Brethren church at 1:30 o'clock, Rev. P. A. Hubbart, officiating. Interment was made in the Newville cemetery. R. L. Rupp had charge of the funeral.

"RUMP" MEETING CLOSED QUICKLY

Only Four Republican Committeemen Appeared at Court House Monday Night

There were four DeKalb county republican precinct committeemen present Monday night in the court house for the "rump" meeting which had been called to convene at 7:30 to transact business of vital importance, according to anonymous notices which had been sent to all committeemen last week.

No one present claimed responsibility for calling the meeting, there was no one to preside, the person who is thought to have been back of the call entered the assembly room by one door and left immediately through another and the meeting automatically adjourned.

Besides the four committeemen there were a few spectators, the entire crowd numbering not to exceed a dozen. H. C. Springer of Butler, the recently elected county chairman, Karl Knapp, the secretary of the republican organization, H. C. Willis, of Waterloo and a few others were onlookers. —Star.

MISS DOROTHY FETTERS RECEIVES MEDAL

The War at Close Range Described in a Remarkable Series by an Officer of the Marines

Capt. JOHN W. THOMASON, Jr.

(Illustrated by the Author from Sketches Made on the Battlefield)

(© by the Bell Syndicate, Inc.)

STORY FROM THE START

The author describes how the First battalion of the Fifth marines are quartered near Marigny during the first part of June, 1918, when they are suddenly sent up north to relieve the First division, bearing the brunt of the German offensive. Part of the Fifth wrest Hill 142 from the enemy and wait there for the German counter offensive they can see forming.

Later in the day the lieutenant was back on the pine-crested hill, now identified as Hill 142. Captain Hamilton was there, one or two other officers, and a handful of the Forty-ninth and Sixty-seventh companies; a semblance of a line was organized. From the direction of Torcy a counter-attack developed; the Boche was filtering cleverly and forming somewhere on the Torcy road, in cover. The marines were prone, slings adjusted, killing him. "It's a quarter-point right windage—" "Naw! not a breath of air! Use zero—"

A file of sweating soldiers, burdened with picks and shovels in addition to bandoleers and combat gear, came trotting from the right. A second lieutenant, a reddish, rough-looking youngster, slumped up and saluted. "You in charge here?" he said to the marine officer. "I'm Lieutenant Wythe of the Second Engineers, with a detachment. I'm to report to you for orders." "Well—captain's right up yonder—how many men you got?" "Twenty-two, sir—" "Fine! That makes thirty-six of us, includin' me—just flop right here, and we'll hold this line. Orders are to dig in here—but that can wait—see yonder—?"

Those engineers, their packs went one way and their tools another, and they cast themselves down happily. "What range, buddy?—usin' any windage—?" A hairy non-com got into his sling and laid out a little pile of clips. . . . There was always good feeling between the marines of the Second division and the regular army units that formed it, but the marines and the Second engineers—"Say, if I ever got a drink, a Second engineer can have half of it!—Boy, they dig trenches and mend roads all night, and they fight all day! An' when us guys get all killed off, they just come up an' take over the war! They's no better folks anywhere than the engineers. . . ."

CHAPTER II

The Boche wanted Hill 142; he came, and the rifles broke him, and he came again. All his batteries were in action, and always his machine-guns scourged the place, but he could not make head against the rifles. Guns he could understand; he knew all about bombs and auto-rifles and machine-guns and trench-mortars, but aimed, sustained rifle fire, that comes from nowhere in particular and picks off men—it brought the war home to the individual and demoralized him.

Toward mid-day, this sixth of June, 1918, the condition around Hill 142 stabilized. A small action, fought by battalions over a limited area of no special importance, it gave the Boche something new to think out, and it may be that people who write histories will date an era from it.

Between attacks the stretcher-bearers and the Red Cross men on both sides did their utmost for the wounded who were scattered through the wheat around the hill, and who now, under the torture of stiffening wounds and the hot sun, began to cry out. As the afternoon advanced, you heard pitiful voices, little and thin across the fields: "Ach, Himmel, hilf, hilf! Brandighe! . . . Liebe Gott, brandighe!" . . . "First-aid—this way, First-aid, for the love of God!" . . .

Late in the afternoon a great uproar arose to the right. There was more artillery up now, more machine-guns, more of everything. The Third battalion of the Sixth marines and the Third battalion of the Fifth attacked the town called Bouresches and the wood known as Bois de Belleau. They attacked across the open, losing hideously. Platoons were shot down entire.

Lieutenant Robinson got into Bouresches, with twenty men out of some hundred who started, threw the Boche out, and held it. They gained a footing in the rocky ledges at the edge of the Bois de Belleau, suffering much from what was believed to be a machine-gun nest at this point. They tried to leave it and go on, with a containing force to watch it; they found that the whole wood was a machine-gun nest.

Night descended over a tortured area of wheat and woodland, lit by flares and gun-flashes, flailed by machine-guns, and in two many places pitiful with crying of wounded who had lain all the day untended in a merciless sun. Stretcher bearers and combat patrols roamed over it in the dark. Water parties and ration parties groped back from forward positions over unknown trails. There were dog-fights all over the place, wild alarms, and hysterical outbreaks of rifle-fire. It was the same with the Boche; he knew the ground better, and he was determined to repossess it. His people filtered back through the American strong points, for the marines did not hold a continuous line; isolated positions were connected by patrols and machine-guns laid for interlocking fire.

At the southern angle of Hill 142 the Forty-ninth company put out a listening post—one man down the slope a little way, to watch for visitors. In the night there was a trampling, a grunt, and one scream—"Boche!"—At once the hill blazed into action—weary men, overspent, they fired into the dark until their pieces were hot. And after, they found the listening post fellow, bayoneted. And down the hill a little huddle of new dead. Not all the rifle-fire had gone astray.

Back in brigade, officers bent over maps and framed orders for a stronger attack on the Bois de Belleau at dawn. . . . Brigade was writing also to Division: " . . . casualties severe. . . . figures on which to base call for replacements will be submitted as soon as possible. . . ."

• • • • • • •

At the crossroads beyond La Voie du Chatelle the replacements met the war.

Behind them, crammed somehow into weeks, were Quantico, the transport, Brest, a French troop train.

An Engineer of the Second.

Then there was the golden country around St. Aignan, the "Saint Onion" of Americans.

The war was represented by demoniac non-coms, instructors in this and that. Bayonet drills—"Come on, now; lemme hear you—'What do we wash our bay'nets in?—German blood!'—Aw—sing out like you meant it, you dam' replacements! I'll swear, it's a shame to feed animals like you to the Germans—" Gas-mask drill—"Take more than five seconds, an' your maw gets a gold star—Now!—the gas-alert position—O, for Gawd's sake, you guy, you wit' the two left feet—" "But sergeant, I find that I have a certain difficulty—" Sergeants also swear terribly. . . . There was every kind of drill, eight hours a day of it, and police work.

Rumors of great battles in the north. Glum and sad civilians—they were glum and sad everywhere in France, that spring of 1918—talking in anxious groups after the town crier with his drum passed. Another troop train—maybe the same train that was carelessly left alongside a train containing the wine ration for some French division, the papers in which case are probably still accumulating. Camions after that. The replacements debussed late of a June afternoon and went up a great white road between exactly spaced poplars. They marched first in column of squads, then in column of files, platoons on opposite sides of the empty road. At the crest of a slope the column stopped. You could see, hanging above the skyline to the north and east, curious shapes—"Look like a elephant's head, bowed on, wit' his ears out, don't they, sergeant?" The tall non-com replacement officer in charge: "We'll stop here, sir. Boche sausages yonder—observation balloons—see the whole country. We'll wait till dark."

The detachment was glad to fall out, off the road. The sun set after a while, and the day drowsed into the long twilight. Presently the sergeant said: "We can move now, sir." The replacements moved, making no conversation.

A little country road led them off the highway. They passed a shattered farmhouse where a few soldiers lounged in the dusk, "Regimental, sir. Gets shelled a lot. No, sir, they don't expect you to report. Somebody on the road to meet you. . . "A little group of officers rose out of the ditch, yawning. They looked slack and tired. "Replacement column? You in charge? Yes—assignments made back in Brigade. You'll go too, Henry: Your battalion gets a hundred and seventy, with five officers. Take 'em off the head of the column—tell Major Turrill—"

The detachment followed the officer called Henry, who set what they considered an immoderate pace. He passed the word: "Don't bunch up; if a plane comes over low, don't look up at it—he can see your faces; no smokin', an' don't talk—"

They went through a gap in a hedge and were at another crossroads. "Fall out here, an' form combat packs. Leave your stuff under the hedge. Take one blanket. Come on—quickly, now!—an' don't bunch up!—" The replacements formed combat packs expertly, remembering Parris island and Quantico. "Smartly, now! Come by here, fill your pockets—each man take two boxes hard bread—Where'll you carry them? How in hell do I know—There!"

Two goods boxes sat close together, and the men filed between them. One box had dried prunes in it, the other bread. "Don't stop! Don't stop! Right down that road, an' keep movin'!"

Out over the woods a sound started, a new sound. It was a rumbling whine, it grew to a roar, and a 77 crashed down just beyond the crossroads. A cloud blacker than the night leaped up, shot with red fire—"Lie down, all hands!" Another landed at once; the air was full of singing particles. The men, flat on their faces, in the dark, waited numbly for the next order. There were a dozen or so shells all around the place. The last one hit between the two goods boxes, where a man was lying. The boxes and the man vanished in a ruddy cloud—better than if he'd gotten it in the belly and rolled around screaming. . . . There were no more shells—"Say, you know, I saw a arm an' a rifle goin' up wit' that burst—I—who was he, anyway?—"

"Keep quiet, there! All right! on your feet—right down that road—" the officer ordered, and added to himself—"Dam' it! Should have remembered they shell La Voie du Chatelle every night this time—but they acted fine. . . ." A voice spoke up, excited, amused: "Say! Sergeant McGee—anything like that in Vera Cruz" "Pipe down, you Boot."

They went down a wood-road, black as a pocket. Just ahead came a bright flash and a roar, and fragments ripped through the woods, and they heard a lamentable crying, getting weaker: "First aid! first aid—" The column came to a dead mule and the wreck of a cart lying athwart the road, and a smoking hole, and a smell of high explosive, and the sharp reek of blood. There was a struggling group, somebody working swiftly in the dark, a whiteness of bandages, and the white blur of a man's torso. "Lie still, damn you!"—"O, Ahhhhh! Go easy, you—" "Hell, I know it hurts, guy, but I got to get this bandage on, haven't I? Come on—quit kickin'—" Passing around the mule, a man stepped on something neither hard nor soft—nothing else on earth feels that way—and he floundered to one side, cursing hysterically. —"Quiet, back there—pass the word, no talking!" The files obediently passed the word. The column groped on in the dark.

Emerson Ideal Host to Weekly Visitors

Ralph Waldo Emerson used to open the study in his Concord home to visitors one day of each week during the winter. Chairs for the accommodation of the company would be ranged in a circle, and the farmers and shopkeepers of the neighborhood, as well as the Lowells, Holmeses, Alcotts and Longfellows would occupy them side by side. At the head of the ring would sit Emerson, one leg crossed over the other knee, and such was their length and flexibility that he could twine the one round the other, so that the upper foot caught behind the lower ankle. Then, leaning forward on his elbow, he would smilingly receive questions and make observations. But he did not permit himself monologues, as Alcott could not help doing, but was concise, courteous and genial, liking better to hear than to speak.—Julian Hawthorne in the Dearborn Independent.

Ancient Farm Rules

A Greek inscription of the Fifth century, recently discovered near the aqueduct which conveyed water into Jerusalem, contains a warning, both against trespass and planting crops within fifteen "polos" ((fifteen feet) of the conduit. To make sure the peasant should not plead ignorance of the distance, the "foot" 12 1-16 inches long, was engraved on the stone.

STORY FROM THE START

Claude Melnotte Dabbs, returning from New York to his grocery store in Peace Valley, Pa., brings with him a stranger, Ned Carter, whom he introduces to his housekeeper, Aunt Lyddy, as a chance acquaintance. Ned tells that he has broken with his folks because of their pacifistic leanings. Visiting in Clover Hollow, the two men almost run over a dog belonging to a girl whom Ned recognizes. Later Ned delivers a grocery order, and in his absence the girl, Dorothy Selden, tells Dabbs that Ned's name is Rangeley and that he is the son of the famous banker. Next morning Ned, starting to work as a delivery boy, takes an order marked "Johnston" to the "White House," where he meets Mary Johnston. She tells him the servants have left, leaving her alone with her mother. Ned promises to get new servants. Meeting Dorothy, who is his former fiancee, Ned evades explaining his presence in Peace Valley. He arranges with Ettie Pulsifer to begin work with the Johnstons, but she is unable to start at once. Ned returns to tell Mary about hiring Ettie, and in explaining this matter to the mother is astonished at her emotion when Dabbs' name is mentioned. The cook arrives, and Mary and Ned start to town for groceries.

She found her mother asleep and rejoiced at the sight, because mother looked a dear asleep, and because she needed sleep. Mary pinned a note on the pillow to explain the presence of Mrs. Pulsifer and her own departure for the village.

Then, secretly amused with country life and its responsibilities, Mary serenely pulled on a jolly little hat, the brim lined with blue to match her eyes, thrust her purse in the pocket of her blue coat and ran softly down the stairs and out into the garden.

"We've our own car, you know, Mr. Carter," she said, as she tucked her shopping list in her pocket. "The chauffeur left when the others did, but of course the car is ours, and I can drive it."

Ned replied that it would take time to get her car out, while his was ready, unaware that she loathed driving and had meant to go in his car from the first. That she did not take the front seat, with him, was a blow to Ned. He had quite counted on this, but Mary had not forgotten the morning.

Revolving in her mind several things she would do and say to him if he reverted to this morning's manner, she forgot them all when Ned, in a casual manner, remarked that the country about them reminded him of the Marne valley. At once Mary saw him in a new light. If he was one of them, one of ours from over there, he had the key to her liking and respect.

It was then that Dorothy Selden, a little piqued because she had no one to play with for the time being, saw them. Dorothy recognized Mary. She had stopped at the Mannheim place, yesterday, and been introduced. Of course Miss Johnston might have known Ned, in the old days, but Dorothy did not think so. Moreover, Miss Johnston was riding in the rear of the car, like a passenger. What a splendid idea! If the grocer hired out his car, Dorothy would engage it. She would pretend her own had broken down, and rag Ned to her heart's content.

This thought put her in such excellent humor that she determined to call on Mrs. Johnston while the daughter was not at home.

Mary had been gone about five minutes when Mrs. Johnston awoke and read the note. She yawned, rose, put on a most becoming house gown and went down to the library, where she stared at the telephone fixedly. She placed her hand on the receiver, drew back, pulled a letter out of the desk drawer and read it, frowning.

It was a short, businesslike letter, stating that the directors of a certain company had decided to pass over the half-yearly dividend on the preferred and common stock, owing to adverse financial conditions. It seemed all very simple and plausible as they worded it, but it puckered the beautiful Mrs. Johnston's brows.

She drew the telephone nearer and called a New York number. It was the bank president who answered.

Her pleasantly worded sentence was as pleasantly but decidedly answered. After that the president evidently sought for further conversation with Mrs. Johnston, who murmured that of course they would love to see him, any Friday to Monday. If he would telephone, his train would be met.

When she rang off, Mrs. Johnston sprang to her feet and began walking up and down, thinking.

Dorothy came up the driveway. With her hand on the bell, Miss Selden paused. What, exactly, was she going to do in this house? Dorothy decided that it would depend on Mrs. Johnston.

There was something about a first glimpse of Mrs. Johnston that took one's breath away. She looked like a goddess come to earth, but on second look, she smiled, she was very human indeed. Dorothy was at first a little dazzled and awed. When Mrs. Johnston saw it was a girl, and probably someone who wanted to make friends with Mary, she became so friendly that Dorothy followed her into the library, completely under the woman's spell.

"So sorry, Miss Selden," the smooth voice was saying, "that my daughter is out, and out buying groceries, too. I've telephoned for servants, and the agency promises them down here tomorrow, but now we're quite on our own. Isn't it a nuisance?"

"Come home with me," urged Dorothy impulsively. "Mrs. Mannheim will be delighted to put you up until you get help."

"That's wonderfully sweet of you, but I've no intention of making my entrance on the scene in the role of a food pest. Mary and I get along splendidly by ourselves, and today we have Mrs.—Mrs. Pulsifer with us.

"Oh! You have one of them in the house!"

"Them?" questioned Mrs. Johnston.

"The Peace Valleyers. Oh, they're noted for their honesty. Wouldn't touch a thing. But mentally we find them so unresponsive."

"Dear me! They seem nice, well-meaning, honest people. My daughter is enthusiastic about them. Finds them wonderfully kind and helpful—especially the grocer."

If Dorothy Selden had not been thinking so hard about the impression she was making on Mrs. Johnston, she might have noticed that the sleepy brown eyes were keen. Mrs. Johnston intended to find out something when she put the apparently innocent question: "Is there more than one grocer here?"

Dorothy took this as the direct leading of providence. Here was an opening to the subject nearest her heart.

"There's only one. A man called Dabbs. He's quite all right, I think, in his place—as a grocer!"

Again, if Dorothy had been alert, she might have seen an odd flicker of the eyelids, a little quirk at the end of the pleasant mouth which asked gently: "Then what is it, Miss Selden, that is objectionable about him? There's something, I'm sure."

"His nephew." Dorothy's mind was made up. She would block Ned's game in this house.

Mrs. Johnston was relieved. Her lazy eyes bored through Dorothy's silly young girl armor. "The nephew! But where does he come in?"

"Well," hesitated Dorothy. Then an inspiration came to her. She would not tell Mrs. Johnston who Ned was. That would be playing Ned's game. Any ambitious mother would try to capture the son, in favor or out, of Loren Rangeley. "Well, as a matter of fact, I know something the rest of the community does not. The name he goes under here was not his name in New York. He is—well, under a cloud. I don't want to do the poor fellow harm, you know, but only to warn you."

"Awfully kind of you, I'm sure," murmured the astute Mrs. Johnston. "And now that you've done your rather disagreeable duty, tell me all about my pleasant neighbors, who's who, and just what this 'community' stands for."

Dorothy immediately forgot everything and launched into an animated and whole-souled description of the "community," its aims and aspirations.

Mrs. Johnston listened beautifully. Throughout the remainder of the call she appeared so interested in everything Dorothy had to say that it would have been difficult for Dorothy to believe the question uppermost in Mrs. Johnston's mind was:

"Why does the little blonde cat take all this trouble to run down a grocer's boy?"

CHAPTER V

Claude Dabbs could trace his American blood to some time before the Revolution. His forbears, the Durhams, the Parks, the Elliotts and the Dabbs, had probably called themselves English—when they were not Scots—and that fact accounted for much. Claude himself was essentially and uncompromisingly American, and his shop had that distinction.

While it was scrupulously clean, and the cleanliness was, in true American fashion, accepted and taken for granted, there was also what Ben Johnston styled "a sweet disorder" about the place, which accentuated the charm of it to the oldest customers and to C. M. Dabbs, himself.

Mary Johnston felt the charm as she entered the shop and was introduced by Ned to its owner. While her order was being put up, Mary went to the post office, promising Ned to return in time to be taken home with the order. Ned stood watching her for a moment, unconscious that Claude was observing him with interest.

When Ned turned and came into the shop, Claude was apparently absorbed in the order book and Ned went his rather uncertain way about, trying to assemble the White house order without help.

Ned, whistling softly to himself, thought that this was indeed Peace Valley. The drive down had been perfect. Since he had told Mary everything about himself—except a few essentials like his real name, who his father was and how he had met "Uncle Claude"—it might well seem so to him.

Then he caught sight of Mary Johnston coming back from the post office. He busied himself in getting the order box on the rear seat of the car, so that Mary would occupy the seat at his side.

Claude glanced at the girl and wondered of whom she faintly reminded him.

The car started toward Clover Hollow. Claude stared after it, and not until it was well out of sight did he wake up and heed the plaintive wail of Sim.

"What's the matter now, Sim?" Dabbs asked.

"You've let Ned off without the Mannheim order, and the other Clover Hollow stuff," replied Sim, dejectedly. "I kep' atrying to tell you."

"Don't worry. Throw it into the Ford and I'll tend to it soon as I come back from the barber's," and Claude took his way down to Ike Newman's.

Ike was shaving the customers in regular order, and with no more than the usual disregard of modern sanitary precautions. Claude always shaved himself, and did not patronize Ike, save as regards tobacco and cigars; but visited him often enough to be neighborly and to hear whatever gossip his own customers had missed.

Presently, just as Claude had hoped, the talk drifted around to "them Clover Hollowers." It was, just as Claude well knew, an inexhaustible subject. Dick Hanna had been up at the Mannheims, working on the community garden, and he had some country witticisms to offer at Dorothy Selden's expense. To Claude's astonishment, however, though Dick had been working there all week, he had evidently heard nothing about Ned's real name.

Claude breathed more freely, much relieved, yet wondered how long Miss Selden would keep this to herself. He decided that he would not speak to Ned until it became necessary, or Miss Selden made it public property.

Having learned what he came for, Claude was preparing to go when he heard the name "Johnston," spoken by some one in the group nearest the door.

Mary's suspicions regarding Ned are as nothing compared to what Dabbs' suspicions are going to be about Mrs. Johnston.

Straight Back Proof of General Fitness

A pretty good idea of a man's physical fitness can be got from the way in which he holds himself.

If his back is straight, with his shoulders well back, it is a hundred chances to one that he is as fit as he can be. In the same way, a person who makes it a rule always to carry himself erect is going to help very considerably to preserve good health.

The spinal column is one of the deciding factors of health. When it is straight, as it should be, all the cartilages between each section of the spine are in their natural state and retain their elasticity and suppleness.

Immediately a man lets himself get round-shouldered, some of the cartilages are compressed. They remain in this unnatural state, with the result that the spinal cord becomes pinched, as also do the numerous nerves passing from the spinal cord to the body.

The effect of this perpetual pinching is to deaden the nerves, and this in time sets up general ill health.

Fell for Three Stories

"Now it's jist like I was a-tellin' ye," said a grizzled old Irishman to a group of workmen. "Onct when my gang was helpin' put up a skyscraper, I fell fer three stories an' it didn't hurt me nary a bit."

Here the stranger who had paused to listen remonstrated.

"But how could a person fall for three stories and not be hurt?" he sternly inquired.

"Well," replied the veteran, a twinkle creeping into his eye, "you've already fallen for one, an' I guess fallin' for two more won't hurt ya."—Everybody's Magazine.

SOMETHING TO EAT

When you are tired of the ordinary ways of serving chicken prepare it as follows:

Chicken Warmein.—Take a nice fat fowl and clean well, then put to cook in plenty of water, for the broth is important. When well cooked, remove the fowl and take the meat from the bones; they may then be returned to the broth and simmered longer; strain and cook two bunches of celery, cut into small pieces until it is tender, then remove the celery and cook noodles in the broth. Serve the minced seasoned chicken in a nest of noodles and celery.

Queen of Doughnuts.—Beat together two eggs, add one and two-thirds cupfuls of sugar and beat until the sugar is dissolved, add one-half teaspoonful of salt, one and one-fourth cupfuls of sour milk, one-fourth cupful of sour cream, a teaspoonful each of soda and nutmeg and as little flour as possible to mix well. Set out to chill until very cold, then roll out a small portion at a time, adding as little flour as possible to handle. When cold shake in a paper bag with a tablespoonful of powdered sugar, a cake at a time.

Salmon With Riced Potato.—Heap heated salmon from the can, after removing skin and bones, in the center of a hot platter. Place in the oven in a dripping pan of water and riced, seasoned potatoes. Heap the riced potatoes around the fish and around the potato pour a rich white sauce. Serve very hot.

Buttermilk Biscuits.—Sift together a quart of flour and a teaspoonful of soda, add two tablespoonfuls of salt. Rub into the flour two tablespoonfuls of shortening and moisten with buttermilk. Mix and roll out an inch thick and cut into cakes with a large sized cutter. When ready to bake, prick with a fork and bake in a hot oven.

Seasonable Foods.

Orange juice is a mild tonic; if plenty of juice is taken it will prove most stimulating. Half of an orange or grapefruit eaten with a spoon is valuable as a daily diet. Eating it pulp and all, it is mixed with the saliva and better able to be digested than a hurried drink of juice. When giving it (the juice) to young babies it should be strained. Strained cooked tomato juice is also rich in vitamines and growth-producing substances.

Vanities.—Prepare a noodle mixture, using one egg and one-half teaspoonful of salt, add flour to make a stiff dough to roll out. Tear off small irregular pieces or cut into strips like crullers; now fry in deep fat before the mixture gets dry. Dust with powdered sugar and serve.

Mock Crab Sandwiches.—Cream two tablespoonfuls of butter, add one-fourth cupful of grated American cheese, add one teaspoonful of made mustard, the same of tarragon vinegar and anchovy paste, and one tablespoonful of finely chopped stuffed olives. Season with salt and pepper. Spread on white or rye bread and cut into small sandwiches the size of a silver dollar. Serve with an oyster cocktail.

Peanut Cookies.—Cream two tablespoonfuls of butter, add one-fourth of a cupful of sugar and one egg well beaten. Mix and sift one teaspoonful of baking powder with one-half cupful of flour, one-fourth teaspoonful of salt, add to the first mixture; then add two tablespoonfuls of milk, one-half cupful of chopped peanuts and one-half teaspoonful of lemon juice. Drop from a teaspoon on a buttered baking sheet one inch apart and place one-half of a peanut on each. Bake twelve to fifteen minutes in a hot oven. This recipe makes two dozen cookies. One pint of peanuts when shelled will yield one-half cupful when chopped.

Fried Egg and Onion Sandwiches.—Cut into thin slices one small onion, stir it into butter in a hot frying pan and cook until lightly brown. Remove to the side of the pan and drop in two or three eggs; fry until cooked to taste, season with salt and pepper and serve with the onion on buttered slices of bread.

Lesson for April 10

PETER'S LESSON IN TRUST

LESSON TEXT—Matt. 14:22-33.

GOLDEN TEXT—Be of good cheer. It is I; be not afraid.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Peter Trusts Jesus.

JUNIOR TOPIC—A Helping Savior.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Why Peter Failed.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Christ the Ever-Present Helper.

The storm-tossed disciples on the sea at night are an example of the struggling followers of the Lord in the darkness of the present age, as they are tossed by the tempests of the evil one.

I. The Disciples on the Storm-Tossed Sea (vv. 22-24).

1. They are sent across the sea by Christ (v. 22).

"Jesus constrained His disciples to get into a ship." Doubtless His reason for this was to keep them from entanglement in the movement of the people to make Him King, for in John 6:14, 15, it is shown that the people were so excited by the feeding of the 5,000 that they were about to make Him King by force.

2. Christ dismisses the multitudes (v. 22).

This may be taken as typical of His rejection by the nation whose rulers had already rejected Him.

3. Christ praying alone in the mountain (v. 23).

Temptation to earthly honor and power had come to Him, therefore He went to the Father in prayer for relief and strength. The need of prayer is greatest at such times. According to Mark 6:48 He saw from the mountain the disciples toiling on the storm-tossed sea.

II. Jesus Walking on the Sea (vv. 25-27).

1. It was in the fourth watch of the night (v. 25).

He did not come to them immediately, but waited till almost dawn. However, it was the darkest part of the night. Their physical danger was great, but no doubt their mental perplexity was greater. They knew that the Lord had sent them, but why should they be in such straits if He sent them? The stormy sea is no evidence that the disciple is not in the Lord's appointed way.

2. The disciples alarmed at His coming (v. 26).

At the sight of Him they cried out for fear. They said: "It is a spirit." It was the coming of their best friend to deliver them from danger.

3. Jesus' words of comfort and good cheer (v. 27).

In the midst of their distress they heard the Master's words, "Be of good cheer, it is I, be not afraid." This changed their fear to joy.

III. Peter Walking on the Sea (vv. 28, 29).

1. Peter's request.

As soon as Peter recognized the voice of Jesus he cried: "Bid me come to thee on the water" (v. 28).

2. Jesus' response (v. 29).

At the Lord's "come," Peter left the ship and walked on the water. While he kept his eyes on the Lord he walked on the waves. His faith linked him with the divine power and was thus upheld. Vital faith in Jesus Christ will enable the disciple to outride the storms of life.

IV. Peter Sinking (v. 30).

He took his eyes off the Lord and placed them upon the raging sea. This separated him from the divine power. We should learn to fix our eyes upon the Lord instead of upon our circumstances. Failur will surely follow if we give consideration to our circumstances and our own ability to master them.

V. Christ Rescuing Peter (v. 31).

When Peter began to sink he did the sensible thing. He cried out: "Lord, save me." Immediately Jesus stretched forth His hand and caught him. His salvation from death at the bottom of the sea was the result of the Lord taking hold of him. Jesus Christ in the incarnation was the divine hand reaching forth to rescue a sinking world. The significance of the expression "caught him" is made clear in Hebrews 2:16. It is there declared that Jesus took not upon Himself the nature of angels but took upon Himself the seed of Abraham. The same Greek word occurs in verse 31 of this lesson. We should understand from this that the eternal Son of God did not come in the form of a man in order to show man the way to God, but identified Himself with man through incorporation with Him. He came, not as an example, but as a Savior.

The eight room, two story farm house located on the farm belonging to C. L. Baird, a half mile north of the former Eckhart Carriage factory at Auburn, was burned to the foundation Sunday afternoon by fire which started shortly before 1 o'clock. The residence, valued at about $2,500 was insured in the DeKalb County Farmers' Mutual Insurance company for $1,500.

We are more than convinced that spring is near, because of the arrival of the Purple Martin. Tuesday morning when ye editor awoke the wife called attention to a pair of Martins sitting on the house ready to take possession. But the doors had been closed for the winter and they were calling for entrance. Last year we had a number of pairs and they surely are a fine bird to have about. This year we are expecting at least ten pair, providing we can keep the sparrows out of the houses, which is almost impossible,

EASTER

Easter comes at a glad season of the year. The festival itself, is both commemorative of the resurrection of Jesus Christ and as a memorial to the atonement wrought by the death of the Master upon the cross.

It is hailed with great acclaim in all the Christian churches of the world. In Greek and Latin and in the languages derived from them, Easter was known as "Padcha," "Pasch," "Pasqua," "Pascua," "Paques," etc., from the Chaldee word, "Pascha," the equivalent of the Hebrew "Pesach." The "Destroying Angel's" act is recalled by the last name in "passing over" the households of the Hebrews when he smote the Egyptians, as disclosed in the twelfth chapter of Exodus.

This year Easter will fall on April 17. The way by which Easter is determined is that of the first Sunday after the paschal full moon the fourteenth day of the calendar moon, or the full moon which happens upon or next after March 21; and if the full moon happens on Sunday, then Easter day is the first Sunday following.

As usual, St. Joe churches will observe Easter with elaborate programs. The Methodists will give a pageant at 5 o'clock, entitled, There is Hope of a Tree."

On Easter Evening at the M. P. Church the Choral Society will render its cantata, entitled, "Crowned Him Prince of Peace."

The Christian Church will hold its program on Sunday morning in connection with the Sunday School. No arrangements have been made at the Lutheran Church.

It is an event that the children and the grown-ups have learned to look forward to with much pleasureable anticipation; it is an event all should remember with some beautiful thought for the day.

HOME EDUCATION

The Child's First School is the Family"—Froebel.
Issued by the National Kindergarten Association

"FIRST THINGS FIRST"
Marion Brownfield

Who hasn't noticed the advertisement of a mother with a child snuggled in her arms, while she reads to it? It's an example, the advertisement suggests, of "putting first things first."

And who among us, amid the complexity of modern living, can be sure that she does it? It may seem impossible to stop and give little Fay the explanation for which she asks if we are to get the freshly laundered curtains up before night. We'd "like to," we say, but we're "busy," or "too tired" so she must "run away and play a while longer."

If this is our habitual mental attitude, then are we not putting "things" like draperies ahead of such important treasures as a little child's confidence, affection, and even character?

Some neighbors discussing a little five-year-old remarked, "Yes, she needs care—sweet little thing!—but her mother is always so very busy, how can she give it to her?"

"What does her mother have to do?" inquired a newcomer. "I've seen Mary Betty playing around the neighborhood, and she always looks well cared for and very nicely dressed."

"Yes, and her mother makes all of her clothes!" said one neighbor.

"And they are beautifully embroidered and laundered," explained another.

"She shampoos Mary Betty's hair, every day," continued the first, "and marcels her own, between visits to the hair-dresser's, Isn't she always dainty in her appearance?"

"Um," said the newcomer, 'I've noticed she changes her costume several times a day."

"Yes," chorused the admirers of Mary Betty's mother, "and she makes a lot of them herself. And then she is so dainty about the table. You know she embroiders all her luncheon sets, and she changes them every time there is the tiniest spot!"

"Quite fastidious, isn't she?" answered the newcomer.

"Well, she's bringing Mary Betty up to love beautiful things even if she doesn't have much time to spend with her. She works so hard!"

"Um," replied the newcomer thoughtfully, remembering the ready little fibs she'd heard Mary Betty tell that day. "It is a question of relative values, isn't it?—care and ornamentation of the outside or of the inside—which shall come first?"

Special offer to the readers of this paper

WE want you to know that each of the seven quality automobiles named below is a General Motors car. We want you to know how General Motors doubly guarantees these cars—how it is passing the savings of vast manufacturing operations (1,200,000 cars last year) on to you—in finely built engines, Fisher Bodies, Duco finish, quality materials in those vital points where quality counts most in comfort, safety, long life and high resale value.

Read about the General Motors line. "A car for every purse and purpose." See the wide choice of models—the wide range of prices. Decide which car interests you most; then clip and mail the coupon.

As a special offer, we will also send you a wonderfully interesting little book about the General Motors Proving Ground. It gives facts which you ought to have before you select any car. Fully illustrated. And its reading may save you hard cash. Act today.

CHEVROLET 7 models—$525 to $745

The quality car of the low-priced field. 3-speed transmission. Strong rear axle. Smooth dry-disc clutch. Over-head valve engine. Fisher Bodies. Duco finish. Alemite lubrication. Fully equipped. CHEVROLET TRUCK CHASSIS: ½-ton, $395; 1-ton, $495.

PONTIAC 5 models—$775 to $975

A low-priced "six" which is a quality product in appearance and construction. Has largest 6-cylinder engine in its price class. Beautiful, stylish lines. Fisher Bodies. Duco finish. All conveniences included. Value proved by unprecedented sale.

OLDSMOBILE 11 models—$875 to $1190

Gratifies your finer taste; satisfies every need. A truly fine car at moderate cost. Beautiful Fisher Bodies. Duco finish. Powerful 6-cylinder motor. Harmonic balancer. 4-wheel brakes. Many other new improvements. And a wide range of models to choose from.

OAKLAND 7 models—$1095 to $1295

Winning and holding goodwill everywhere because of its advanced engineering and precision construction. Fisher Bodies. Duco finish. Rubber silenced chassis. 4-wheel brakes. A "six" whose quality is doubly assured as a product of General Motors.

BUICK 18 models—$1195 to $1995

Everybody knows Buick's worth. General Motors emphasizes Buick's statement that its new models represent "The Greatest Buick Ever Built." Vibrationless beyond belief. Famous 6-cylinder valve-in-head engine. Bodies by Fisher. Duco finish. Many models.

LASALLE 6 models—$2495 to $2685

General Motors' latest contribution to the fine car field. This is the new and beautiful car designed and built by Cadillac as a companion car to Cadillac. Has V-type 8-cylinder engine. Fisher Bodies. Duco finish. Now on display.

CORN BORER JOTTINGS

The Right Attitude:—For the most part, farmers in the European Corn Borer infested area whose lot it is to do a job that will put the quietus on the western march of the pest, are showing a laudable spirit. As one farmer put it, "To be sure, I want to comply with the regulations but after all, the real thing is to do a thorough job of plowing so as to keep the corn borer population so low it will not be dangerous."

It is a Fact—A mammoth plowing demonstration was held at Coldwater, Michigan, some days ago. During the remarks of one of the speakers, he said, "We are finding that 99 per cent of the farmers want to do the job satisfactorily. Occasionally there is a cantankerous fellow who says he won't clean up. The regulations are designed to protect the 99 willing farmers from the one who by his carelessness puts their efforts at naught."

Plowing Revival.—The European corn borer is bringing about a revival of the art of plowing. Neighbors are vieing with each other to see which can do the best job of completely turning under the corn stubbles and trash. And it is being found that on many farms, careful adjustment of the plows and other tools already on the farm, will equip them to do an almost perfect job.

Wires on the Plow.—Recently the suggestion has been made that on sulky and gang plows, No. 9 wires be fastened somewhere in front in order to drag under the trash. Says R. H. Wileman, a Purdue Agriculture engineer in the six counties of the infested area, "The wire must be long enough so that the weight of the furrow slice makes tension on the wire. A short wire is little better than nothing. On most soils, there should be at least ten feet of wire streaming back from twelve to fourteen are better. Three wires are better than two on most jobs."

Where to Attach Them.—The same authority has tried attaching the wires in various places and he has found that the best job follows when a combination cutter and jointer is used with the three wires attached to the shank of the cutter. He advises that the cotter pin in the cutter axle be removed and the front end of the wire substituted for it. The second wire should be put on the cutter shank just under the beam of the plow and the third should also be put on the cutter shank, about midway between the other two wires. If the wires are long enongh, this will do a very good job of doubling under the trash.

Disking Before Plowing.—Several of those who have tried disking before plowing are not enthusiastic about it. They say that the disk cuts the corn stalks up into shorter lengths and that these twist and stick up edgewise making it even more difficult for the plow to do a satisfactory job.

New Machinery Not Necessary. "The rumor is afloat" says W. F. Burbank, county agent of Allen County, "that farmers cannot obtain the maximum allowance of $2.00 an acre to cover extra work unless they buy new machinery. This report is absolutely false. The job is to get the stalks under or burned, anything just so they will not harbor living borers. The inspectors will not ask what tools are used, they will look at the job." The man who can do clean plowing with the tools he already has should have little occasion for worry."

Higher Quality at Lower Prices Because of increasing Volume Production

January, 1925—There was introduced a new Chevrolet which scored a tremendous success. Among its many new features were: a new and rugged rear axle, an improved unit power plant, a new single-plate disc-clutch, a much stronger frame, semi-elliptic chrome vanadium steel springs, cowl and dash-lamps, and new Fisher bodies finished in Duco . . . and the price of the Coach was (f.o.b. Flint, Mich.) . . . $735

August, 1925—Chevrolet announced a new measure of value based on many new quality features—such as motor-driven Klaxon horn, improved sheet metal construction in the bodies, corrugated steering wheel with walnut finish, new headlamp rim construction and a more convenient gear-shift lever. Yet despite all the additions . . . the Coach was reduced to (f.o.b. Flint, Mich.) $695

January, 1926—Another spectacular increase in Chevrolet value—a model offering many mechanical improvements, such as smoother, quieter motor with three-point suspension, a silent V-belt generator drive, new oil pump, more efficient cooling, an air cleaner, larger brakes, etc. Not-with-standing these improvements . . the Coach was reduced to (f.o.b. Flint, Mich.) . . . $645

Sport Touring or Roadster $525
Coupe $625
4-Door Sedan $695
Sport Cabriolet $715
Landau $745
½ Ton Truck (Chassis only) $395
1 Ton Truck (Chassis only) $495
All Prices f.o.b. Flint, Michigan

Balloon tires standard equipment on all models.

In addition to these low prices Chevrolet's delivered prices include the lowest handling and financing charges available.

The Most Beautiful Coach In Chevrolet History!

Climaxing all of Chevrolet's previous value triumphs, the Chevrolet Coach of today is acclaimed as the outstanding closed car value of all time. Beautiful new Fisher bodies—paneled and beaded, rakishly low and finished in new colors of genuine Duco . . . full-crown, one-piece fenders . . . bullet-type headlamps . . . AC oil filter and AC air cleaner . . . finer performance, greater riding comfort and remarkable steering ease! A car so marvelously beautiful that you must see it to appreciate it—Yet the price has been reduced to . . . . $595 f. o. b. Flint, Mich.

Chains For Walking Plows.—In some cases, especially among stubble walking plows are doing a satisfactory job of getting the stalks down. On these, a chain with medium sized links seems to be the best method of dragging the stalks down. It is recommended that the chain be fastened to the front end of the beam and that a wire from the chain to the beam, some two and a half or three feet from the end will draw the loop in closer and do a better job of covering.

How Taylor Does It.—"Clifford Taylor of Lima township, LaGrange was doing a good job last week with a 16 inch bottom sulky plow drawn by three horses, according to H. S. Agster, LaGrange county agent. This plow was equipped with a jointer with a wire attached to it to rake the trash down. Taylor rides one iround, then walks one round and while walking he pulls out the projecting corn stalks from the two previous rounds and throws them into the furrow so they will be covered by the next furrow slice.

Fisher, extension agronomist for the U. S. Departmnt of Agriculture in the infested area, says he can see no good reason why farmers should reduce their acreage of corn provided the cleanup is thorough. He believes that out of the corn borer menace will come careful farming with more attention paid to livestock and alfalfa.

Early Musical Term

From the end of the Fourth to the Twelfth century neumes formed a system of notation, or pitch of notes. Since no stave existed, they were not notes as we now understand them. They were doubtless accent marks placed over syllables, and consisted of dots, dashes and other hierogiyphics. These were gradually developed into notes.

THE DRIED APPLE CHEST

(© by D. J. Walsh.)

ELIZA CURRY sat writing a letter. She had taken the materials from a quaint wooden box that sat before her upon the sitting-room table—sheets of faintly-tinted paper, a stick of blue wax, a quaint pen that, dipped in a glass of water, rewarded one with a flow of mauve ink. She wrote slowly in a fine slanting hand with little curlicues on her g's and p's and f's. And she wrote painfully, for never in all her life had she anything more unpleasant to do than writing this letter to her nephew's widow, Lila Canfield.

Eliza was old and tiny with white hair wound in a sleek little knot, a mouth like a wilted pink and dark eyes which had once held a "come-follow-me" look so irresistible that she had scarcely been able to count her beaus on the fingers of both hands. But she, as so often happens, had married the poor stick of the lot, Fergus Curry—because she loved him. And that love had weathered the vicissitudes of a difficult married experience which had terminated several years before in Fergus' death.

During the years of her widowhood Eliza had "managed." She had her tiny white house and a little money which she had made last until the present moment. Now that it was gone she must sell her house. Indeed, the bargain was all but made with possession to be given immediately. In a week, more or less, Eliza would be leaving the house to which she had come as Fergus' bride, the house where her three children had been born and had died one after the other, the house where Fergus had closed his wild, bright eyes, the house where she herself had hoped to die. Her nephew's widow, Lila Canfield, offered her a home and she was going there. She was writing to say that just as soon as she could get things in shape she would come.

The spring sun came in at the windows hotly, and as Eliza wrote she was conscious of a faint odor all through the house which came not from her pot-pourri jar, for that was closed; not from the geranium on the sill, not from the strong cupful of tea she had brewed for her lunch. She sniffed delicately. Ah! Now she knew. It was the smell of apples—dried apples, and it came from the old chest-of-drawers in the spare bedroom off the sitting room. The door was standing ajar.

Leaving her letter she followed that elusive lure. The old chest-of-drawers loomed enormous in the tiny room which she never used because she had had no company of late years. When Lila came to see her, as she did once a year, she stayed at the Jefferson house. So, because the room seemed good for no other purpose, Eliza kept there her best frock, her best hat, and in the chest of drawers she kept her sack of dried apples.

She opened a drawer and took out the sack and peeped into it. How Fergus had loved dried-apple pie with a bit of boiled cider and cinnamon! She had always had her sack of dried apples on that account. She did not care much for them herself, either in pie or sauce. There was quite a sackful. Of course she wouldn't need them now that she was going away. She wondered what she would do with them. Maybe Carrie Rush could use them. She had a big family and anything eatable always came in handy there.

And the chest-of-drawers—the dried-apple chest she called it in her own mind. She would have to sell it. Lila had given her permission to bring a few things, but nothing so cumbersome as this chest. It was not so easy to dispose of that. She sighed as she gazed at it. It was very old. It had been in Fergus' family, had belonged to his mother, she thought, or perhaps his grandmother. It was all handmade, a dark red wood, cherry, presumably. Well, she would leave the chest-of-drawers and take the dried apples over to Carrie Rush so she could get them ready for supper.

With a shawl around her and the sack in her hand she went across the street to the Rush house. Mrs. Rush met her hospitably.

"What's that? Dried apples? Well, I guess they will come in handy. I'll make me a dried apple cake after mother's recipe. Come in and sit down a minute. I want you to meet my company—Mrs. Wallace."

She drew Eliza into the living room where a small, keen-eyed woman sat by the register.

Eliza, glad of a little diversion sat down, and the three women began to talk.

"I feel dreadful about your going away, Mrs. Curry," kindly Mrs. Rush mourned. "I don't know what I shall do without you. You've been the best neighbor I ever had; I wish there was some way so you could stay."

Eliza smiled her pale, patient smile.

"So do I. But I shall be very cosy at my niece's."

"Of course. She will be good to you. No one could fail to be good to you. What are you going to do with your things? Take them with you?"

"I can't. I guess Mr. Pratt, the old furniture man, will take most everything—except, maybe, the dried-apple chest."

"The dried-apple chest!" exclaimed Mrs. Wallace.

Eliza explained.

"I'd like to see that chest," Mrs. Wallace said. "Maybe I could sell it for you. I know a woman that's quite a hand for old furniture. She might give you a good price for it."

In the little spare bedroom where the chest loomed so hugely Eliza raised the shade of the one window.

"I suppose maybe it's one hundred fifty years old," she remarked.

"It's a fine old piece," Mrs. Wallace said. "Four drawers and three across the top. And the whole front is solid mahogany. I fancy Mrs. Aldrich would give you fifty dollars for this, anyway."

Eliza drew a long breath. Fifty dollars was a lot of money, and yet for her the old dried-apple chest had a value that could not be expressed in terms of dollars.

Then suddenly Mrs. Wallace went down on her knees and began hunting for something at the bottom of the chest.

"I want a knife or something to pry with," she said.

Eliza brought the knife. Mrs. Wallace inserted the blade in a crack which the varnish almost filled. She worked the knife back and forth, she gave a tug and out flew a drawer that Eliza, perhaps Fergus himself, had never known was there.

"A secret drawer!" cried Mrs. Wallace. "And look here!"

She took out a buckskin pouch which weighed heavily.

Open it!" she commanded. But she had to cut the thong with the knife. Out of the pouch poured gold pieces and greenbacks. "Somebody's treasure," she commented.

Eliza stared at the gold in amazement.

"It is Fergus' uncle's money!" she said. "The family always wondered what he did with it. He didn't have a cent when he died. The chest was in his room."

And still she stared, scarcely comprehending the wealth that had so miraculously become hers.

It was not until the next day that she remembered her unfinished letter to Lila. The money was in the bank to her credit. She was again independent of reluctantly charitable relatives.

A moment she contemplated the unfinished page. "Need" was the last word she had written when the fragrance of dried apples started her on her great adventure. Why, she was beyond need now! With a smile she tore the letter to bits, and sat down to write another one.

Mint Director Given Credit Not Deserved

In a little village in the Asturias mountains of Spain is an orphanage managed by an old priest, who, finding it difficult to provide food for all the young mouths, spent 100 pesetas ($18), an enormous sum for him, on the twentieth of a ticket in the national lottery.

Then he wrote to the director of the mint in Madrid, setting forth the situation of his charges, and ending ingenuously as follows:

"It would be very kind of you if you would arrange that my number (17229) should win a prize. God will reward you."

The angry director thought of having the too naive priest arrested.

As it happened, No. 17229 won the first prize, and the priest for his twentieth share received 750,000 pesetas ($122,000).

In blissful ignorance of the fact that he had only just escaped being imprisoned for having dared to suppose that the high official would give human guidance to the uncertain steps of Fate, he wrote to the director:

"You are our great benefactor. Your name shall be engraved in letters of gold in our chapel and all my orphans shall learn to bless you. Thanks to you, they will no longer suffer cold and hunger."

This communication was received with even greater anger than the first, but the priest in his orphanage knows nothing except that his orphans are better cared for.—London Tit-Bits.

Hog Reeve

"You ought to be a hog reeve," said one politician to another. Some folks wondered what he meant. A reeve, in old New England, was a bailiff. A hog reeve was bailiff to the pigs. That is, he rounded them up, if they strayed into the streets, and impounded them. Nobody hereabouts holds the position today. Yet if the government should re-establish the post, there would doubtless be applicants for it.

Likewise might it be the post of "woodward." Some may guess that a "woodward" was a warden who had charge of the town woodlots. "Culler of staves" was another post in the ancient days. Not one in a thousand will guess it. This official inspected the staves that were cut for barrels. I suspect that almost everybody knows about the tything man.—Salem News.

In the Fast Wagon

Mrs. Ray Foncannon, wife of the sheriff of Vigo county, frequently takes her daughter to school in the family sedan. On the way back to town she invites all the small children she passes to ride to their schoolhouses.

The other day she picked up a little chap about seven years old. When she let him out at his building some of the children told him that he had ridden in the sheriff's car. His eyes grew big; he began to tremble. "Oh, don't tell the teacher they brought me to school in the paddy wagon," he begged. "Or my mother, either." — Indianapolis News.

NO DESSERT WILL BEAT GOOD APPLE PIE

Every Housekeeper Prides Herself on Her Pies.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

"Can she bake an apple pie, Billy boy, Billy boy?" So runs the song the lady in the picture is doubtless humming as she rolls out her dough. If she knows what a good pie ought to be like, she will probably make a good pie. It doesn't particularly matter whether or not she puts in cinnamon or nutmeg. And while most people prefer, as this homemaker seems to, the "covered" type of apple pie, a good apple pie can also be made "uncovered" with pastry strips across the top. Apple pie is a wholesome dessert because it preserves a satisfactory balance between the fruit and the pastry.

Main Pie-Making Points.

The main points are to make good pie paste, to use a suitable kind of apple, and to manage the oven properly. The crust should be tender, thin, flaky, not too rich, and delicately brown. The apples should be of the fairly tart, juicy, quick-cooking varieties, put in the pie uncooked, seasoned with butter, sugar and a very moderate amount of spice, usually cinnamon. There should be plenty of apples, too, but the pie should not be so full that the juice runs out. The undercrust in a leaky pie is apt to be tough and soggy. The baking should be done in a quick oven. If possible, serve pie a little warm.

The kind of fat used is somewhat a matter of personal taste. Some people like lard best; some prefer one of the hardened vegetable fats, and still others use part butter and part lard or other fat. Any fat used should be sweet flavored and combine properly with the flour to make a flaky crust. Soft wheat flour is the best kind for pastry. The gluten that makes a good bread flour is a disadvantage in making pie crust.

Pie Crust Recipe.

You doubtless have your own preferred pie crust recipe. The bureau of home economics gives the following ingredients and directions for one two-crust pie:

About 2¼ tablespoonfuls water
1⅛ cupfuls sifted soft-wheat flour
5⅓ to 7 tablespoonfuls fat
1 teaspoonful salt

Combine the fat and the flour. Some cooks recommend cutting the fat into the flour with knives, a pastry fork or a biscuit cutter, so the ingredients won't be warmed or handled too much, but the tips of the fingers may be used if the work is done quickly. Add the water slowly and use no more than is absolutely necessary. Roll out the dough very lightly. The temperature of the oven should be high to start with, and then be lowered rapidly after eight or ten minutes, so the filling may cook through without overcooking the crust.

For the filling you will need from four to six apples, three-fourths cupful of sugar, one-fourth teaspoonful salt, one-eighth teaspoonful cinnamon. Pack the apples into the crust carefully, so that the cover will fit evenly. They should be in thin slices after being pared and quartered. Sometimes they are cut in rings after coring and paring. Sprinkle them with sugar, salt and spice mixed together. Place the upper crust on the pie. Bake for about thirty minutes.

SAVE FOR VACATION IS EXCELLENT PLAN

Holiday Should Be Planned and Saved For.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Are you going to have a vacation of some sort this year? You need a change, some fun, some rest, something new to think about, whether you happen to be a high school student, a busy mother, or the father of a family. Every one needs a holiday occasionally. Better work as well as better health is a result of even a brief change.

Don't say you haven't time, or that you can't be spared. That ancient superstition has been long since exploded by that busiest of indispensable persons, the farmer's wife. Every summer hundreds of farm women now manage to get to mothers' camps for a complete change for a few days, returning to their families refreshed in mind and spirit, full of new ideas and happy recollections.

Don't say you can't afford a vacation. There are all sorts of vacations to be chosen—short ones, long ones, inexpensive ones, elaborate ones. If you can't take a train trip, how about the family car? If you can't go to a hotel, try camping. Decide about what you could afford—if you could put aside a little bit every week from now until midsummer. A vacation doesn't usually just happen. It has to be planned for and saved for. The sooner you begin to get ready for it, the more you have in reserve to spend on pleasant things. There are now only 14 or 15 weeks of spring and early summer left to devote to saving for this year's vacation. Next year's fund can be started as soon as this one is over. That's the better plan, but if you haven't given the matter much thought before, do the best you can from now on.

Suppose, for example, you have your eye on a two weeks' vacation in late August, to cost about $40—although lots of people would manage to have a fine time for a good deal less money. We'll suppose you need railroad fare as well as board money. Count up the intervening time by weeks. Three dollars a week, set aside regularly for these 14 or 15 weeks will assure you the amount necessary. It sounds easy, doesn't it?

The next point is, of course, can you save that much? A few cents here and there—a little self-denial in small ways—perhaps going without something you would otherwise like to have—and the sum begins to grow. You have to make a choice almost daily. "Shall I have a soda, or put that much aside toward my weekly savings? Do I need new shoes or shall I wear the old ones a little longer and be sure of my holiday?" If you are a homemaker you may be asking yourself: "Could I make some of the children's clothes and save a few dollars?" Or, "Are there ways in which I can buy the necessary supplies any cheaper?" Perhaps you could find ways to earn a bit here and there, too, to add to your funds, if you see no way to subtract anything from what you already have.

If you are the head of the family you will have to include the entire family in your plans, fix on a larger sum, and get everybody to co-operate. It works out the same way as for an individual. If you have never lived by a budget, don't wait until the first of January to make one. You can begin any time. The United States Department of Agriculture has a publication that will tell you how to go about making a budget that will help you spread your income over a vacation and other needed items.

Different Methods of Cooking Eggs for Table

The temperature of cooking affects markedly the consistency of eggs. Lower temperatures coagulate the white into a tender, jelly-like mass and allow the yolk to remain soft. Eggs so cooked are considered to be more easily digested than those toughened and hardened at higher temperatures, and for this reason coddling, rather than boiling, is recommended as a way of cooking eggs for children and persons of delicate digestion. Different methods of handling, can also greatly change the consistency and appearance of egg dishes. Stirring while cooking, for example, makes scrambled eggs, and beating air in before cooking, the fluffy omelet. In souffles, cakes and other baked products eggs act as binders and serve as a means of incorporating air for leavening. In sauce, cream fillings, custards, candies and icings eggs thicken the mixture and give smoothness of texture. In salad dressings they are the common emulsifying agent. Their adaptability to a wide variety of uses, therefore, as well as their high nutritive value, make eggs one of the most popular foods the world over.

Pan Broiling a Steak

In pan broiling a steak, the pan is heated very hot and is greased over lightly by wiping with a piece of suet so that the meat will not stick. Using a large amount of grease toughens the outside of the steak and does not increase the juiciness of the inside, says the United States Department of Agriculture. The steak is placed in the hot pan and seared first on one side, and then on the other quickly. After the steak is seared, the heat is reduced and the broiling proceeds more slowly. The meat must be turned frequently to prevent burning. Care should be taken not to pierce the crust which has formed lest the juice leak out. This method of cooking is used with juicy, tender, choice cuts.

Just a Little Smile

REAL SPEED

Pat, employed in a local quarry, one day dropped a stick of dynamite and forthwith disappeared into the clouds with several tons of debris. The catastrophe was witnessed by Mike, who, somewhat later was approached by the quarry owner.

"Where's Pat?" asked the latter.

"Gone," replied Mike.

"And when will he be back?"

"Well," said Mike, "if he comes back as fast as he went—bedad, he'll be back yisterday!"

SPRING COATS OF DISTINCTION; NOW COMES THE EASTER BONNET

SIMPLICITY is the basis of distinction for the better spring wrap. It is, however, a simplicity arrived at through exceedingly complex seamings, tuckings and other deft and subtle fabric manipulation, which do not destroy the straightline silhouette.

Not only do the more exclusive coat modes accent refinement of style treatment, but the materials themselves are exquisitely choice, such as cashmeres, repps, wool crepes, kasha cloth and quality-kind twills.

Trimmed With Ombre Fur.

Subtle coloring is a third element which enters into the creation of the patrician coat for spring. Bisque, light tones of beige, fawn shades and some soft lovely grays, also some few pastel tones express the trend.

Crowning glory of all is the supple-as-fabric fur which collars the coats—the kind that caresses the throat and protects, yet is never cumbersome. These furs so harmonize with the tone of the fabrics they trim each coat resolves itself into an entrancing color symphony, which is pleasing, indeed.

Ombre fur is the supreme choice of the moment. There is much enthusiasm for twin beaver just now. This fur is as flexible as cloth and it blends in with the fabric of the coat either to a beige or gray, alternating with stripes of white. Note the shawl-collar on the coat in the picture, which is made of the new and attractive twin beaver. A shawl-collar as a spring item is an innovation made possible and feasible by the infinitely light weight of the new furs.

In some instances the new zephyr-weight furs bind the coat edges all around to about two inches depth. Prevailing "spring furs" include shaved lamb, ombre lapin, squirrel, twin beaver, ponyskin and calfskin. These are ingeniously worked into the very making of the coat in the way of inserts, and for collars, including shawl, military and also long tuxedo revers, also for pockets.

That the Easter bonnet will be largely a matter of black-and-white, as so as to enter into the scheme of the mode, is a foregone conclusion. The new hats give every evidence that milliners are making it a point to feature stunning black-and-white headwear.

The collection of smart spring millinery in this group presents a varied and fascinating black-and-white program. A notable form of trimming this season is all-over appliqué. This idea is handsomely demonstrated in the first hat which shows white satin scroll-like motifs on a cunning black felt shape.

Black velvet, in graceful leaves and figures, is applied all over a white bangkok for the next hat which bears the message of wider brims. It is said that black on white will be featured throughout millinery for summer. One charming effect promised is thin black lace stretched over a foundation of white straw.

Paris sends over many hats with "a touch" of black velvet. Note the charming model at the top to the right in the picture, for the crown of which velvet is the chosen medium. Black embroidery on white crepe for the wide headbands plays a decorative part in keeping with the black-and-white vogue.

Superbly tailored is the model in the lower left corner. This creation is of black peddling braid and white kid stitched in black and ornamented with ivory pins.

Group of Easter Hats.

Yes, larger brims are coming in and the hat of black milan, black moire silk, piped and faced with white shown in the group is a forerunner of the vogue which is "on the way."

DAIRY

COW'S VALUE TOLD BY PRODUCTION

In the selection of dairy cows, there are two methods which may be used. By far the best indication of a dairy cow's ability for production, is her record of production as secured by weighing the milk and testing systematically for its butterfat content by the Babcock test. Many cows have been consistently tested either by the official test or by cow testing association testers. The time is coming when the majority of the more desirable class of cattle will be so tested. As the cow testing associations become more popular and their work fully appreciated more cows will be under such supervision.

At the present time there are a large number of cattle which have not been tested or records kept upon their production. Such cattle must then be selected upon their form and conformation. Experience has taught the breeders of dairy cattle that there is a certain form which is associated with economic milk production.

Eckles gives the three following points as those which should be particularly emphasized in picking a dairy cow:

1. The extreme angular form, carrying no surplus flesh, but showing evidence of liberal feeding by a vigorous physical condition.

2. The extraordinary development of the udder and milk veins.

3. The marked development of the barrel in proportion to the size of the animal.—B. W. Fairbanks, Animal Husbandry Department, Colorado Agricultural College.

Cow Must Produce Much Milk to Pay Expenses

Just to pay expenses under ordinary conditions, a cow must produce 4,000 pounds of 4 per cent milk, according to Prof. W. J. Fraser, dairy farming specialist of the college of agriculture, University of Illinois. With cows that produce more than this amount the profit increases rapidly as their production rises above this point. The reason for this is that going up the scale of production from low to high producing cows, the value of the product increases three times as fast as the cost of keep, according to Professor Fraser.

"This is because the overhead or maintenance ration and cost of housing is so great for all cows, and it does not increase anything like as rapidly as does the production of milk per cow. This lies at the very foundation of successful farming.

"In the early days of self-sufficing farming, the low producing cow was really of great service in furnishing food for the family. Under the present conditions of business farming, the cow that does not produce enough milk to pay expenses is an absolute hindrance and detriment to the dairy farmer.

"Profit in milk production arises only from the difference between what it costs to produce the milk and the price received from it. The commercial dairyman, then, must keep cows which are good enough to make a profit if he is going to continue in the business. They must make a large profit if he is to be a really successful dairy farmer. The surest way to weed out the "boarders" is to keep records on them in a herd improvement, or cow testing association."

Cows Dislike Ice Water for Drinking Purposes

The question of warm drinking water for dairy cows is a much discussed one. When the water is icy cold, cows will not consume as large amounts as they would otherwise. This should not be taken to mean, however, that the water should be warm. Human beings do not like to drink warm water any more than they like extremely cold water. It is the same with dairy cows. Consequently the water should be heated just enough to remove the icy chill. Cows are then induced to drink more water, which is absolutely necessary for high milk production.—Extension Service, Colorado Agricultural College.

Dairy Facts

Ice water cuts down the milk flow.

Fall freshened cows give more and cheaper milk and butterfat.

Keep boarder cows—until you discover that they are boarders.

Proper feeding is necessary if good cows are to make the profit of which they are capable.

The cow testing association not only builds up the production capacity of the herd, but it increases values where sales are to be made.

Drinking cups in the dairy barn are a good investment. Cows in milk need an abundance of water and opportunity to drink after each feed.

Mineral for cows? Yes, just as with hogs, if the cows are heavy milkers. Such animals need more lime and phosphorus than they can get from hay and grain.

Their Yearns

"It's powerful queer!" in the crossroads store announced Gap Johnson of Rumpus Ridge.

"What's so queer?" questioned the proprietor of the emporium.

"It's queer, what sorts of dad-blamed ambitions boys have! My boy, Blister, wanted to grow up, marry the school ma'am and whip a member of the legislater. Greedy always hoped to get enough to eat. Banty wanted to drag a dead skunk into church some Sunday. Bearcat's ambition was to become a movie actor like Lon Chaney, and Rowdy had hopes of killing a full-grown wild goose when he got big enough."—Kansas City Star.

Death Faster Than Airplane

By airplane and train Ronald Saltmarch made the three weeks' journey from Teheran, Persia, to Staines, England, in nine days, only to find that death had won the race to his mother's bedside. Saltmarch was traveling for a London firm, who intercepted the wireless regarding his mother's condition, and cabled him. He flew over the mountains near the Caspian sea to Baku, and from there took a train to Moscow. After being delayed and humiliated by Russians he reached Poland and arrived home by way of Germany.—Philadelphia Inquirer.

Artichoke Sugar

Levulose, called the finest of all sugars, is prophesied from artichokes at 2 cents a pound within five years, as the result of further experiments by the United States bureau of standards. Crystallization of the levulose from a water solution marks the turning point of the bureau's experiments, for in all previous work treatment with alcohol was necessary. The new development, says Popular Science Monthly, may place artichoke sugar on the same footing with cane or beet sugar as a commercial process.

DR. W. B. CALDWELL AT THE AGE OF 83

Old Folks Need a Mild Laxative —Not a "Physic"

Most men and women past fifty must give to the bowels some occasional help, else they suffer from constipation. One might as well refuse to aid weak eyes with glasses as to neglect a gentle aid to weak bowels.

Is your present laxative, in whatever form, promoting natural bowel "regularity"—or must you purge and "physic" every day or two to avoid sick headache, dizziness, biliousness, colds, or sour, gassy stomach?

Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin helps to establish natural, regular bowel movement even for those chronically constipated. It never gripes, sickens or upsets the system. Besides, it is absolutely harmless and pleasant to take.

Buy a large 60-cent bottle at any store that sells medicine or write "Syrup Pepsin," Monticello, Illinois, for a FREE SAMPLE BOTTLE and just see for yourself.

Evansville Engineer Rescued by Tanlac

Victim of Liver Trouble, Nervous Indigestion, Loss of Sleep, Rheumatism and Run-down Condition, Finds Long-sought Relief

Michael Heim, 200 Oakley Street, Evansville, Indiana, an engineer, says: "Telegraphic rheumatism, bad stomach and liver trouble had me in terrible shape.

"My strength had vanished. When I walked dizzy spells made me reel. And my stomach was so upset that I couldn't eat without bloating up and suffering from tormenting indigestion. Rheumatic pains in arms and legs made it difficult for me to get about. I had almost given up hope of ever recovering my lost health and strength when I took the advice of a friend and began taking Tanlac. I recommend it to all who are ailing.

"This tonic worked wonders with me. Pain vanished with rheumatism. Quickly my old strength returned. I began to have a great appetite and ate everything without a sign of pain. Tanlac certainly put me on my feet, made me stronger and gave me better health that I have had in years."

Tanlac usually banishes pain, conquers ailments and builds up strength in famished bodies. It relieves the system of poison caused by constipation and sluggish liver. It is Nature's own remedy made from roots, barks and herbs according to the famous Tanlac formula.

Banish sickness from your life and enjoy the benefits of strength and golden health. Begin taking Tanlac. The first bottle brings results that will surprise you. Ask your druggist for Tanlac—today! Over 40 million bottles sold.

THE INTENSE STORY OF THE SAVIOUR OF MANKIND

A beautifully artistic presentation of the Freiburg Passion Play depictng the Life of Christ, is the unusual offering at the Shrine Auditorium, Fort Wayne, for four days starting on Saturday of this week with daily matinees. This picture will play a limited engagement and will be shown twice daily.

This presentation is among the early public showings of the picture in America. It has been given release in Europe sufficiently long to develope into an outstanding success. The players are reared and trained for their roles and live the parts.

Not one is a professional actor. They are simple residents of the community of Freiburg, simple country folk engaged in clock-making, wood-carving, toy-making and similar pursuits, and who engage in the periodical presentations of the Passion Play as a devotional duty.

The Freiburg Passion Play, dating back through misty and forgotten centuries, is the connecting link between the dark ages and the present. As early as the year 1264, Freiburg was selected as the spot in which to produce the Passion Play.

It was not until thirty-five years later that the Oberammergau Passion Play, now an institution of international celebrity, came into existance as a means of expressing thanks for having been spared annihilation in the epidemic that swept over Europe at that time.

Neither Freiburg nor Oberammergau, fifty miles distant, have hitherto permitted a motion picture to be made of their sacred drama. The picture was made to render possible the perpetuation of their institution for public portrayals of the sublime drama of all the ages as foretold in Scripture.

ONION GROWERS OF CALIFORNIA SUPPORT HOGG'S MEASURE FOR TARIFF INCREASE

(Special to The St. Joe News)

Fort Wayne, Ind., April 5, 1927. —Congressman David Hogg today received statistics compiled by the Onion Growers of California, showing the necessity of an increase of the tariff on onions.

During the last session of Congress Mr. Hogg introduced a bill to increase the tariff on onions from one to two cents per pound. Many Congressmen at that time expressed their approval and support of the measure. The Ways and Means Committee gave no consideration to any tariff changes and the measure did not come before the House of action.

"California produces a considerable amount of onions," says the introduciton of the report to Mr. Hogg, "and we are affected by the large amount of cheaply produced foreign onions which are constantly being brought to this country in ever increasing numbers. We call your attention to the fact that on the 14th day of March there were ninety-one car-loads of Egyptian onions afloat from the port of Alexandria to the United States, which is an increase of more than fifty per cent over last year. We heartily endorse your measure for a tariff increase on onions and we believe that this measure will save the onion industry from cheap foreign competition."

C. M. T. C. QUOTA IS 12 FOR THE COUNTY

Winthrop W. Ketcham, of Auburn, DeKalb County Chairman for the Citizen's Military Training Camps announces that the campaign for enrollment of applicants is now on, and those desiring to go to the camp this summer should see Mr. Ketcham at once and make application, as the quota for DeKalb county is limited te twelve.

The first camp will open at Fort Benjamin Harrison, Indianapolis, on June 20th and will continue until July 19th. Boys who will become 17 years old any time during the year 1927 and who are not more than 24 years of age may take the training. They must also be in good physical condition as shown by a physical examination.

Expenses of maintaining the C. M. T. C. are paid by the Federal Government under provisions of the National Defense Act. This includes free transporting from their home and return as well as food, quarters and clothing at the camp. It is pointed out that the C. M. T. C. offers to every young man an excellent vacation at no expense and under the most healthful conditions. The camp provides training in citizenship, and other educational subjects as well as in sports and military tactics.

There's thirty rousing days arranged for the boys, each crammed full of hiking, base ball and drilling; of basket ball, football, shooting and tennis; of boxing, entertainments and movies; of track and field sorts, sham battles and week-end trips. See Mr. Ketcham and aply now, tomorrow may be too late.

HOW HE TOOK A RADIO RECIPE

The radio, when accustomed to it, is a very handy piece of furniture about the home. Last week when expecting company from Auburn, Mrs. Loretta Hull had her husband to tune in on a certain broadcasting station and copy off a recipe that was to be given by a culinary expert. He tried to do so, but another station which was broadcasting physical culture exercises at the same time interferred considerable. This is what he took down.

Hands on hips, place on cup of flour on the shoulders. Raise knees and depress toes and mix thoroughly in ½ cup of milk. Repeat six times. Inhale quickly ½ teaspoonful of baking powder. Lower the legs and mash two hard boiled eggs in a sieve. Exhale, breathe naturally and sift in a bowl. Attention! Lie flat on the floor and roll the white of an egg backward and forward until it comes to a boil. In ten minutes remove from fire and rub smartly with rough towel. Breathe naturally. Sprinkle with pepper. Dress in warm flannel and serve with soup.

CAN YOU IMAGINE AN AERIAL LOCOMOTIVE?

Observers of German aviation development are picturing a time when the "air train" will be a fact. The locomitive will be a powerful airplane and the "Pullmans" a row of gliders attached to the locomotive, with considerable space between the units.

As the airport of each town is approached the glider for that destination will be released from the end of the string and will settle gracefully down with its special pilot and pasengers. The possibility of such a development has worked out from the recent experiment at the Karisruhe flying harbor when a glider was hitched to an airplane by a wire cable. It took the air as a "tow" and was propelled to a considerable height. The glider's pilot then released his machine and guided it back to a landing.

GARDEN TIME

Poets and philosophers tell of the satisfaction obtained from cultivation of flower and vegetabler gadens, but the practice is not as general as could be wished. In many places there is much less gardening than there was some years ago. People have too many things they want to do with their spare time.

In many cities and towns, however, the garden movement has has been pushed as a community proposition. People have been urged, in a systematic way, to decorate their grounds with handsome shrubbery and flowers, and some of these communities have developed an amazing amount of this beautification.

Such towns become noted, and every minute put in on those flower beds is no doubt paid for in the higher value of real estate that is established in such a town.

Home pride is the motive that can best be relied upon to promote the gardening movment. People will usually do what their neighbors do. If you persuade one or two influential families on a street to spend a little more time and money beautifying their places this season, the majority of their neighbors would, within a year or two, fall into line and do the same thing.

As respects to vegetables, the advantage of the back yard ought to be obvious in these times of high prices. The children of the modern community do not have enough share in the home tasks, and it would do them good to have some regular labors in a garden and they could well do a good deal of its work. But the old folks cannot expect them thus to labor unless they also are willing to do some stunts with the spade and hoe.

MONEY THAT WORKS

A MAN visited our bank a few weeks ago who had just sold some property.

HE WAS not ready to invest the money again for a few months but he did not want the money to 'loaf' and earn nothing for him during that time.

SO HE wanted to know what he could do with the money to make it earn some profit and be available in case he needed it.

OF COURSE we suggested a Certificate of Deposit. You can have a "C. of D." for any amount and continue it as long as you wish. It pays a nice profit, too.

THERE IS no better plan for your money that is not otherwise employed. Let us tell you more about this plan.

GLADYS DERTHICK SECURES DIVORCE

A judgment was entered in the DeKalb circuit court Thursday afternoon awarding a divorce to Gladys Derthick from Sherman Derthick.

Mrs. Derthick was also given the custody of the two children, Phyllis, 14, and Lolene, 12, and their father was ordered to contribute $6 a week towards their suport. He also was directed to pay $15 additional fee for his wife's attorney, Howard S. Grimm. He had previously paid $35 for the attorney. His counsel was C. E. McClintock.

The trial of the divorce case was held last October and since had been under advisement. Mrs. Derthick charged that her husband, who lives in Stafford township, drank to excess, struck her until her face was black and blue and that he hit her with a blacksnake whip.

Mrs. Derthick served six months in the woman's prison a few years ago for child neglect and her husband charged in the divorce trial that she had since her release been attending dances and neglecting the children. She denied she neglected the children and was supported by Miss Nora Brown of Butler, county probation officer.

Mrs. Derthick and her daughters have been living at Butler since the separation from Derthick.

POULTRY MEETING AT HIGH SCHOOL

All people interested in raising baby chicks are urged to attend the talk to be given before the St. Joe Valley Bank Poultry Club, by Mr. N. A. Reganall of the Hicksville Hatchery, Thursday evening, April 14th at the High School building. Mr. Reganall has consented to talk before the members of the club and to also bring another experienced poultryman with him.

Although this meeting is for the purpose of giving the poultry members instructions in the first care of their baby chicks everyone who is having brooding problems is invited to attend.

Mr. Reganall's experience has been more along the line of feeding and brooding rather than diseases, but bring your questions and we can discuss them together.

It is hoped that the parents of the club members can be present.

EASTER SERVICES

Easter services in St. Joe are scheduled as follows:

service of Sunday School.

M. P. service at 5:00 o'clock, a pageant entitled, "There is Hope of a Tree."

At 8:00 the Choral Society will render its cantata, "Crown Him the Prince of Peace," at the M. P. Church.

The public is invited to attend these services.

ST. JOE YOUNG COUPLE WEDS

Last Friday a marriage license was issued to Wesley Harcourt Miser, 20, postal clerk, and Ima L. Bray, 25, school teacher, and both of these young people are citizens of St. Joe.

Saturday morning they drove to Monrovia, Indiana, south of Indianapolis, to a uncle of the bride, Rev. John Compton, where the ceremony was performed. From here they came back to Indianapolis and were guests of Charles L. Bray until evening, when they left for St. Joe, arriving here Sunday morning about 1:30.

They went to their newly furnished home in the west end of town, occupying the H. S. Bowman bungalow.

For there years the bride has taught school in St. Joe and during this time she has made scores of friends outside of her school associates, all of whom are now busy extending congratulations.

The groom is a son of Mr. and Mrs. Ed Miser and for the past two years has acted as postal clerk in the postoffice and also is serving his aprenticeship as funeral director under E. R. Kinsey, until in September, when he will have completed this part of his work other than six weeks in school to complete the requirements so that he can hold an embalmer's license.

Likewise, Harcourt's friends are many and all are extending best wishes.

CHASTISING OF PUPIL CAUSES HIS ARREST

Wm. N. Lake, a Spencerville school teacher, appeared in the DeKalb circuit court Saturday morning to answer a charge of assault and battery.

The affidavit was signed by Dr. Benj. O. Shook, who accuses the defendant of striking and beating his son, Richard, a pupil in the eighth grade.

Mr. Lake, by his attorneys, Atkinson & Husselman, entered a plea of not guilty and was released under $200 bond, furnished by his father, Wm. O. Lake. Judge Endicott stated that he would set the case for trial after the close of school.

The allegded offense was commited April 1. The defendant admits chastising the boy, but denies that his punishment was greater than justified.—Star.

HOME-COMING MEETING FRIDAY EVENING

All persons interested in making plans for the Annual Home-Coming event, will meet at the Town Hall, Friday evening at 6:30. Come prepared to help make larger plans for 1927.

OBITUARY

Miranda R. Carnahan, daughter of Bailey D. and Elizabeth Carnahan, was born in Ashland, Ashland Co., Ohio, January 6, 1840, and departed this life April 5, 1927. Age 87 years, 2 months and 29 days.

On December 24, 1865 she was united in marriage to James Maurer, who preceded her to the land beyond September 24, 1886. To this union was born nine children, seven sons and two daughters. All of whom are living but one son, Milton, who departed this life December 10, 1889. The children are Mrs. Bracy Meore, of East LeRoy, Mich.; Scott, at home; Mrs. Maude Braithwait of Fort Wayne; John, James and Simeon of near Coldwater, Mich.; Harry, of Cleveland, Ohio and Roy on a farm near home. Thirteen grandchildren and five great-grandchildren and one brother, Milton Carnahan.

She endured many hardships and many privations to make a home for her children and nothing gave her greater pleasure than to have them all around her. She was a loving mother, a good neighbor and a kind friend.

The funeral service was conducted Friday afternoon at 1:30, from the St. Joe M. P. Church, Rev. J. F. McKnight, officiating. Interment was made in the Spencerville cemetery. E. R. Kinsey, funeral director.

CARD OF THANKS

We wish to express our heartfelt thanks to our friends and neighbors who have given us their assistance, sympathy and love during the recent sickness and death of our beloved mother. We also wish to express our thanks for the many beautiful flowers brought as a last tribute to our departed loved one as well as to the minister and singers for their part in the last rites.

LIFE OF HIRAM REASONER

Hiram, son of Daniel and Sarah Reasoner, was born in Morrow county, Ohio, December 19, 1848 and passed away at ZionCity, Ill., April 1, 1927, at the age of 78 years, 3 months and 12 days.

On November 27, 1870 he was married to Melissa Lawhead and six children were born to them, two are still living, Alva, of Detroit, Michigan and Dessie Potter, of Zion. Mrs. Reasoner died September 20, 1917 at Zion.

Mr. Reasoner remarried on November 25, 1921 to Mrs. Emma Hinshaw, who survives; also two brothers, Silas and Chalmers of St. Joe, Indiana; a sister, Mrs. James Harter, of near Butler; the two children above named, besides seven grandchildren and four great grandchildren.

A large acquaintance was made here as he lived here for years and after leaving the farm, he moved to St. Joe and entered into business that of running the elevator. This, of course extended his relations to Spencerville, Hicksville, Butler and Auburn.

His sickness began last fall and on March 29, he suffered a stroke of paralysis from which he never retained consciousness, and on April 1st he expired.

The funeral was held at Zion and burial was made by his first wife.

BAKE SALE

HOUSEHOLD HINTS

Apples cooked in a sirup colored with red cinnamon candies are pleasing in appearance and flavor.

Do not add water when roasting beef or lamb. Sear the meat at a high temperature, then reduce the heat and cook 15 or 20 minutes to the pound.

Fried pineapple is easily prepared. Simply drain the slices of canned pineapple, dip in flour, and brown slowly in butter in a frying pan.

Chopped nuts are good in almost any kind of sandwich. Combine them with dates, figs raisins or prunes. They are good with olives, with cottage or cream cheese and with maple or brown sugar.

Codliver oil is not a medicine—it is a food, rich in vitamins. There are many children, and grown folks, too, who need codliver oil to build up their general health and help prevent colds and other infections.

Ham for baking may be boiled a day or two beforehand, left standing in cold place in the liquor in which it was cooked, reheated in this, then skinned, covered with bread crumbs and sugar, stuck with cloves and put in the oven for final browning just before dinner.

To prevent jelly from oozing out of the glass and spoiling the paraffin seal, run a knife around the edge of the jelly before pouring on the paraffin, or rotate the glass after the hot paraffin is poured on and let it run up the sides of the glass and form a tight seal.

The red color sometimes admired in devil's food cake is due to the use of more soda than is necessary to neutralize the acid in the sour milk chocolate. This results in taking into the body more soda, or free alkali than is desirable, as one does when serving hot biscuits made yellow with an excess of soda. Too red a devil's food cake, therefore, is not good.

HEART ATTACK WAS NEARLY FATAL

Harlow Ulm had a severe heart attack Tuesday morning, and he thought for a time that he was not long for this world.

Frank Akins was at the Ulm home doing chores, when Harlow started off to work. In a few minutes he returned saying he felt bad in his throat. In a short time he was completely overcome. The muscles of his throat became stiff and swollen, so he could hardly breathe. Mr. Akins hurried a call for a physician and then proceeded to get Mr. Ulm to the house, where Mrs. Akins assisted in getting him warmed up by applying hot water bottles.

By noon he had sufficientl recovered to be taken to the John Ulm home, where he is now located.

C. M. T. C. QUOTA GOES OVER THE TOP

Attorney W. W. Ketcham, of Auburn, DeKalb county chairman for the Citizen's Military Training Camps announces that DeKalb county has gone over the top in supplying more than its quota for the camp which will be held at Fort Benjamin Harrison June 19 to July 20. The quota was twelve and he has sent in seventeen applications to date. He has been advised that this county was eighth in the state in filling its quota.

As other counties may not get their quota in time, the War Department has advised Mr. Ketcham to continue to accept applications until advised to the contrary. As it is uncertain how long they will receive applications from this county, all who have a desire to go sould see Mr. Ketcham at once.

The following have made applications: Kenneth T. Osbun, Gilbert D. Potter, Donald E. Sprott, Jack H. Gregg, Elmer C. Place, William D. Myers, Justin T. Roth, Robert H. Darling, Robert J. Houser, of Auburn; Harry L. Goodson, Harry E. Cramer, John H. Young, Clinton D. Williams, Joseph S. Kelham, of Garrett; Wayne W. Crooks, Howard E. Moyer and Floyd E. Keighn, of Waterloo.

Those who will become 17 years of age during the calendar year 1927 and who are not more than 24 are eligible to attend this camp. All expenses are paid by the Federal Government under provisions of the national defense act.

One Symptom of Eye Strain
Person arises in the morning feeling fit for anything. He starts to work with enthusiasm, but in two or three hours begins to lose his energy. This is particularly true of those who use their eyes for close work. If your eyes are a handicap to you, first we could convince you of the fact, then give you the necessary help.

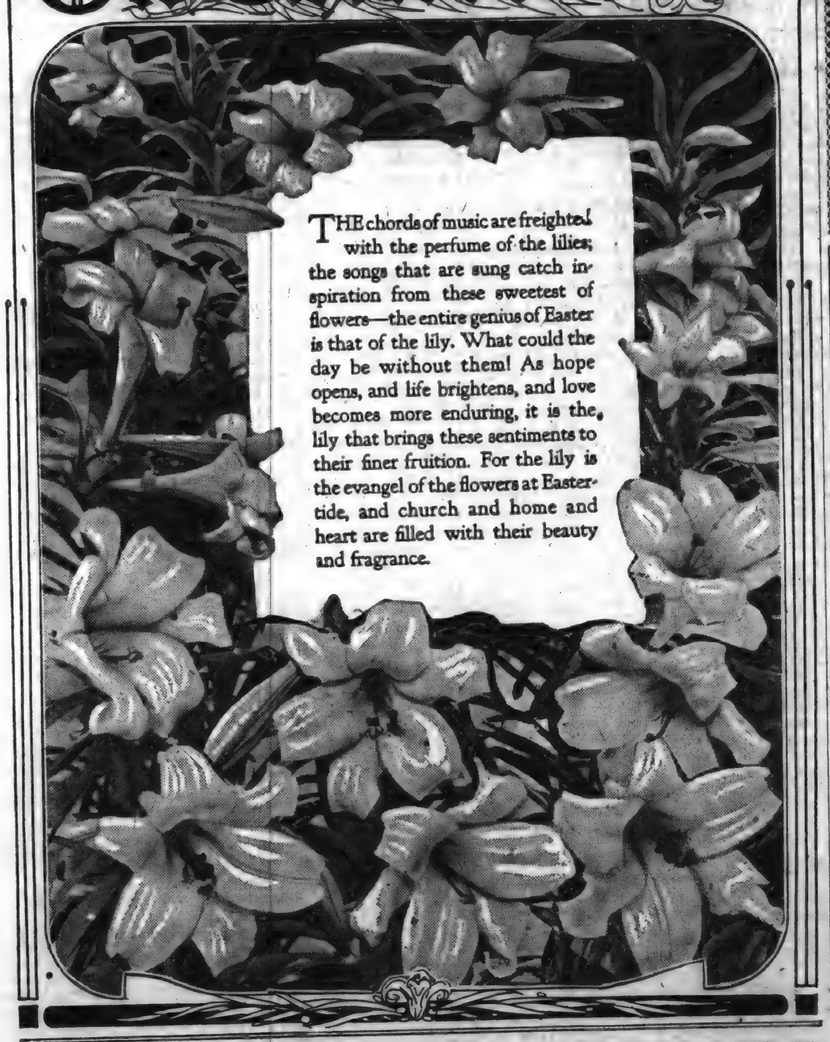
On Easter Morn



THE chords of music are freighted with the perfume of the lilies; the songs that are sung catch inspiration from these sweetest of flowers—the entire genius of Easter is that of the lily. What could the day be without them! As hope opens, and life brightens, and love becomes more enduring, it is the lily that brings these sentiments to their finer fruition. For the lily is the evangel of the flowers at Eastertide, and church and home and heart are filled with their beauty and fragrance.

Rejoicing on Easter Sunday

THE heart of Christendom rejoices on Easter Sunday.

The entry into Jerusalem on Palm Sunday, the agony of Christ in the garden, the crucifixion and burial on Good Friday—all these are past. Death is swallowed up in victory. Christ the Lord is risen today!

If, as has been suggested, the word Easter is derived from Oster, which signifies rising, then is Easter Sunday, both in name and reality, the feast of the resurrection.

It is more probable, however, that Easter gets its name from Eostre, a Saxon deity, whose feast was celebrated every spring about the time of the Christian festival. A compromise was thus effected, Christians accepting the pagan name and pagans accepting the Christian significance of the day.

Easter is a movable feast. It falls on "the first Sunday after the full moon which happens upon or next after the twenty-first of March, and, if the full moon happens upon a Sunday, Easter day is the Sunday after."

In earlier days Easter was called the Paschal feast, for it was kept at the same time as the Pascha, or Jewish Passover.

So much for the origin of the name.

Easter Sunday today is celebrated by young and old alike.

For the children there are rabbits and Easter eggs—and the unrestrained joy of egg hunts in back yards and in public parks.

For the grown-ups there are new suits, new hats.

But surely Easter holds more than this for us. It is not a day of happiness alone, nor of outward show alone. It is a day of victory.

Just as our Saxon forefathers celebrated Eostre and the victory of things physical, so we celebrate Easter and the victory of things spiritual. The heart of man is filled with the beauty of spring's flowers that have sprung from death to life.

The soul of man is triumphant, for it is filled with a spirit which dieth not.

Christ the Lord is risen!

Biblical Story of the Resurrection

IN THE end of the Sabbath, as it began to dawn toward the first day of the week, came Mary Magdalene and the other Mary, to see the sepulcher.

And behold there was a great earthquake, for the angel of the Lord descended from heaven and came and rolled back the stone from the door and sat upon it.

His countenance was like lightning and his raiment white as snow.

And for fear of him the keepers did shake and become as dead men.

And the angel answered and said unto the women, Fear ye not, for I know that ye seek Jesus, which was crucified.

He is not here, for He is risen, as He said. Come, see the place where the Lord lay.

And go quickly and tell His disciples that He is risen from the dead, and, behold, He goeth before you into Galilee; and there shall ye see Him; lo, I have told you.

And they departed quickly from the sepulcher with fear and great joy; and did run to bring His disciples word.

And as they went to tell His disciples, behold, Jesus met them, saying, All hail. And they came, and held Him by the feet, and worshiped Him.

Then said Jesus unto them, Be not afraid; go tell my brethren that they go into Galilee, and there shall they see me.

Then the eleven disciples went away into Galilee, into a mountain where Jesus had appointed them.

And when they saw Him they worshiped Him, and some doubted.

And Jesus came and spake unto them, saying, All power is given unto me in heaven and earth.

Go ye therefore and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost;

Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you; and, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world. Amen.

Easter Festival Time of Romance

EASTER has always been the time of budding romance. In all ages numerous festivals have offered opportunities for the swains to press their suits upon the ladies of their choice. There was the "sugar cupping" to which only the unmarried came. The youths and maidens, armed with a cup and sugar or honey, came to the flower-decked well, and dipping the sugared cup into the well, murmured an incantation to the spirit that dwelt there, and then drank the water. The incantation is a secret, but it is believed that the object was to make a wish, and promise allegiance to the spirit, if the wish were fulfilled.

It has long been considered a necessity, on Easter day, to wear something new; otherwise the rooks, envious of human finery, might cause your best clothes to tear. To avoid this the young people of European villages go to the market to buy a small article of wearing apparel. The custom of giving presents, especially gloves, is common in New England. In France the custom of wearing something new prevails to such an extent that every woman considers herself very ill treated indeed if she has not a new cap to wear on Good Friday, and a new hat to wear on Easter Sunday. As a consequence, these days are called the feast of caps and the feast of hats.

On the continent of Europe there are numerous parades, attended by great pomp and splendor. In comparatively recent times the nobleman of the district, accompanied by his suite, rode in state through the town scattering coins pell mell, the peasants standing by, loudly applauding such splendor. In Spain there is the custom of the Easter king, who, wearing a tin crown and flourishing a kitchen spit as a scepter, furnishes a ribald counterpart of the English Lord of Misrule. There is also an ostentatious hanging and burning of a stuffed figure of Judas. After the fire is out the merrymakers dance over it, stamping and scattering the ashes of the effigy.

FIX BAYONETS!

The War at Close Range Described in a Remarkable Series by an Officer of the Marines

Capt. JOHN W. THOMASON, Jr.

[Illustrated by the Author From Sketches Made on the Battlefield]

STORY FROM THE START

The author describes how the First battalion of the Fifth marines are quartered near Marigny during the first part of June, 1918, when they are suddenly sent up north to relieve the First division, bearing the brunt of the German offensive. Part of the Fifth wrest Hill 142 from the enemy and wait there for the German counter offensive they can see forming. A terrific German attack soon develops, wreaking fearful havoc among the marines, but not dislodging them. In the immediate vicinity other fierce encounters are reducing the American troops and forcing the necessity of replacements.

It came out of the woods into a pale stone town—Champillon. There were no lights in the houses; the place had an air of death about it.

There was a Ph.D. from Harvard in that sweating file, a big, pale, unhandy private, hounded habitually by sergeants and troubled with indigestion and patriotism. For all his training, a pack was not at home on his shoulders or a rifle easy in his hands.

He thought of the pleasant study back Cambridge way, of the gold-and-blue sergeant under the "First to Fight!" recruiting poster—"Your job, too, fella! Come on an' help lick the Hun! You don't wanta wait to be drafted, a big guy like you! We can use you in the marines—" A hearty, red-necked ruffian—extremely competent in his vocation, no doubt. Good enough chaps. Yes . . . but . . . tea by a seal-coal fire in the New England twilight, and clever talk of art and philosophic anarchism — one wrote fastidious essays on such things for the more discriminating reviews . . . scholarly abstractions. . . .

Of all the stupid, ignorant, uncivilized things, a war! Who coined that phase, civilized warfare? There was no such thing! . . . Here, in the most civilized country on earth. . . . The neighborhood of Chateau-Thierry . . . Montaigne's town, wasn't it? The kings of France had a chateau near it, once. And yet it was always a cockpit . . . since Aetius rolled back Attila in the battle of the nations, at Chalons—Napoleon fought Champ-Aubert and Montmirail around here—always war—

The column was through Champillon, dipping into a black hollow. More shellholes in the road here. . . . All at once there was a new shell hole, and the doctor of philosophy, sometime private of marines, lay beside it, very neatly beheaded, with the rifle, that had been such a bore to keep clean, across his knees, and dried prunes spilling out of the pockets that he never had learned to button. The column went on. At dawn a naval medico attached to the marine brigade, with a staff officer, passed that way.

Odd, the wounds you see," observed the naval man, professionally interested. He looked curiously. "I couldn't have done a neater decapitation than that myself. Wonder who—took his identification tags with it. I see. Replacement, by his uniform—" (For the Fifth and Sixth regiments had long since worn out their forest-green marine uniforms, and were wearing army khaki, while the replacements came in new green clothing.) The staff officer picked up the rifle, snapped back the bolt, and squinted expertly down the bore. "Disgustin'," he said. "Sure he was a replacement. You never catch an old-timer with a bore like that—filthy! Bet there hasn't been a rag through it in a week. You know, surgeon, I was looking at some of the rifles of that bunch of machine-gunners lying in the brush just across from Battalion; they were beautiful. Never saw better kept pieces. Fine soldiers in a lot of ways, these Boche!"

Meantime the column had passed into heavier woods, and halted where the rifles ahead sounded very near. They saw dugouts, betrayed by the thread of candlelight around the edges of the blankets that cloaked their entrances. One was a dressing-station, by the sound and the smell of it. The officer named Henry ducked into the other. There a stocky major sat up on the floor and rolled a cigarette, which he lighted at a guttering candle. "Replacements in? Well, what do they look like?—"

"Same men I saw in the training areas last month, sir. A sprinkling of old-time marines—Sergeant McGee, that we broke for something or other in Panama, is with 'em—and the rest of them are young college lads and boys off the farm—fine material, sir. Not much drill, but they probably know how to shoot, they take orders and they don't scare worth a cent! Shelled coming in, at Voie du Chatelle, and some more this side of Champillon—several casualties. No confusion—nothing like a panic—Laid down and waited for orders—did exactly as they were told—fine men, sir!"

CHAPTER III

The Bois de Belleau; Coming Out.

They tried new tactics to get the bayonets into the Bois de Belleau. Platoons—very lean platoons now—formed in small combat groups, deployed in the wheat, and set out toward the gloomy wood. Fifty batteries were working on it, all the field pieces of the Second division, and what the French would lend. The shells ripped overhead, and the wood was full of leaping flame, and the smoke of H. E. and shrapnel. The fire from its edge died down. It was late in the afternoon; the sun was low enough to shine under the edge of your helmet. The men went forward at a walk, their shoulders hunched over, their bodies inclined, their eyes on the edge of the wood, where shrapnel was raising a hell of a dust. Some of them had been this way before; their faces were set bleakly. Others were replacements, a month or so from Quantico; they were terribly anxious to do the right thing, and they watched zealously the sergeants and the corporals and the lieutenants who led the way with canes.

One such group, over to the left, followed a big young officer, a replacement, too, but a man who had spent a week in Bouresches and was to be considered a veteran, as such things went in those days, when so many chaps were not with the brigade very long. He had not liked

Sketches From Captain Thomason's Notebook.

Bouresches, which he entered at night, and where he lived obscenely in cellars with the dead, and saw men die in the orange flash of minenwerfer shells, terribly and without the consolation of glory. Here, at last, was attack. . . . He thought, absently watching his flank to see that it guided—true-guide center was the word—of the old men who had brought him up to the tales of Lee's Army of Northern Virginia, in the war of the Southern confederacy. Great battles, glamorous attacks, full of the color and the high-hearted elan of chivalry. Jackson at Chancellorsville; Pickett at Gettysburg—that was a charge for you—the red Southern battle-flags, leading like fierce bright-winged birds the locked ranks of fifteen gray brigades, and the screeching "Rebel" yell, and the field-music, fife and drum, rattling out "The Girl I Left Behind Me":

Oh, if ever I get through this war,
And the Lincoln boys don't find me,
I'm goin' to go right back again
To the girl I left behind me—

No music here, no flags, no bright swords, no lines of battle charging with a yell. Combat groups of weary men, in drab and dirty uniforms, dressed approximately on a line, spaced "so that one shrapnel-burst cannot include more than one group," laden like mules with gas-masks, bandoleers, grenades, chaut-chaut clips, trudging forward without haste and without excitement, they moved on an untidy wood where shells were breaking, a wood that did not answer back, or show an enemy. In its silence and anonymity it was far more sinister than any flag-crowned rampart, or stone walls topped with crashing volleys from honest old black-powder muskets—he considered these things and noted that the wood was very near, and that the German shells were passing high and breaking in the rear, where the support companies were waiting. His own artillery appeared to have lifted its range; you heard the shells farther in, in the depths of the wood.

The air snapped and crackled all around. The sergeant beside the lieutenant stopped, looked at him with a frozen, foolish smile, and crumpled into a heap of old clothes. Something took the kneecap off the lieutenant's right knee and his leg buckled under him. He noticed, as he fell sideways, that all his men were tumbling over like duck-pins; there was one fellow that spun around twice, and went over backward with his arms up. Then the wheat shut him in, and he heard cries and a moaning. He observed curiously that he was making some of the noise himself. How could anything hurt so? He sat up to look at his knee—it was bleeding like the deuce!—and as he felt for his first-aid packet, a bullet seared his shoulder, knocking him on his back again. For a while he lay quiet and listened to odd, thrashing noises around him, and off to the left a man began to call, very pitifully. At once he heard more machine-gun fire—he hadn't seemed to hear it before—and now the bullets were striking the ground and ricocheting with peculiar whine in every direction. One ripped into the dirt by his cheek and filled his eyes and his mouth with dust. The lamentable crying stopped; most of the crawling, thrashing noises stopped. He himself was hit again and again up and down his legs, and he lay very still.

Where he lay he could just see a tree-top—he was that near the wood. A few leaves clung to it; he tried to calculate, from the light on them, how low the sun was, and how long it would be until dark. Stretcher bearers would be along at dark, surely. He heard voices, so close that he could distinguish words:

"Caput?"

"Nein-nicht alles—"

Later, forgetting those voices, he tried to wriggle backward into a shell-hole that he remembered passing. He was hit again, but somehow he got into a little shell-hole, or got his body into it, head first. He reflected that he had bled so much that a head-downward position wouldn't matter, and he didn't want to be hit again. Men all dead, he supposed. He couldn't hear any of them. He seemed to pass out, and then to have dreamy periods of consciousness. In one of these periods he saw the sky over him was dark, metallic blue; it won't be nearly night. He heard somebody coming on heavy feet, and cunningly shut his eyes to a slit . . . playing dead. . . . A German officer, a stiff, immaculate fellow, stood over him, looking at him. He lay very still, trying not to breathe. The Boche had out his pistol, a short-barreled Luger, rested it on his left forearm, and fired deliberately. He felt the bullet range upward through the sole of his foot, and something excruciating happened in his ankle. Then one called, and the German passed from his field of vision, returning his pistol as he went. . . .

Later, trying to piece things together, he was in an ambulance, being jolted most infernally. And later he asked a nurse by his bed: "I say, nurse, tell me—did we get the Bois de Belleau?—"Why, last June!" she said. "It's time you were coming out of it! This is August."

* * * * * * *

The battalion lay in unclean holes on the far face of Bois de Belleau, which was "now United States marine corps entirely." The sun was low over Torcy, and all the battalion, except certain designated individuals, slept. The artillery, Boche and American, was engaged in counter-battery work, and the persecuted infantry enjoyed repose. The senior lieutenant of the Forty-ninth company, bedded down under a big rock with his orderly, came up from infinite depths of slumber with his pistol out, all in one swift motion. You awoke like that in the Bois de Belleau. . . . Jennings, company runner, showed two buck-teeth at him and said: Sir, the cap'n wants to see you—"

They crawled delicately away from the edge of the wood, to a trail that took you back under cover, and found the captain frying potatoes in bacon grease. "Going out tonight, by platoons. Start as soon as it's dark, with the Seventeenth. We are next. Sixth regiment outfit makin' the relief—Ninety-sixth company for us. They've been here before, so you needn't leave anybody to show them the ground. Soon as they get to you beat it. Got a sketch of the map? Have your platoon at Bois Gros-Jean—you know, beyond Brigade, on the big road—at daylight. Battalion has chow there.—Got it?—Good—"

Gestures Tell More Than Spoken Words

It is one of the most difficult things in the world to act a lie. Gesture is, in fact, far more revealing—and far more truthful than speech. Comparatively few persons possess complete control of this "language of the body." Neither a golden tongue nor a voice thrilling with passion is any match for a contradicting gesture or glance.

Scientific study of gestures has shown that they fall naturally into two classes—acceptance or rejection. Almost every gesture of which we are capable belongs to one or other of these classes, for, in truth, the language of gesture is much simpler than the language of the lips. Upward movements of the head, hands, arms or eyelids belong to the former class, and downward movements to the latter. There are few exceptions to this, but they only prove the rule. For example, there is a way of raising the eyebrows that expresses a sneer, but then a sneer is deliberate, whereas the gestures that are really tell-tale are always made without deliberation.

STORY FROM THE START

Claude Melnotte Dabbs, returning from New York to his grocery store in Peace Valley, Pa., brings with him a stranger, Ned Carter, whom he introduces to his housekeeper, Aunt Lyddy, as a chance acquaintance. Ned tells that he has broken with his folks because of their pacifistic leanings. Visiting in Clover Hollow, the two men almost run over a dog belonging to a girl whom Ned recognizes. Later Ned delivers a grocery order, and in his absence the girl, Dorothy Selden, tells Dabbs that Ned's name is Rangeley and that he is the son of the famous banker. Next morning Ned, starting to work as a delivery boy, takes an order marked "Johnston" to the "White House," where he meets Mary Johnston. She tells him the servants have left, leaving her alone with her mother. Ned promises to get new servants. Meeting Dorothy, who is his former fiancee, Ned evades explaining his presence in Peace Valley. He arranges with Ettie Pulsifer to begin work with the Johnstons, but she is unable to start at once. Ned returns to tell Mary about hiring Ettie, and in explaining this matter to the mother is astonished at her emotion when Dabbs' name is mentioned. The cook arrives, and Mary and Ned start to town for groceries. They are seen by Dorothy Selden. Worried over financial difficulties, Mrs. Johnston is bothered by Dorothy, who warns her there is something suspicious about Ned.

Dick Hanna was still holding forth: "Yeh, but that Selden girl ain't in it with the new one that has come to the White house. I mean that Miss Johnston. You saw her driving with Ned Carter. Wish't I had his chance. I'd be driving with one hand all right. And even she ain't in it with her mother. Gollies! I wouldn't believe it was her mother."

"Stepma, mebbe, but they don't act like it. They're awful close and fond of each other, them two. The mother's a thundering fine figger of a woman. She's a widder with money, I believe. She kin have me for her second whenever she names the day!"

Laughter filled the shop. Claude decided to go. Dick Hanna always made him feel around for a handy club.

"An' while you was achipping around moles, Ike, I called to mind that one of her's." Dick continued. "It's right on the tip of her ear, brown and flat, and lays against it like one of them drop earrings. Say, I'd like—"

The door banged so loudly they all looked up.

"Guess Claude's remembered he's forgot somebody's orders."

Claude Dabbs put the orders into the truck mechanically. His mind, which Ned had catalogued as calm and philosophical, was in the state which Claude himself had long ago diagnosed as "that d—n excitable temper of mine."

Claude argued with himself that there was no earthly reason, after all these years of nothing happening, to get heated up because he'd heard of a red-headed woman with a mole on her ear. Of course there was the name "Johnston," but it was a common enough name. Anyway, it would be her husband's name. There it was; he must be at that "dangerous age" everybody was writing about, if he got so excited about some Johnston's widow and daughter.

That was another thing—a daughter! If the woman he was thinking of was at the White house, where would a daughter come in? It was not, he assured himself, worth thinking about.

* * * * * * *

To Claude's astonishment and pleasure, Ned seemed content and happy in helping him about the store, or running the car to and fro between Clover Hollow and Peace Valley.

Ned, Claude observed, never spoke voluntarily of Dorothy Selden and made no effort to meet her. The vexed question of his real name slipped into the background of Claude's mind, save for those moments when he looked upon him with a fatherly eye and wondered what Loren Rangeley was thinking of.

Gradually it came to pass that Ned delivered all the Clover Hollow orders. Claude never crossed the White house kitchen steps, nor did he see anything of the Johnstons, save an occasional glimpse of Mary going through the village in the car, with Ned at the wheel. Mrs. Johnston never came to Peace Valley. When Claude was honest with himself he admitted that this fact was a relief. If by any chance she was the woman he feared, what would he say to her when he saw her? Until he was sure of that—he would [illegible]

Ned, obeying nothing philosophical or studied, drifted along, caught, as he put it to himself, in the maelstrom of Peace Valley. He was indifferent to the danger of discovery which Dorothy Selden represented. He was sure that Dorothy was "too good a scout" to give him away, and he was equally sure that she wanted to forget him as much as he wanted to forget her.

It never occurred to Ned that Dorothy was simply biding her own time, determined that when she struck at him the lovely Mary Johnston should feel the blow. As a matter of fact, Ned was doing very little thinking. He was creating a fool's paradise which one sentence from Dorothy would destroy; dreaming of a place in this peaceful little world, whose chief inhabitant was Mary. To be received or rejected on his own merits as Claude Dabbs' nephew, and not Loren Rangeley's pampered and eligible son; surely that would be a triumph worth while. He sought diligently to make himself popular in the store and the village and indispensable at the White house.

Ned had the field practically to himself. Save for the Saturday to Monday week-ends, when men appeared at the hospitable Mannheim's, there were no available swains.

It was a time when a cautious or ambitious mother might well have taken alarm, for Mary was indisputably intrigued. She had never before seen so much of a youth in Ned's position. This young man had thoughts, ideas and habits that too closely approached her own to admit of only a country store as background.

However, being human, Mary did not tell her mother everything. For instance, she simply could not tell her mother that this grocer's clerk gave her the feeling that she, Mary, was utterly right and charming, no matter what she said or did. It was something to treasure up, and remember when she was alone.

Mrs. Johnston, like a cornered animal, was wholly taken up with one great and pressing problem—how to get out of her corner. Other and lesser problems simply did not exist for her. She disliked inaction and hated the policy of "waiting to see how the cat jumped," yet there was nothing for her to do but wait. Always before this, when things became in any way impossible, Mrs. Johnston had simply turned her back and run away from them. Now, without money to run with, she must stay here in this quiet country place which, like a false prophet, kept breathing "peace, peace" when there was no peace—for her.

This morning, in the hope of distracting her mother, Mary was urging a ride to Hillsborough, not only as a chance to see the country, but because Mr. Carter said there was an inn there where the food was good.

Mrs. Johnston did not look enthusiastic, but intimated to Mary that she did not mind trying.

While Mrs. Johnston put on her hat, Mary found Ned in the kitchen, deep in an argument—heated on Mrs. Pulsifer's side—as to some new potatoes for the use of her own family, which she had expected Ned to bring with him.

Mary's entrance hushed the storm, but unfortunately, owing to the clamor that had greeted her, she used her employer's manner. Ned was annoyed. He received his instructions moodily and went outside to look at his engine.

Mary found her mother looking out of the window at Ned.

"Mary, it might be as well not to go, because—"

Mary indignantly interrupted. "Why not?"

Being somewhat of a diplomat in her relations with her daughter, Mrs. Johnston wisely contented herself with saying: "Dorothy Selden seemed concerned to see you riding with the grocer's boy."

Then she laughed. Mary's head went up.

"Maybe it would be diplomatic not to use this young man so often," Mrs. Johnston suggested. "Let him go back to the shop today. Tomorrow we will go with one of the other men as driver."

"And let that interfering little cat think we take her seriously?" asked Mary. "Indeed not! I'm going to Hillsborough, and with that young man! If you do not care to come—why, I'll go alone."

What could her mother do but laugh, and go along, though she thought to herself: "Little fox! What is she up to now."

Before they reached the car she paused to say: "Be very sure I will take a good look at this young man! If I like him, we will continue to champion him and his driving. If I do not—he's dropped!"

"We can't drop him far," Mary rejoined. "He's got to bring the groceries, you know."

For one appreciable second, Ned forgot the chauffeur manner he had intended to try out on Mary. He stared. Mrs. Johnston was his excuse. This was the first day she had consented to ride with them. Ned found himself looking into two sleepy brown eyes that saw more than one guessed, and at one of the handsomest women he had seen in many a day. The color of that hair alone, he admitted to himself, was enough to make anyone look twice. Her mouth was oddly disconcerting. It looked capable of sneering. Then, quite suddenly, she smiled.

"If Mother were my sister," Mary thought, watching her with that odd pride in her mother's beauty that made her depreciate her own, "no one would ever look at me!"

Mary paused before she followed her mother into the car. "Oh, Mother, just a moment. This is Mr. Carter, Mr. Dabbs' nephew, who has been so kind in driving me about."

Following the introduction, Ned helped Mary in very carefully. This was the moment for which he had waited, and Mary had stood the test. She had not "Cartered" him to her mother.

Neither Mary nor her mother knew Hillsborough. Ned had visited it several times with Claude Dabbs, and suggested the Iron Hand inn as their destination. The idea was acceptable to Mrs. Johnston, who merely stipulated, "Anywhere, except Peace Valley."

Mrs. Johnston was conscious that she was one person too many. It was curious. Not a word or a look that she might object to, yet the feeling was strong. Mrs. Johnston was irritated. She had much to worry her. Surely it was impossible that her precious, level-headed Mary could be about to further involve them. Mrs. Johnston, who was really tired, tried an experiment. She closed her eyes, complaining that the air made her sleepy. Contrary to her intention, it really had that effect. When she opened them, some fifteen minutes later, Mary was on the front seat with Ned.

"Oh, Mother, I didn't want to disturb you. Mr. Carter's been telling me such interesting things about the country."

Mary joined her mother at once, but Mrs. Johnston was not pleased with the result of her experiment.

When they had crossed the cobblestone parking space to the entrance, both Mary and Ned waited. Things were in Mrs. Johnston's hands. She knew it. She could not treat this young man as a paid driver.

"Mr. Carter," she began a little hesitantly, "since we've so freely accepted your uncle's car and kindness, won't you accept my invitation to luncheon?"

It was very graciously put, but Ned knew how little Mrs. Johnston wanted him, even if she was thoroughbred enough to ask him. He thanked her, vowing that he had an errand to do for his uncle but would take them in and introduce them to The Iron Hand.

He strolled along a quiet residential street which terminated in an old graveyard. He sat down on a flat tombstone, and thought about life and Mary.

"Hey, Ned, for one minute I thought you were a monument!"

Claude Dabbs was smiling at him over the fence.

Ned rose and went to him.

"Thank Heaven I saw you first," Ned said. "I told the Johnstons I had to do an errand for you. Come back with me."

Claude, however, was too busy to do more than stop at a lunch counter near the courthouse, where he had to look up several property records. As they ate he listened absently, Ned thought, to a description of the morning's drive. When they had finished, Claude said he would walk with Ned to the door of the inn.

As they reached the inn, the door opened to admit a large party of cheerful farmers' wives and children. Through the door, which the last lumpy child left wide open, Ned caught a glimpse of Mrs. Johnston, Mary and the proprietor. They were examining a print, hung rather high above the half wainscoting. Mrs. Johnston's glorious hair and strongly modeled head were thrown into relief against the wall.

"Quick, C. M. Look! That's Mrs. Johnston."

Just how much does Claude Melnotte Dabbs know about Mrs. Johnston? You're a big surprise coming!

French Rural Life Sees Little Change

In the France that I know the workmanship of handicrafts and gardens and woodlands and inn kitchens and wine cellars and vineyards; the frugalities, the fetes, the austerities, the relaxings, all these things overwhelmingly continue.

Mme. Aubain still sits beside the white wainscoting, looking through the windows at the life of the street; Felicite is still at work from the kitchen to grenier; notaire, small banker; peasant-proprietor, physicians, shepherd, housewife, market stall, town drummer, abbe, hotel keeper, marchand de vin, blacksmith, haute bourgeoise, local movenne and petites bourgeoises, local watchmaker, chair caner, bellows mender, woodcutter, local barons and marquises, even, are still all in the places where they have been for half a thousand years.—From "A Mirror to France," by Ford Madox Ford.

Wrap Your Parcels

To "carry your package home" in Japan is the matter-of-course thing to do.

If it is a "lady of high degree" she will produce from the capacious depths of her kimona sleeve a lovely time-softened old silken length that may have come direct from the Seven Thousands Gods of Japan or from Honorable Ancestors. It is considered ill-bred and common to a degree to carry a bare package through the streets.

Lesson for April 17

PETER'S GREAT CONFESSION

LESSON TEXT—Matt. 16: 13-24.

GOLDEN TEXT—Thou art the Christ, the Son of the Living God.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Peter Pleases Jesus.

JUNIOR TOPIC — Confessing Our Faith in Jesus.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Confessing Christ Openly.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—What think ye of Christ?

The disciples had been with the Lord for several years. They had heard His wonderful words and witnessed His mighty works. Various opinions were extant about Him. Since Jesus was soon to go to the cross it was necessary for the disciples to have a definite and true conception of Him. In order to help them into the right conception, He provoked this confession from Peter as the spokesman of the group of disciples.

I. Peter's Confession (vv. 13-16).

1. How provoked.

Two questions of Christ put to the disciples called forth this great confession.

(1) Whom do men say I, the Son of Man, am (v. 13).

1. He first inquired for the opinion of the people concerning Him. As a wise teacher He knew that this would help crystallize the view of the disciples. The people recognized Jesus as a teacher or a prophet, with more than human authority and power. Today, as then, there is a diversity of opinion among the people as to Jesus Christ. The multitudes today recognize Jesus as an unique personality and as having been a great teacher, but that which offends them is His deity.

(2) "Whom say ye that I am?" (v. 15).

This question involved the personal opinion of the disciples concerning Him. To be able to tell what others think of Jesus is not enough. There must be definite, correct and personal belief in Him. Personal belief is worth infinitely more than the knowledge of what others think, for upon personal belief hinges character and destiny.

2. What Peter's confession involved (v. 16).

Two vital things, the Messiahship and deity of Jesus. That which Jesus called forth from Peter is the burning question of today. "What think ye of Christ?" is the question that must be answered by everyone.

3. Christ's commendation of Peter (v. 17).

He pronounced him blessed. Truly he was blessed, for he both possessed and confessed Christ.

II. The New Body, the Church, Announced by Christ (vv. 18-20).

Christ declared His intention of bringing into existence a new body, to the members of which He will give eternal life and into whose hands He would entrust the keys of the Kingdom. Peter was to have a distinguished place in this body. Christ declared that Peter should be the foundation stone in His church. Christ is the chief corner stone upon which the church is built. Christ's person and Messiahship were confessed by Peter and on this rock (truth confessed) is laid the foundation of the apostles and prophets (Eph. 2:20). All believers are living stones of this house (I Pet. 2:5). The keys entrusted to Peter were used on the day of Pentecost and again in the case of Cornelius.

III. The Cross the Way to the Throne (vv. 21-23).

From that time Jesus began to show unto the disciples how that He must go unto Jerusalem and suffer many things, be killed and raised again the third day. This indeed startled the disciples. They did not yet realize that redemption was to be accomplished through the passion of the cross. So unwelcome was this announcement that Peter cried: "This shall not be unto thee." Peter later saw through this darkness to the glory of the hilltops. A new hope then filled his heart (I Pet. 1:3, 4). Many are yet stumbling over the doctrine of salvation and redemption through the suffering of the cross. Salvation by blood is hated by the devil.

IV. The Cost of Discipleship (v. 24).

To follow Christ means to suffer. It means to turn one's back upon the world.

1. There must be denial of self. There is a wide difference between self-denial and the denial of self.

2. Take up His cross.

This cross is the suffering and shame which lie in the path of loyalty to God.

3. Follow Christ.

This means to have the mind of Christ; to be like Christ. Christ will come in glory to reward all such.

The Power of God

Many a battle has been won by the arrival of reinforcements. When a man is fighting a battle against his evil tendencies, the coming of the power of God into his soul often means victory. The human reinforced by the divine assures us of heaven.—Herald of Gospel Liberty.

Nature has a power to show what is inside of a man that responds to God on the outside.—Echoes.

THE WORLD'S GREAT EVENTS

Napoleon Bonaparte

(Part III)

FOR years Europe crouched cringing and helpless at Napoleon's feet. The British bulldog snarled unconquered defiance and the Man of Destiny was wise enough to leave Great Britain alone. So, England continued to stand as the one obstacle between the Corsican and the rule of the whole world. Yet Europe, though cowed, waited patiently for a chance to avenge itself of its tyrant. And that chance came in 1812.

Russia broke certain clauses in her treaty with France, and in May, 1812, Napoleon declared war on her. With 700,000 men he began his invasion. Barely 300,000 Russians opposed the advancing French hosts, but their tactics were unexpected. Avoiding a general engagement wherever possible, the Russians continually fell back before Napoleon's advance, wasting the country they passed through so that the pursuing French found neither provisions nor fuel.

Now and then—at Borodino and elsewhere—the French caught up with their fleeing enemies and won decisive victories, though at great cost. Following out tactics similar to those he had used successfully against Prussia and Austria, Napoleon struck straight at Russia's heart by marching on Moscow. He arrived there on September 15, to find the city deserted and in flames. The patriotic Russians had sacrificed home, property and wealth in order to block the advance and mar the conquest of their hated foe. Napoleon could pursue the retreating patriots no further over a desolate territory. His mighty army of 700,000 had dwindled to 120,000. So he ordered a retreat.

The merciless northern winter was setting in. The country was stripped of provisions. Bands of mounted Cossacks harassed the diseased, starving, half-frozen soldiers. Of all the vast army of invasion barely 25,000 reached France alive. Napoleon had, long before this, left his army, hurried to Paris and ordered a conscription of recruits to press the war. But his luck was gone. The "chance" for which ten beaten nations had waited so long had at last come. The climber had stumbled. The invincible general had been beaten. France's unbroken triumph had been turned into defeat. All Europe was roused. The Russian disaster had proven that Napoleon was only mortal. His name lost its terror.

An alliance was formed by Russia, England, Prussia, Sweden and Spain, and in 1813 they massed an army near the Elbe. Napoleon had 350,000 soldiers in Germany. For months he beat the allies in battle after battle, and at last forced them to a truce. They took advantage of this armistice to persuade Austria to join their league. Then at the truce's end, the united armies concentrated at Dresden. There he again routed them. But Napoleon's army was so weakened by the campaign that he was forced to fall back on Leipsic, where the allies hemmed him in. And there, in October, 1813, "the Battle of the Nations" was fought. Napoleon was beaten. Refusing to see that his star had set, he returned to Paris and ordered 300,000 recruits raised.

The allies entered France, and there a second campaign—this time on French soil—was waged. From January to March, 1814, Napoleon once more beat the invaders at very point But Wellington, with an English army, was advancing on Paris from the south, and force of numbers proved too much for the Corsican.

The veterans who had won him so many victories were dead. Their places were taken by raw recruits His best generals, too, were gone The men to whom his name had been a slogan of success were replaced by a generation weary of war. On March 30 Paris was captured by the allies, and the populace hailed the invading armies as deliverers. Talleyrand, Fouche and other diplomats made great by Napoleon, deserted him and went over to the enemy.

France was worn out. For 17 years Napoleon had paralyzed trade and home life by dragging off to war the young men of the nation. Taxes had been heavy. Coming as it did on top of the horrors of the revolution, Napoleon's rule had nearly wrecked the country. For over a decade he had turned all Europe into an armed camp; had changed pastures into battle fields; had sacked and devastated populous districts, and slain hundreds of thousands of men who should have been helping their countries' progress. With iron hand he had swayed the destinies of the continent, changed its map and crushed patriotism and national independence everywhere save in France. Europe loathed him. France was tired of him and tired of fighting.

The emperor had sense enough to see this, and abdicated in favor of his son. This compromise the allies would not accept. They packed their former conqueror off to exile on the island of Elba and installed Louis XVIII (younger brother of the beheaded Louis XVI) on the French throne. Then Europe rested from its long era of terror and bloodshed.

But the respite was brief. The most dramatic events in the Corsican's career were still to be enacted.

We are sending Ross a complimentary copy of The News this week so he can compare it with his Blade.

Quite often we see in the papers where a man is reputed to have made a million dollars. If you can learn anything from arithmetic, figure up how you have to hustle if you want to get into the million dollar class. Three hundred and sixty-five days in a year. Suppose we live for fifty years, we have only 18,250 days to rake in enough shekels to make a million. If we start working at fifteen then we chop off 5,475 days and we have 12,775 left. If we rest on Sundays but work on all other holidays and never get sick we have only10,175 days; so you see if we want even a hundred thousand bucks when we're fifty, we have tosave up about ten a day without a minutes let up. No wonder some folks wonder what kind of work a fellow does when he makes a million in a year or two.

The Child's First School is the Family"—Froebel.
Issued by the National Kindergarten Association

"FIRST THINGS FIRST"
Marion Brownfield

Usually wherever two or more mothers gather together the conversation sooner or later drifts to some phase of child culture. Ever zealous for their children's welfare they seldom fail to avail themselves of an opportunity for advice and counsel regarding this supremely important matter.

The motive is worthy and commendable, but a danger that should not be overlooked lurks in intimate discussions. There is something about a friendly interchange of ideas that begets garrulity, and never is this more apparant than when a group of mothers tell of their children's doings.

Mrs. A—— wishes advice about some fault of Anna's and relates incidents illustrating the manifestations of it in her daughter. Other mothers are reminded of similar or contrasting instances in their experiences, and recount them with the result that before the afternoon is over much that should never have been disclosed has been broadcast to the circle of acquaintance.

Aside from considerations of good taste, this loquacity may work an incalculable injury to the children.

Timid, shrinking, and highly sensitive ones suffer agonies of mortification on discovering that their privacy has been invaded, and their little secrets laid bare; while those already inclined to callousness or bravado are invaribly coarsened by such knowledge.

A mother, above every one else in the world, should be a refuge and a retreat to her child, and its every thought should be able to repose safely in her. Its confidences, however trivial or unimportant they may seem, should be kept inviolate, and its little fancies never be made a subject of jest.

Anecdotes concerning the children should be selected with discrimination and general information given out sparingly. Never, in fact, is silence more golden than when dealing with the inner life of a child.

A mother in doubt about what may be wisely discussed regarding her child may ask herself some such question as these: "Our places reversed, is this a matter that I should like my child to mention concerning me?" "Is it delicate?" Is it kind?" "Is it necessary?" "Will it have a tendency to strengthen or to weaken the bond between us when my child has reached maturity?"

A mother had better shatter her choicest piece of china or crystal than cause or allow the slightest flaw to mar that priceless treasure, her child's faith and trust in her.

Community Building

Relief From Dullness Found in Small Town

American national life is "afflicted with almost intolerable dullness" and the hope of shaking it off lies in the small town, not in the great, gay and gaudy cities, Arthur E. Holt, professor in the Chicago Theological seminary, holds in an article in the Northwestern Christian Advocate.

He scrapes off the "dull" label which Sinclair Lewis and others have pasted on Main street and sticks it on the great white ways of the big cities.

"Dullness," he says, "is indigenous in the big city, and not in the small town."

His reason is: The individual has no community interests in the big city. He is a part of the mass production. If he works in a factory he screws bolt 108 on nut 98 as the product passes his bench and such standardization has filtered on through his life.

He told of a flapper sitting in a Chicago cabaret, where every one is vociferously gay, turning around to a newspaper reporter and saying: "Gee, isn't it lonesome?"

"If American life is to shake off its dullness the country must take a new interest in the town and small community," Holt continued.

He declared the small town's principal workman, the farmer, is the only one who has "escaped the blight" of mass production.

His second reason for a revival of interest in the small town is because it is a place where people know each other.

"If people ever discover what true community life is they are going to desert the big city like rats from a sinking ship," he asserted.

Not All Trees Suitable for Roadside Planting

The government believes that the oak is the most suitable tree for roadside planting. Maples come second in this respect, since they thrive in nearly all parts of the United States, but unfortunately the species of maple usually selected are not the ones best adapted for the purpose. Therefore they should be selected carefully.

For the cooler dry regions the most promising trees are the green ash, black locust, hackberry, thornless honey locust and poplars. In regions where the cold and drought are extreme poplars, boxelders and willows are the most suitable. In warm dry climates the eucalypts, or gums, the palms, the Jerusalem thorn and the mesquite are good.

Success in roadside tree planting, says a bulletin issued by the Agricultural department, depends on properly locating the plants along the highway, selecting suitable varieties, and adequately protecting them from thoughtless persons, roving stock and insects and diseases. The best effects in roadside planting are usually produced by giving the predominant place to the common plants of the neighborhood, using introduced plants in subordinate positions. Next in desirability are plants from regions having similar growing conditions, either in this country or abroad.

Work for Better Homes

It is well to emphasize the dual aspects of Better Homes week. Mayor Becker makes the point clear in his formal proclamation, when he urges co-operation "to bring about better home ties and greater interest in the home and in the principles it represents." This is an inescapable necessity if home is to retain its primary meaning, which is spiritual rather than material. Of all races the Anglo-Saxons have best preserved this distinction. The term translated as "house" or "abode" is lacking in the fine sense of domesticity, of civilized social relationships, and finally of civilization itself that is conveyed by the simple word of four letters—home.—Portland Oregonian.

Health Service Important

When an extraordinarily good manager develops on the farm he usually migrates to the city, and the moderately good managers frequently do likewise. This is why the bulk of the wealth of the country is concentrated in the cities and why, also, the cities have developed the best health departments. Good health service reflects good management on the part of the community.

Consider Residence Value

The less expensive the lot the more money is left for the house itself, and a well-constructed home on a cheap lot is far more desirable than an unsatisfactory house on an expensive lot. Although a house that is very much more expensive than its neighbors might be hard to sell at a good price, a very cheap house may add nothing at all to the sale value of an expensive lot.

Delight in Land Owning

The possession of land brings to every thoughtful man a certain peace of mind, a sense of protection against the buffetings of chance, a feeling that his fortune has been anchored in a manner that will yield the maximum of benefit to himself and his posterity.

Colleen Moore

Colleen Moore, the "movie" star, sat on an "extra" bench for six months and then got a job lasting only three days. Finally her chance came in "Flaming Youth." Her success continued to grow with "So Big," "Sally" and "Irene," "Twinkletoes" and "Orchids and Ermine." Miss Moore was born in Port Huron, Mich.

WHAT THE GRACIOUS HOSTESS SAYS:

By DELLA THOMPSON LUDES

INVITING GUESTS

NEVER invite too many people to an informal dinner.

"Crowd not your table; let your number be
Not more than seven, and never less than three."

To ask too many guests to this form of entertainment is to rob it of its intimacy and the opportunity to enjoy general conversation, which is the charm of such a meal.

Much of the enjoyment of the guests who are invited to an affair of the table—luncheon, dinner or supper—depends on the appearance of the table itself. The table and its appointments, as the guests come through from other rooms, is a picture. The room is its frame. It should be arranged to please the eye. The linen should be immaculate. It does not matter whether there is a cloth of exquisite and expensive damask, or simple runners of unbleached muslin. Whatever cloth is on the table should be perfectly laundered, spotless. For dinner a long white cloth over a "husher" is the proper covering. In a bungalow, a small town or country house, however, the coarser and perhaps more "artistic" cloths, with heavy drawnwork, may be used. Never, however, do they show color when used for dinner. The "husher" may be a homemade one of double-faced canton flannel, or one bought in sections to fit the table. These latter are more satisfactory.

The flowers and the lighting play a large part in the beauty and adornment of the table. A low arrangement of flowers is best. Tall bouquets keep the guests dodging to see one another's faces.

As for lighting—well, for me, one candle makes a party. If I walk into a dining room where candles are burning on the table—immediately I am Cinderella. I don't care what happens at twelve o'clock. Now I am at the ball.

Two candelabra at either end of the table, or four candlesticks set rather wide apart, light the small table well and lend that soft mellow glow which loosens the tongue and makes all women beautiful.

Among the many attractive candlesticks are those of plain clear glass with a square, solid base. Silver candlesticks are especially desirable, and bronze are equally good though rather heavy in appearance for the table. The little flickering glow is very lovely, and is preferred to the shaded light. The candles and stick must be tall enough to bring the flame above the level of the eye.

Candle shades, if used, should harmonize with other decorations. They may be made at home and most inexpensively. One can have a dozen sets at the cost of the frames only. And the frames may be bought at the tencent store.

Planting First Garden

There will be a number of city-bred folks who will enjoy the suburbs for the first time this year. Of course they will have a garden, and the main thing to remember in this important matter is in deciding the location of same. If possible select a stretch of land with a southern exposure and plant the rows north and south unless you are on a hillside. If planted east and west the rows will shade one another, when the plants are a few inches high.

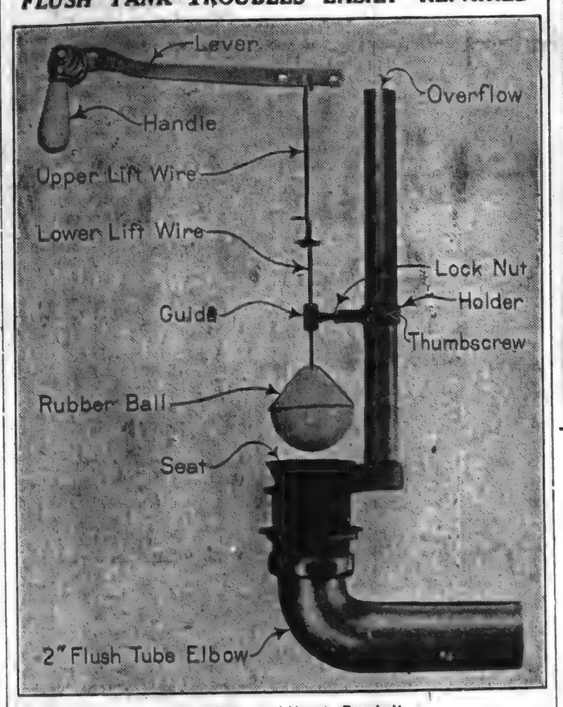
FLUSH TANK TROUBLES EASILY REPAIRED



Flush Valve and How to Repair It.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Very often trouble in the flush tank of the toilet may be easily located by a member of the family and corrected at little cost without sending for a plumber, says the United States Department of Agriculture.

Probably no other plumbing in the home needs attention so often as the flush valve. It is under water and subject to fouling and neglect. The hollow rubber ball gets out of shape and fails to drop squarely into the hollowed seat. The handle and lever fail to work smoothly or the lift wires get out of plumb, causing the ball to remain up when it should drop to its seat. To remove these difficulties, stop inflow to the tank by holding up the float of the ball cock or supporting it with a stick. Drain the tank by raising the rubber ball. If the ball is worn, out of shape, or has lost its elasticity, unscrew the lower lift wire from the ball and replace with a new one. A two and one-half-inch rubber ball costs about 25 cents, and a new one should always be kept in the home. The lift wires should be straight and plumb. The lower lift wire is readily centered over the center of the valve by means of the adjustable guide holder. By loosening the thumbscrew, the holder is raised, lowered, or rotated about the overflow tube. By loosening the lock nut and turning the guide screw, the horizontal position of the guide is fixed exactly over the center of the valve. These adjustments are very important. The upper lift wire should loop into the lever arm hole nearest to a vertical from the center of the valve. A tank should empty within ten seconds. Owing to lengthening of the rubber ball and insufficient rise from its seat, the time may be longer than ten seconds with a correspondingly weak flush. This trouble may be overcome by shortening the loop in the upper lift wire. A drop or two of lubricating oil on the lever mechanism makes it work more smoothly.

SEVERAL KINDS OF SMALL TEA CAKES

Good Plan to Have on Hand Few Tempting Goodies.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Are cookies and little cakes popular in your household? Whether you put up many school lunches or have people dropping in frequently for a sociable afternoon call, you have no doubt found it a sensible plan to keep a few tempting goodies on hand to add to sandwiches or afternoon tea.

Here are four quite different kinds of small cakes, any of which can be easily made at home. The first kind, "rocks," may be made in fairly large quantities, because they keep well. They should be kept in tight tin or glass containers. The date bars also should be kept in a tight container. Chocolate drop cakes will be found popular with the children for their lunch boxes, especially if spread while hot with a thin coating of white or chocolate icing. This may be cooked or made of confectioner's sugar. Any sort of flaked breakfast food may be used for the macaroons. All four recipes have been tested by the bureau of home economics.

Chocolate-Drop Cookies.

⅓ cupful butter	1½ cupfuls flour
1 cupful of sugar (white or brown)	2 teaspoonfuls of baking powder
1 egg	¼ teaspoonful of salt
½ cupful milk	1 cupful chopped nuts
2 squares chocolate (melted)

Melt the chocolate and add the butter and sugar. Add the egg without beating and the milk. Use two tablespoonfuls of the flour to coat the chopped nuts. Then add the nuts and the sifted dry ingredients to the liquid mixture. Stir this thoroughly and add the vanilla. Drop the batter by teaspoonfuls on a greased baking sheet or an ordinary baking pan inverted. Bake in a quick oven (about 375 to 400 degrees Fahrenheit).

Rocks.

1½ cupfuls light-brown sugar	1 teaspoonful of cinnamon
1 cupful butter	2 cupfuls raisins, chopped
2 eggs, well beaten	1 cupful English walnut meats, chopped
½ teaspoonful soda in a little hot water	½ teaspoonful of salt
2¾ cupfuls flour

Cream the butter and sugar, add the eggs. Sift the dry ingredients, reserving some flour to roll the raisins and nuts. Mix all together, place by teaspoonfuls on a greased pan and bake in a hot oven. As flour varies so much it would be wise to bake a sample, and if it runs add from one-eighth to one-quarter cupful more flour. Sometimes, however, when drop cakes spread out too much in baking, the fault is that the oven is not hot enough rather than that the mixture is too soft. Drop cakes need a rather hot oven so that they set quickly, and hold their shape. Then they do not melt and spread out very flat. Drop cakes also bake better on a baking sheet without high sides or on an inverted pan.

Date Bars.

3 eggs, beaten	ing powder
1 cupful sugar	1 cupful of nut meats, chopped
¼ teaspoonful salt	1¼ cupfuls pitted dates
1 cupful flour
1 teaspoonful bak-

Stone and chop the dates. Mix the ingredients in the order given. Bake in greased shallow tins in a slow oven (300 to 350 degrees Fahrenheit). When cool, cut in bars and roll in granulated or powdered sugar. Add more dates if the bars are to be kept for some time.

Macaroons.

2 egg whites	¼ teaspoonful of salt
1 cupful sugar	1 cupful shredded coconut
2 cupfuls of a flaked, toasted breakfast food	Almond flavoring

Beat the egg whites with the salt until stiff. Add the sugar and beat thoroughly. Fold in the cocoanut, and toasted flakes which have been crushed in the hands. Add the flavoring. Place with a teaspoon on oiled paper and bake in a moderate oven for 18 to 20 minutes, or until delicately browned and well set. This recipe makes about two dozen macaroons.

Reliable Recipe Given for Lemon Pie Filling

Here's a reliable recipe for lemon pie filling. Mix three tablespoonfuls of cornstarch with one cupful of cold water and one-eighth teaspoonful salt, place over the fire and stir constantly until thickened and the cornstarch thoroughly cooked—about ten minutes. Add three-fourths cupful of sugar, four tablespoonfuls lemon juice, grated rind of half a lemon, one tablespoonful butter and three egg yolks well beaten. Cook for one or two minutes over steam. Pour into a cooked pastry shell and cover with a meringue made by thoroughly beating the egg whites and adding the sugar and a little salt. Bake at a low temperature (250 degrees Fahrenheit) for 20 minutes, then raise the temperature until the meringue is a light brown.

Using Waffle Iron

An electric waffle iron should never be greased. If your waffles stick perhaps you have not put enough melted butter or other shortening into the batter. One or two extra tablespoonfuls of melted shortening in the batter will often keep waffles from sticking in an electric iron. Also when the waffle is brown and crisp and ready to take out of the iron, thrust a fork firmly into it and lift the waffle straight up. If you work around the edges with a knife attempting to loosen it in that way, the waffle will break and be almost impossible to use out whole.

GIRLS' WASH-GOODS FROCKS; SHORT JACKET FOR MATRON

IT IS the mood of the mode that the once-upon-a-time "simple" washable daytime frock be now styled to the point of distinction. One cannot slight in the making either school dress or house frock of cotton weave though it be, and expect to remain in the good graces of Dame Fashion nowadays.

The new washable materials themselves are a very challenge "to do and to dare," in their fashioning. There are, for example, the new charmeuse prints. It takes an expert to distinguish them from the genuine jacquard silk—and they can be made up every whit as effectively. And how beautifully they do emerge from a tubbing, just like new! The "last word" in fashiondom are the very tiny allover prints.

Distinctive Wash Frock.

Speaking of a better styling for wash goods, why need sweet Miss Sixteen or younger or older ever bemoan the lack of a silken frock when a gingham can be fashioned as adorably as is the one in this picture! Yes, this is really and truly just a "simple gingham," endorsed by the Fashion Art League of America as demonstrating the possibilities as to what can and should be accomplished in the styling of washable cotton weaves. The idea of trimming prints and ginghams with organdie is very popular this season. Just how prettily this may be done is told in this picture. The forearm puff on the sleeve of organdie is banded with the gingham and there is a deep cape collar of the organdie dropping from the neckline at the back.

It is already apparent that much interest will be forthcoming in fine wash goods this spring and summer. A favored material is flowered dimity. Exquisitely sheer printed voiles also promise a tremendous vogue.

All-black or black with white and strictly tailored, briefly yet definitely describes a smart matron mode, as Paris sees it for early spring. The new short-jacket types carry special appeal, some of them handsomely trimmed with sleek flat fur, preferably broadtail or calfskin, the latter spotted in black and white.

Exquisitely textured twills, lusterless suede-finished cloths, broadcloth with a satiny sheen and what is of decided interest this spring, heavy bengaline or faille silk, these are mediums favored for the matronly tailleur. To this list for summer wear must be added georgette, for the tailleur of sheer firm fabric gives promise of a successful vogue. Even now it is being exploited throughout notable French style exhibits. These georgette suits are handsome in all-black.

An Easter-day ensemble-ideal for the matron is pictured in the foreground of this picture. Suede-finished cloth is the chosen medium for this handsome tailleur. Black-and-white spotted calfskin faces the coat revers. Not only is the suit itself 100 per cent perfect in its minutest detail, but from the crown of madam's head to the tip of her toes not a proper accessory is missing.

Dignity and good style are bespoken in the tall-crowned fine black felt chapeau which tops this costume. The tiny white-wing trimming carries out the black-and-white theme in harmony with the black-and-white spots of the calfskin which faces the coat. The separate fur neckpiece smartly answers the call of the mode.

Charming Frocks for the Matron.

Very good style, too, for the matron is a short-jacket suit of gray or beige covert cloth, fashioned after the model shown to the left in the picture.

FAMOUS MINING STRIKES

By THOMAS E. STEWARD

The Comstock Lode

WHEN John C. Fremont, afterwards the first candidate for president of the youthful Republican party, passed overland through the Sierras to California his guide was the redoubtable Kit Carson. Carson was one of the most famous of all the old frontiersmen, and it was in his honor that the Carson valley of Nevada was named. In this valley soon after Freemont's trip there came to light one of the richest strikes of mineral treasure the world has ever known. It was the famous Comstock lode, which produced millions in wealth and established the fortune of many families still prominent.

Fremont made his trip in 1844. It was five years later, in 1849, that the great rush to California's newly discovered gold fields began, and it was the pull of the California gold that caused the first discoverer of the great Carson valley treasure to leave it for what he hoped would be better in the Golden state. This man was William Prouse, a young Mormon, who stopped in the Carson valley on his way West. He used a milk pan to wash out what looked like promising "pay dirt," and the results were far from discouraging. But he gave up the reality for hopes of richer strikes farther on. Yet news of this strike spread. Next year a party of Mexicans put in an appearance and spent several months washing gold until their supplies gave out.

By then the place had been named Gold canyon, but there was no realization that it was to reveal an almost incredible wealth, partly in gold, but chiefly in silver.

One day a miner by the name of James Finney uncovered a more profitable claim than usual. Soon after a wandering Canadian by the name of Henry Comstock took a claim near Finney's.

In May, 1859, Patrick O'Loughlin and Peter O'Riley staked a claim near those of Finney and Comstock and immediately realized that they had made their fortunes. A black and crumbly kind of ore with which neither of them was familiar crumbled into gold in their hands and their crude rocker-type washers showed heavy deposits of precious metal after every load had been washed. They had made the big strike. But no sooner had they gone to work in dead earnest than Comstock reappeared and on the flimsiest basis demanded a share in their claim on a technicality having to do with the claim he had staked out. This they granted. In this way it came about that Comstock's name went down into history as that of the famous Comstock lode, though he did not discover it and was let into the final strike on a basis that looked extremely flimsy, more because the discoverers feared to lose all of such a rich claim and yielded without argument.

When the crumbly black gold was taken to San Francisco for a scientific analysis it was proved to have a yield of $3,000 a ton of ore in silver and $876 in gold, something never matched elsewhere. All who staked claims along the famous lode became wealthy in jig-time except those who sold out at relatively low prices to pocket a quick profit.

The Gold of Japan

UP TO relatively modern days gold was a rarity in Japan. Considerable supplies were obtained from river gravels, and some from quartz deposits that were crushed and panned out in the way placer gold would be washed from sand, but the country's needs for monetary purposes and for royalty made it necessary to restrict the use of gold by private persons.

The old-fashioned mining operations in Japan were paid for in a remarkable manner. Laborers employed to wash the gravel did not receive any pay at all, on the theory that enough gold would adhere to their clothes to repay them for their effort. And seemingly this was true. At any rate the mining continued and the lack of payment persisted for many, many years.

In the early days after the opening of Japan to westerners there was a belief that tremendous amounts of gold were to be found in that land. This fallacy had its roots in the fact that in Japan there were many "golden" ornaments in temples and palaces which were not, however, true gold, but copper covered with gold by an extremely clever process originated by the Japanese and still in use in that country.

The Japanese "plating" process was really one of amalgamation rather than of actual plating as it is done today. The copper base was heated after having been immersed in plum vinegar to clean it thoroughly. When the copper was still hot, mercury was placed on it, forming an amalgamated surface. Gold leaf was then placed over the mercury, and the whole object heated to a still higher point to get rid of the mercury. The gold then remained in a rather thorough mixture with the surface of the copper. Plating of this kind is said to have been extremely durable. Many statues so coated hundreds of years ago are still in about as good condition as when they were new.

PULLING TOO QUICK

One of the old time anglers, who has had a lot of experience, says: "MORE THAN A MILLION FISH ARE LOST EVERY YEAR BY PULLIN' TOO QUICK."

It is a good deal that way with an account at the bank, it shouldn't be pulled to quick. Let it grow. Try to add to it. Then when of sufficient size, invest it in some reliable security and start in again.

That is the way fortunes are started.

OUR BANK will safeguard your funds and advise you to investments.

CONFIDENCE IS WHAT COUNTS.

The St. Joe Valley Bank, A STATE BANK

USES OF CREDIT

The business of the world is run on credit. Firms and individuals buy from each other on time; after they have received the goods they pay the bills. A firm goes to the bank and discounts its note to meet unexpected expenses or to tide over when collections are slow—and it is said to be good business. But when an ordinary person starts in to do the same thing a hundred people will shout from every corner that he is all wrong and that he is doomed to bankruptcy.

We have heard conservative St. Joe men argue that no ordinary person should get credit; that he should save up enough to pay cash for what he wants and not mortgage the future with what he has now by buying on credit. In other words, they contend that business and personal finances should not be on different planes. But we don't believe it. Going into debt in excess is, of course, very bad. But used in moderation credit is a fine thing because it enables a person to save and enjoy having things when, under a voluntary system of saving, he would not have the will power to go through with. If a man knows he has to save to meet his bills, he saves. He also learns, if he is the right kind of a man, that his credit in the community is just the same as money in his pocket, and for that reason he is careful to meet his obligations so as to always keep that credit good. There is such a thing as credit abuse—lots of people show themselves unintitled to credit. But for the man who is honest, nothing better has ever been invented.

NOTICE OF THE SALE OF REAL ESTATE

State of Indiana
County of DeKalb, ss:
In the DeKalb Circuit Court April Term, 1927.
In the matter of the estate of Day Wyatt, deceased.

The undersigned, Administrator of the estate of Day Wyatt, deceased, hereby gives notice that as such Administrator, he will on Friday, the 13th day of May, 1927, at the law office of Henry C. Springer at Butler, Indiana, at the hour of one P. M. on said day and from day to day thereafter until sold, offer for sale at private sale at not less than the full appraised value thereof the real estate belonging to the decedent at the time of his death and located and being in DeKalb County, Indiana, to-wit:

The northwest quarter of the northeast quarter of section two (2) in township thirty-three (33) north, range fourteen (14) east, said real state to be sold pursuant to the order of the DeKalb Circuit Court for the purpose of paying the debts and liabilities of said estate and upon the following terms and conditions, to-wit: At least one-third of the purchase price, cash in hand, one-third of the purchase price in six months, and one-third thereof in twelve months from the date of sale, all deferred payments to be evidenced by the notes of the purchaser, without relief from valuation or appraisement laws, with attorney fees, and payable in bank, and in all respects fully negotiable; the said notes given for said deferred payments to be secured by a first mortgage upon said real estate, to be executed by the said purchaser, his or her spouse joining therein, and said notes to bear interest at the rate of six per cent per annum from date; the purchaser to have the right to pay the entire purchase price in cash at his option.

Said sale will be subject to the approval of the DeKalb Circuit Court of Indiana, and the right is reserved by the undersigned Administrator to reject any and all offers.

Said sale of real estate will be made subject to the rights of the tenant having out crops and further subject to all current taxes on the said real estate for the year of 1927, due and payable in 1928, which said taxes the purchaser shall assume in said sale and conveyance of said real estate.

Attorney for Administrator. 15t3.

The Swamp

The swamp glowed like a turkey carpet. The cranberry vines and huckleberry bushes were pure crimson, the black alder berries scarlet, and the ferns burnt orange. Just beyond us, in the velvet of the swamp, was a pond, across which the wind rumbled; living blue, with tawny rushes around it.—Rosalind Richards, in "A Northern Countryside."

DAILY VACATION BIBLE SCHOOL ASSURED

For sometime our Township Sunday School Educational Superintendent and Directors have been working on plans for a Daily Vacation Bible School for Concord Township, and at this time they have nearly completed the arrangements for the first school of this kind ever held in this locality.

The purpose of this school is to educate the children by bible stories, memory verses and object lessons. Mrs. L. E. Nicholson, of Garrett has been hired as principal to be assisted by one teacher from each Sunday School in the township.

This school will be held in the St. Joe school house. The first hour of each session will be held in the community building then each teacher will have charge of their classes in the school building. Every child from four to twelve years of age is urged to attend.

The solicitors who made the survey of the township may have called and you were not at home, but if you have a child in the home please see that they are in this school the first Monday in May. It will continue for three weeks, five days in a week and three hours in the forenoon.

This school will be financed by one of our local organizations.

Enrollment up to this time is sixty members.

Mrs. Nicholson will meet all the teachers and workers of this school April 29, at the school house at 9 A. M.

CAPACITY HOUSE HEAR EASTER CANTATA

The rendering of the Easter Cantata, "Crown Him Prince of Peace," by the Choral Society at the Methodist Church, Sunday evening, was greeted with a full house, and all were well pleased with the production. This is an annual event in the life of the organization and the people always give a ready response to the program.

The program was in two parts depicting the crucifiction and resurrection. The personnel of the chorus for this year is:—

Soprano—Avis Staman, Jean Curie, Gertrude Borthwick, Dorothy Scholes, Edna Perkins and Emma Jane Gallahan.

Alto—Pauline Jordan, Josie Baltz and Edith Cole.

Tenor—Garth Shull, Donald Kinsey, Glen Hart and Merritt Sechler.

Bass—Elgin Curie, R. L. Case, Frank Baltz and William Staman.

The officers of the organization are:—

President, William Staman; Vice president, Glen Hart; Secretary-treasurer, Pauline Jordan; Accompanist, Lora Leighty; Director, C. A. Woodcox.

OBITUARY

Harlow Ulm, son of Nelson and Elvira Ulm, was born November 30, 1849 at Cedar Creek, DeKalb County, Indiana, and departed this life April 14, 1927, at the age of 77 years, 4 months and 14 days. His death was caused by heart trouble and he died at the home of his nephew, John E. Ulm.

He was united in marrige twice. His first marriage was to Lucinda Buchanan in 1875. To this union two children were born, both having died in infancy. When the second child was born, both mother and child passed away.

His second marriage was to Margaret J. Reed, December 15, 1887, who survives him.

Brother Ulm was one of a family of ten children who have all preceded him in death but one brother, Emanuel Ulm, of Spencerville. He is survived by ten nephews and four nieces, one step-daughter, Mrs. Samuel McNally, of Adrian, Mich.

Brother Ulm was a resident of this community practically all his life. He united with the Methodist Church of St. Joe, January 6, 1912 by confession of faith and later with the Lutheran Church. He was an honest and industrious worker and gained many friends by his conscientious life. He lived in this life the best he could and by the testimonial of his closing years he died in the Lord. "And I heard a voice from heaven saying unto me write, Blessed are the dead that died in the Lord from henceforth: Yea saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors and their works do follow them."

The funeral was held from the Lutheran Church, Saturday afternoon at 2:00 o'clock, Rev. J. F. McKnight, officiating. Burial in Riverside cemetery, E. R. Kinsey, funeral director.

CARD OF THANKS

We, the relatives, and especially those of the home in which he died wish to express our sincere thanks for the kindness and help during his sickness and death and for the beautiful floral tributes.

Mr. and Mrs. E. Ulm,
Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Ulm, Family.

Parent-Teacher Association

The last meeting of the P. T. A. for this year was well attended and a good interest manifested. The orchestra ensemble furnished fine music throughout the program. The readings by Basil Sheffer and Ronald Borthwick were well delivered and received hearty applause.

Mrs. F. R. Bowman gave a talk on "Aims of the P. T. A." and she took Article II of the National P. T. A. By-laws for the foundation of her remarks. Article II is as follows: (1) To promote child welfare in home, school, church and community; to raise the standards of home life; to secure more adequate laws for the care and protection of women and children. (2) To bring into closer relation the home and the school, that parents and teachers may co-operate intelligently in the training of the child; and to develope between educators and the general public such united efforts as will secure for every child the highest advantages in physical, mental, moral and spiritual education.

Officers of our P. T. A. were urged to plan a definite program of usefulness and among other things suggested for next year was beautifying our school ground with ornamental trees and shrubbery.

Mr. Derwood Ridgway presented a plan to the P. T. A. whereby they might financially assist the Vacation Bible School which is being arranged for this township. Mr. F. B. Leighty, County Chairman of Religious Education, expressed his pleasure on finding that the P. T. A. could co-operate along this line and urged the acceptance of this opportunity, to be of real service to children by helping to establish a Christian citizenship. The retiring president, Ralph Sechler, also said he was heartily in sympathy with the plan and that he would be glad if the P. T. A. funds were applied in this worthy movement. A motion was made and carried that the executive committee apply whatever funds they may desire to help finance the Vacation Bible School.

The following officers were elected for the coming year:

President—Derwood Ridgway.

First Vice Pres.—Principal of Schools.

Second Vice Pres.—Mrs. Marie Draggoo.

Secretary—Teacher of 3rd and 4th Grades.

Treasurer—Merritt Maxwell.

After adjournment we enjoyed a pot-luck supper in the Domestic Science room. During the social hour there were many who expressed appreciation of the school exhibit held during theday. It was exceptionally good this year and parents are pleased that our children have had the privilege of having able instructors.

Also many people said they had a better understanding and a renewed enthusiasm for Parent-Teacher work. The past year has been very successful in many ways and the programs have all been carefully planned. There is a strong foundation laid for the P. T. A. for next year.

One of the most successful and important activities of this P. T. A. is the hot lunch served each noon to school children at a small cost. Mrs. H. M. Widney, chairman of this committee, reports that this year has been very satisfactory not only from the point of service to the children but also financially for there is a surplus of a few dollars in the hot lunch fund. Quite a number of people donated food stuffs and work to help this worthy movement and the hot lunch comittee desires to publicly extend thanks and appreciation. Aside from donations the hot lunch has been self supporting.

The lunch has been under the direct supervision of the Domestic Science teacher, Mrs. Ima Bray Miser. She was assisted by Mrs. Roy Koch and many compliments have been heard concerning Mrs. Koch's culinary ability and her geniality in the lunch room. Mrs. Miser and Mrs. Koch are popular with the children and they have earned it. May the hot lunch be continued next year.

BAKE SALE

The Lutheran Aid Society will hold a bake sale, hot noodles and oher god things, Saturday, commencing at 0 o'clock, in the J. P. Buckingham Meat Market. 16t1.

A grafter by any other name would still be a thief.

A young minister, attracted by Sister Grace, was dining with the family. Little Sister was talking rapidly when the minister was about to ask the blessing, so, turning to the child, he said in a tone of mild reproof—"Laura, I am going to ask grace."

"Well, it's about time," answered Little Sister in an equally reproving tone. "We've been expecting you to ask her for a year and she has too."

There's a joker in the "cheap" paint can!

"Cheap" paint looks like paint and smells like paint—and the low price seems to be attractive. But here is the two-sided "joker."

A gallon covers only about half the area covered by SWP House Paint — a strictly quality paint. Nearly twice as many gallons are needed. Figure that out and the low price isn't low at all.

Then it lasts only about half as long on the house—needs to be renewed oftener—costs over twice as much per year as SWP.

Come in. Let us tell you the whole story about real paint economy. We will save you money.

GUARANTEED!

SWP House Paint is guaranteed to look better, last longer, cost less per job and less per year than any house paint on the market.

"Kitchen-Kook" Cook with Gas!

KITCHENKOOK brings to rural and suburban homes and city homes outside the gas limits, every convenience of city gas. In fact it is a gas stove, with its own gas plant built right into it. Makes and burns its own gas from common gasoline, producing the fastest known cooking fire. KITCHENKOOK is different from any stove you have ever used. It has all the fine features of gas with none of the objectionable features of common liquid fuel stoves; no wicks or chimneys; no smoke, soot or kerosene odor. Takes less than a minute to light; then all burners are ready at once. Turn them on or off as wanted, just like gas. KITCHENKOOK is the biggest improvement in fine cook stoves in the past quarter century. It's the sensation of the industry. Don't fail to ask for a demonstration of this wonder cook stove. Made in 16 attractive models.

New Home Acquired by the Spanish Embassy

The Spanish government has purchased the home at 2701 Sixteenth street, Washington, D. C., built in 1922 by Mrs. John B. Henderson. Mrs. Henderson offered this house to the United States government as a home for the vice president, but congress declined the offer. The house is said to have cost more than $500,000.

Crookedest Road in the United States

This is known as the crookedest highway in the United States, there being 56 curves or turns to make in a distance of two and one-half miles. The photograph only shows the turns possible to photograph. It goes up a hill 1,200 feet from Mary Hill, Wash., to Goldendale. Some people, especially women, get seasick riding on this road.

Indians Had the Orpheus Legend

Dr. J. Walter Fewkes, chief of the bureau of American ethnology of the Smithsonian institution in Washington, is shown holding a unique piece of prehistoric Indian pottery which was found near Mesa Verde, Colo, and which is estimated to be over 1,500 years old. The decoration on the inside base of the bowl tells a story similar to the Orpheus legend of Greek mythology. According to Doctor Fewkes, this decoration has been unknown hitherto in Indian pottery.

Headquarters of G. W. Restored

The original architecture of George Washington's headquarters at Valley Forge has just been restored. Large sums of money have been spent by the Valley Forge park commission in restoring the stone pointing, trellis, gardens and flowers, and enclosing the headquarters with the original type of whitewash fence.

HE'S NOT CHINESE

Representative-elect Tom Yon of Florida has come in for a great deal of joshing because of his Chinese-sounding name. He takes it good-naturedly, but wants it known for once and all that he was born and raised in Florida and is a 100 per cent American.

HERO OF NANKING

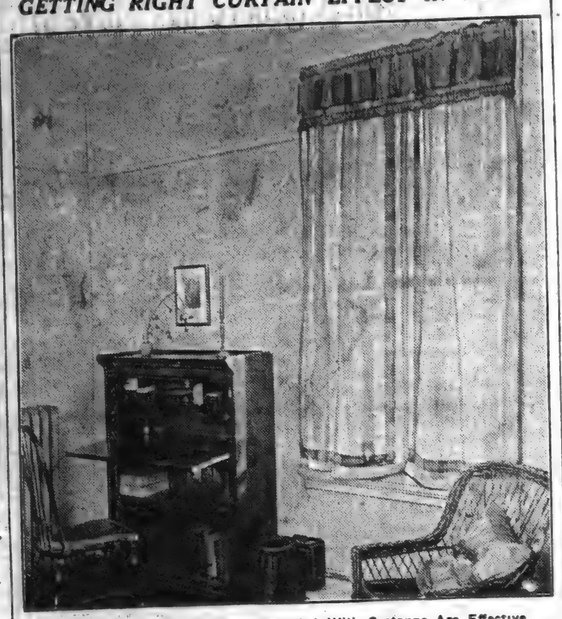
How About This, Educators

Here's a radical idea. Listen to J. V. C.: "The more a woman knows the less sense she has, as she never reasons well and a little reasoning destroys the faculty of intuition." To put it in other words: Education is bad for women because their gain in reasoning power is more than offset by the loss of their strongest and most useful faculty, intuition. We don't believe it!—Boston Transcript.

GETTING RIGHT CURTAIN EFFECT IN ROOM



Curtains of Theatrical Gauze Banded With Cretonne Are Effective.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

That there is a time and place for everything is indeed a trite saying, but even so it needs to be remembered when curtains are under consideration. Some rooms call for one effect and some for another, and success goes to the homemaker who gets the right curtain effect in the room where it belongs.

For example, large, pompous rooms demand heavy velours and tapestry, but a timid little room simply cringes when heavy velours and velvets are forced upon it. There are rooms where even the gay and ubiquitous cretonne is not satisfactory. This will be found true especially in dark rooms with few windows or where the windows are overshadowed by a porch.

Bring Out a Dark Room.

Nothing can be done to bring a dark room out of its glowering gloom unless the walls are painted or papered a light creamy yellow—the most luminous of colors. This done, the windows are easy. First, forget that overdraperies exist and that you and your neighbor have always thought them an essential part of a good looking window. Then plan a scheme by which glass curtains can be effectively used alone.

In a living room or dining room a really deep cream or ecru marquisette would be interesting with applied items or deep blue and with a full valance of the same material also hemmed with blue. A more pretentious effect could be achieved by using silk gauze with ruffles of taffeta in contrasting color. It must be remembered that curtains of that type must be dry cleaned. One of the secrets of attractive windows without overdraperies is to have the curtains full—skimpiness cannot be forgotten or forgiven.

Effective Treatment.

The illustration, taken by the United States Department of Agriculture, shows an effective treatment much like those suggested. The material is theatrical gauze and the bands a striped cretonne. Additional dignity is given by having a rod in the hems of the valance at top and bottom.

Instead of using bands the valance alone may be cretonne and if the glass curtains are ruffled tie-backs the tie-backs should also be cretonne. In the bedroom one of the newest ideas is to hang a voile or marquisette panel with a ruffle at the bottom over the glass. Then at each side arrange ruffled tie-backs of the same material just as though they were heavy over-draperies. One charming treatment of this kind was in the home of a young bride. The curtain across the glass was a soft delectable pink and the voile curtains at each side were printed with little pink nosegays and ruffled in plain pink.

POKE SHOOTS MAKE EXCELLENT GREENS

Take Care Not to Cut Any of Underground Part.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Do you know poke shoots, or poke salad as they are sometimes called? Perhaps as a child you made "ink" from the dark purple berries of the poke weed and stained your hands and clothes and were warned by your parents of the poison in the juice. It is true that the berries of the poke weed are poisonous and should never be tasted or eaten. The tender pink and green shoots of the poke weed that come up in the spring contain none of this poisonous matter, however, and are highly prized for greens in many localities. Some people call them poor man's asparagus. They do have the same kind of succulent texture and fresh earthy flavor. You may be able to find the poke weed growing wild in a near-by field or perhaps in a corner of your garden. In cutting the shoots, you will find the small pink ones best but you may also take the tips of the half-grown stalks. Do not use the larger green leaves for they will be bitter. In cutting the shoots take care not to include any of the underground part of the plant, for the root is exceedingly poisonous. Also be sure that you are cutting the true poke weed. There is one variety sometimes called Indian poke which is poisonous in all its parts.

If poke weed does not grow wild in your locality, perhaps marsh marigold or cowslip does. That makes the best of all greens, some people think. With others, lamb's quarters or wild dandelion is the favorite. You may have in your garden an abundance of turnip or mustard tops, young beet greens, kale, spinach, or perhaps so much lettuce that you can use it for cooked greens. Try the poke shoots, however, if they are available. They go particularly well with ham.

Poke shoots have a slightly pungent or bitter flavor which is disliked if too strong. It is customary, therefore, to cook them for three or four minutes in boiling water as you would any other vegetable, and then drain them and put them on to cook again in fresh boiling water, lightly salted. Young poke shoots are fairly uniform in size and are handled more easily if they are tied together in a bundle like asparagus. Poke shoots are best if seasoned simply with butter and like asparagus may be served on toast.

If mustard, turnip, lamb's-quarters, marsh marigold, or beet tops are used instead of poke they are chopped finely and cooked the shortest possible time in very little water. A hard cooked egg may be used to give a decorative note and add to the food value, or if you have an abundance of garden lettuce, shred it, stir it up with melted butter in a heavy skillet, cover, let it steam and cook slowly for four to ten minutes, and sprinkle lightly with salt before serving. Romaine lettuce is especially good for cooking, because it hold its shape and does not wilt down so completely as the softer kinds of garden lettuce.

Hot Sauces for Desserts Given a Festive Touch

Many desserts are given a festive touch by the addition of a hot sweet sauce. Chocolate and butterscotch are two of the best-liked of these hot sauces. Either may be used in such desserts as ice cream, custards, blanc mange, steamed or baked puddings or on cake. The directions for making these sauces are furnished by the bureau of home economics.

Butterscotch Sauce.

1 cup boiling water	2 tablespoons butter
1 cup brown sugar	½ teaspoon salt
2 tablespoons flour	½ teaspoon vanilla
Speck of cinnamon

To the boiling water add the brown sugar, flour, salt and cinnamon, which have been thoroughly mixed together. Cook until the flour has lost its taste and the mixture thickens, stirring continually to prevent lumping and sticking. Beat in the butter and the vanilla.

This quantity is sufficient for seven to fourteen servings.

Chocolate Sauce.

2 squares unsweetened chocolate	1 tablespoon butter
1 cup granulated sugar	½ teaspoon salt
½ cup milk	½ teaspoon vanilla

Place the chocolate and sugar over steam to melt and continue to heat until the sugar is dissolved. Add milk, salt and butter and leave over steam for ten minutes longer, then beat, add vanilla and serve hot over ice cream or cake.

Valuable Mineral Salts

Cooking does not destroy the valuable mineral salts found in many fresh vegetables. Some of them, however, are dissolved in the liquid in which vegetables are cooked, and it is therefore important that this pot liquor be served. Mild-flavored vegetables may be steamed, boiled in very little water, or cooked a short time in milk so that the amount of liquid to serve with the vegetable is small. The larger amount of water from the cooking of the strong-flavored vegetables may be saved for soup or used in thickened gravies and sauces.

Tinting Tips

(Copyright 1927)

Here's the secret of giving lingerie, stockings, etc., the most gorgeous tints. All tints are really colors. So use real dyes. Get an envelope of the actual dye powder at any drug store, for fifteen cents. Do your own diluting, which saves money and gives you the exact shade you want.

Diamond dyes do perfectly beautiful tinting—in cold water. A dip, and it's done. And true dyes don't streak! Dye-tinting doesn't look weak, however delicate a tone you use; nor does it wash out unevenly. When you want the tint to be permanent, just use boiling water instead of cold!

Regular dyeing of all dress materials, drapes, etc., just as easy. Ask druggist for color cards and suggestions. Or, a wealth of ideas in full colors, in new book Color Craft free and postpaid; write DIAMOND DYES, Dept. N30, Burlington, Vermont.

If it is Wall Paper or Paint Volmerdings Have It

We wish to call the attention of our readers again this year to VOLMERDING & SON AT AUBURN.

We wish to call your special attention to this establishment as they have in stock one of the largest diaplays of Wall Paper and Paints that includes every shade and color.

There are a number of establishments throughout the country that make it a point to carry a stock in this line that is good to look at but the "Quality Is Not There." We have heard a good many commendations from our readers who have patronized this store at Auburn in the past and it would be a hard task to try and have them go anywhere elae for their home decorations.

In this Large and Well Selected Stock of WALL PAPER you will find any design and Pattern you may wish. Here is the Cheapest Kitchen Paper to the most expensive Enamels, Holtsmeals and other imported papers and at prices that will stand competition.

In the PAINT DEPARTMENT you will find BURDSALL'S PAINTS of EVERY COLOR OR SHADE and they are GUARANTEED NOT TO CRACK OR PEEL. Their line of Oils, STAINS, and VARNISHES are the best that the market affords and here also you will be surprised at the price quoted and the amount that can be saved considering the quality given. They carry a large stock of Parabestos Roof paint of high quality. This paint can be used on any kind of roofs, metal, composition or slate and will not only lengthen the life of the old roof but help its appearance.

Mr. Volmerding, the manager is thoroughly up-to-date and efficient in regard to colors and shades that go to correspond with decorations of your home and he is never too busy to give you the benefit of years of experience that he hasacquired in his vocation.

This is the time of year when our homes need re-decorating and there is no firm better prepared to serve you than VOLMERDING & SON AT AUBURN, nor is there a man more versed in the art of home decorations than Mr. Volmerding, the manager.

We are pleased to be able to bring to the attention of our readers this store at Auburn in this our DeKalb County Farm Edition, and you will make no mistake in calling at their establishment and selecting your Wall Paper and Paints.

A Complete Banking System

Built on the solid rock of a sound financial policy, THE FIRST NATIONAL BANK at BUTLER has stodd as a "financial pillar" of this community. The policy of this bank has been shaped and directed by men in whom the people have always placed confidenc.

From the oranization of this bank it has always been spoken of as a "Bank of the People." This reputation is well merited. This bank has been strong and has never catered merely to capitalist or manufacturing interests. These accounts have been handled, to be sure, but it has at the same time been a Banking Institution for the Farmer, Workingman and the Small Merchant Who is Just Beginning.

The management of this banking Institution is in a large measure responsible for the fact that this Bank has been ready and willing to help any business, large or small, which by any justification merited help. The Directors and Employees of this Bank are courteous and obliging; they are anxious, and are there for the purpose of trying to help solve the personal problems of any and all of the patrons of this institution.

This readiness to accommodate the people of this community has increased the power and prestige of this bank among the financial institutions of this section of the State and Country.

THE FIRST NATIONAL BANK at Butler, has all the facilities for Banking found in a metropolitan bank. The most considerate service is given on all Checking Accounts. The officials who have charge of the Granting of Loans are considerate of the financial needs of any patron who may come for advice and aid.

A special feature of this Banking Institution is the Safety Deposit Box Department. This provides for the customers of the bank a place for the Safe Keeping of their Valuable Papers, Jewels and other articles which they do not wish to keep in their homes.

We are pleased in this DeKalb County Farm Edition to bring before our readers the FIRST NATIONAL BANK AT BUTLER as among our strong financial institutions and their Directors and Officials are men that are boosters for our community and are always back of every progressive project.

Keep Your Hens Laying

Science has added another convenience for the farmers of DeKalb and other adjoining counties; "The Chick Hatchery," operated by THE AUBURN HATCHERY, at Auburn, Phone 55M.

The farmer in raising chicks for market or home, runs no risk in the hatching. He can sell his eggs and buy the baby chicks. He sees what he buys and thereby can select "Strong Healthy Chicks." Then again he does not have to set one hen after another, at different times, but can "Get His Chicks from the Auburn Hatchery any day and just when they are wanted."

Another feature is the saving of time and trouble of setting hens and continually fighting lice, mites and other infections common to hen hatched chicks, where on the other hand Chicks Hatched at the AUBURN HATCHERY are Healthy and Free From All Vermin.

In this age of Science and Machinery every one should take advantage of every possible convenience and labor saving device that proves itself successful. This Hatchery saves labor and many steps for the farmer's wife, who in most cases is the one that has in charge the hatching and raising of the chicks. All the worry of eggs being broken during the period of setting and then only the hatching of a few is done away with by machinery.

As to the financial feature of having your chicks hatched by this firm. During the time required for hatching and brooding a hen will lay eggs to the value of $3.75. This Hatchery will hatch the eggs for you, saving the Care and Worry of Uncertainty of Hen Hatching.

Our older readers can remember the Cradle, then the Binder. The Scythe and then the Mower and many other imroved farm implements from time to time that helped to reduce the labor and expense of farming. Now today, THE AUBURN HATCHERY AT AUBURN is here to "Do the Hatcing and Keep the Hens Laying. Call them at AUBURN and have a talk with the management, who will gladly explain all details to you.

We are pleased to be able to bring before our readers this most up-to-date concern who are aiding in bringing DeKalb County to the fore as one of Indiana's largest poultry producing sections.

"LET GEORGE DO IT"

During the time that the ECONOMY DRY CLEANING COMPANY has been in the Dry Cleaning and Dyeing Business at Auburn, many others in the same line have come and gone, bue THE ECONOMY, by reason of the general excellence of their work, have continued to increase their business.

THE ECONOMY AT AUBURN is popular with all who have tried them, and that they put forth their best efforts is shown by the general satisfaction that is given in each case.

The establishment is splendidly equipped for all classes of Dry Cleaning, Dyeing, Repairing and Pleating of Ladies' Garments, and no work is too difficult to be handled in the most satisfactory manner.

A specialty is made of the Dyeing, Cleaning, Pressing and Pleating of Ladies' Garments, while they have a list of men for whom they do the same class of work, which includes every man in AUBURN and vicinity who cares anything at all about his appearance, for the pressing of garments at this establishment is "Always Correctly Done."

The Dry Cleaning System used at THE ECONOMY not only CLEANS your Clothes but Thoroughly Renovates them in the most sanitary manner.

They also turn them out in the Most Approved Style without the disagreeable odor that accompanied the work of so many dry cleaning establishments.

The latest cleaning and renovating machinery in their plant makes it possible for them to handle the most delicate fabrics and turn them out so that "They Look Like New." Bring your clothes to the ECONOMY, at Auburn; Robert Baker, at Hicksville; J. C. Hull or L. B. Meek, at St. Joe, and they will receive prompt attention. The Butler Cleaning Works at Butler is a branch of the Economy and all work sent them will receive good service.

This is a business that requires experience and the management only employs practical help. Their assistants are all able and efficient workmen who know their business thoroughly and thus you are assured the most satisfactory service.

The management are among Auburn's most prominent business men who are making many of our citizens present an excellent appearance.

SOME PRACTICAL HINTS ON CORN BORER CLEAN-UPS

By E. E. Stinson, Co. Agent

The season is very backward and many farmers are worried because they fear that they cannot comply by the rapidly approaching first of May.

We have often had bad seasons and the wide awake farmer has usually been able to get his crops out in good shape.

In travelling over the county, I have been impressed with the good spirit indicated among the farmers. They fully realize the importance of making the cleanup on a community basis. It does no good for most of the farmers to have every particle of corn stalk refuse cleaned up, while some careless "Ben Puttin' it Off" allows breeding stock of the pest to live over.

While the weather is bad, it is a good time to look after the plows and get the shares sharp. A dull share will not do a good job; it will dip in loose soil and not stay at proper depth in hard soil and as most fields have several kinds of soil a sharp share is very important. Better have extra shares on hand. Then no time need be lost while one set is being sharpened, the other will be in use.

See after the coulter. If it is worn too small or gets wobbly, better get a new one, it pays on Sulky plows; a coulter and jointer should both be used. A little care in proper adjustment will greatly improve the job.

Too many farmers have gotten into the habit o f thinking that any kind of a plow will do, because they could get the ground in order with discs and harrow, but a good seed bed depends first on good plowing. On ground that is of a sticky nature, such as gumbo or heavy clay, or, where cornstalks are very heavy, the stalks should be broken with a railroad rail or heavy pole and raked up clean and burned.

Some farmers object to this on account of the value of corn stalks as humus, but it may cost much more to pick off the stalks if they are not turned under, than what the stalks are worth as manure. They must be out of there, no matter how heavy, to comply with the regulations. With the very best plows in the hands of good farmers a perfect job might be done with the use of the wires, but carelessness is expensive.

Now is a good time to pick up the scattering stalks on ground that has been sown to wheat or already to oats.

Also, a splendid time to clean up about the barn yard and feed lot. A good plan is to haul these stalks into a pile away from a building in such a way that they will dry out, then burn the top off when they will burn. Dig up the pile frequently to let the air in and sprinkle crank oil on the pile. If a pile of old boards or chunks are laid down criss cross and the stalks piled on top of these, they will burn even if they are not entirely dry.

The cobs make valuable charcoal. Why buy charcoal in expensive hog tonics when good charcoal can be made out of the cobs and kill two birds with one stone. If the cobs are charred, the hogs will eat them all and they are good for the digestion.

In all of the territory traveled by the writer, has found every farmer glad to use every means to get the corn borer before the corn borer gets his corn and he has also found that there are some real plow experts, but they always have their plows sharp and in good shape.

Mr. Wesley Johnson in Troy township, using a walking plow with jointer and wire, is doing a very fine job. Calvin Kelham in Keyser township, using a tractor and 18 inch plow was also doing a splendid job in stalks getting about all out of sight.

Let us remember that reinbursement by the government will be allowed only when all regulations have been complied with and the biggest thing after all is to protect the future of corn production for the farmer.

No greater calamity could happen than to find so many corn borers that the crop after being practically laid by and all of the farmers work, seed and fertilizer tied up, then have nothing but a lot of trash for our trouble.

So for your own good, get rid of everything that might harbor a borer.

PURDUE REPORT SHOWS WINTER WHEAT BETTER

Condition 89 Per Cent Normal April 1, Compared With 73 Same Date Last Year

LaFayette, April 20.—Mild winter temperature, abundant moisture, combined with the advanced spring season, account for the condition of winter wheat in Indiana being 89 per cent of normal on April 1 as compared with 73 per cent last year and 76 per cent in December, according to figures released from the office of Miner M. Justin, agricultural statistician of the Purdue agriculture experiment station and United States department of agriculture. The average condition for 10 years has been 79.

The average condition of wheat for the United States April 1 was 34.5 per cent of normal, compared with 84.1 last year, 68.7 on April 1, 1925, and 79.8, the average condition for the past 10 years on April 1. There was an increase in condition from December 1, 1926, to April 1, this year, of 2.7 points, compared with an average decline in the past 10 years of 4.6 points between these dates.

Rye condition in Indiana is 88 per cent of normal as compared to 80 last April and 81 last December. The condition is 87 per cent of normal compared to 73 last year and a three-year average of 78.

On crop reporters' farms 78.5 per cent of the cows were in milk on April 1 and produced an average of 20.6 pounds of milk each. Production per farm was given as 86.6 pounds. The reporters show that on April 1, 59.5 per cent of hens produced eggs with an average production per farm of 72.

The wages of farm labor by the month with board averaged $36.50, compared with $36.00 last year. Without board the monthly average was $49.50 for April and $50.50 last year. Day wages with board averaged $2.15 this month and $2 a year ago and day wages without board were $2.75 this month and $2.65 a year ago. The supply of farm labor is now just equal to the damand where last year it was only 99 per cent of needs.

BOYS GET REFORMATORY SENTENCE

Terms of one to eight years in the reformatory were passed upon Olan Shank and William McCullough in the DeKalb circuit court Wednesday morning.

Shank and McCullough pleaded guilty to stealing chickens belonging to J. H. Stansbury of Wilmington township and Frank McCullough of Fairfield township. They also confessed to forging some checks. Judge Endicott advised them that they would have to make restitution to the victims of their thefts or he would recommend to the reformatory officials that they not be released at the expiration of their minimum terms.

A Bulwark of Protection

The strength of any community reats to a very great extent on the strength of its banks, fiduciary institutions, great monetary reservoirs from which come the currents which set in motion the wheels of productive energy and stimulate the sinews of trade and commerce. In Auburn and vicinity all classes of people are well cared for by THE CITY NATIONAL BANK, one of the soundest and safest financial institutions in the state, and one that has stood as a mighty "bulwark of protection" to the interests of the community for years.

This institution's building from a banking standpoint is complete in every particular and the officials of the bank have used every effort to make it practical and convenient, as well as artistic. The bank has had a wonderful growth during recent years.

A general business is done along safe and improved lines, accounts are opened for corporations and individuals, drafts and letters of credit in any part of the world are sold at lowest rates, commercial paper discounted and collections made for home and out of town clients. A large Savings Department is a feature; here also are Deposit Boxes for rent in the most modern equipped vaults. Through this bank's membership in the FEDERAL RESERVE BANKING SYSTEM and under government protection it is placed in the strongest position to take care of the requirements of all of its depositors, whether large or small, whether they keep checking or savings accounts and at the same time give them the most modern banking service.

They specialize in the highest type of Road and Municipal Bonds, as a Safe Investment, which are tax exempt and yield 4½ per cent and up. First Mortgage Bonds to yield 6½ per cent.

The modern business man before coming to a decision of an important proposition should consult his banker.

The proper handling of your affairs after you are gone is a very important proposition.

The judgment which was at your disposal during your life time is available to your heirs when this bank is named as Executor under your will. Their Trust Department invites your inquirers regarding any matter of Trust.

In this DeKalb County Farm Edition we wish to call our reader' attention to this strong and reliable financial institution, THE CITY NATIONAL BANK at AUBURN.

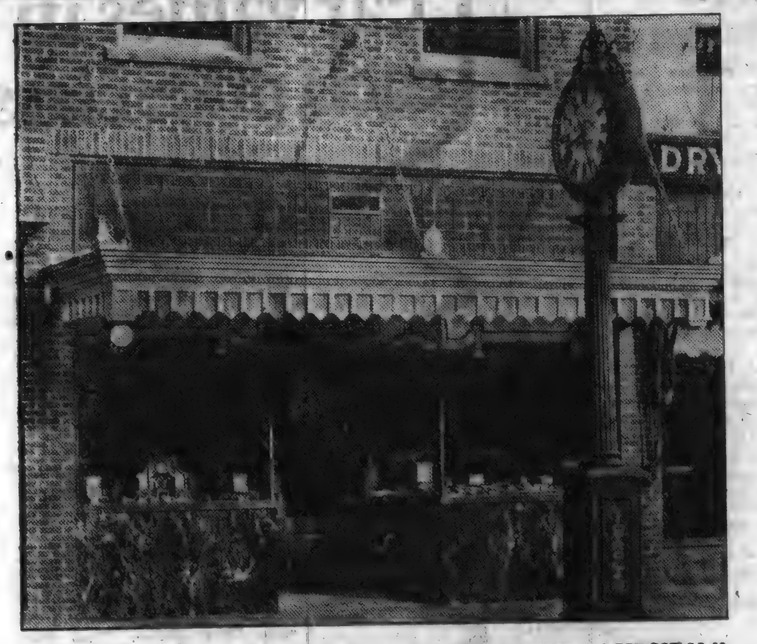
A Truly Beautiful Jewelry Store!



"LITTLE'S, THE JEWELRY STORE BEAUTIFUL, AUBURN."

Among the outstanding business houses of this section of Indiana, is LITTLE'S JEWELRY STORE AT AUBURN.

This exceptionally beautiful store was established by ED O. LITTLE on October 15, 1901, and from the day of its opening, has steadily forged ahead until today it is known far and wide as the Jewelry Store Beautiful.

It has ever been the policy of this store to sell only the highest quality merchandise and it is because of this policy, strictly adhered to from the very beginning, that the name LITTLE now stands for everything that is the very best in merchandise, service and fair dealing.

Last Fall, Mr. Little remodeled his store, installing a new front, adding some new fixtures and rearranging and redecorating the interior thereby making this store in very fact, the most beautiful store in DeKalb County.

Of course this store handles all the merchandise usually found in a modern jewelry store and in addition, a Gift Department has been added which is the talk of Auburn and the surrounding territory. Here are to be found odd and unusual articles from many countries of the world. Articles that make wonderful party and club prizes and favors and it has become recognized that the hostess who buys her prizes and favors at Little's is sure of the success of her party.

Perhaps the most important line handled by Mr. Little is Diamonds. None but the finest quality stones are sold by this store. Hundreds of people from all over DeKalb County are wearing Little's Diamonds and hundreds more have added the wedding ring from Little's. A Diamond from Little's will thrill any girl and, because of their moderate cost, please any young man. Little's Diamond's cost no more than the same quality stone bought elsewhere and, in many instances, much less.

Space will not permit us writing more about this wonderful store. We might add, however, that this store now has the exclusive agency in DeKalb County for the Victor Talking Machine and that it is a hobby with Mr Little that he is able, at all times, to supply the very latest Victor records of which he sells thousands each year.

It is a pleasure to compliment Mr. Little on having such a complete, modern and beautiful store and we sincerely wish him the success he is entitled to.

How Much Do You Know About Your Body?

As we study the smooth exterior of our bodies we wonder why one is subject to so many, seemingly, accidental afflictions. Thus it is, that the more we know about ourselves the better we understand cause and effect.

In the first stages of life, the principal thing to be noticed is the brain. The brain being first, must be the medium through which Nature builds a complete body. The baby is born with its organism working normally. As long as Nature can continue her uninterrupted force through the body, the baby will grow and remain normal in every respect. When Nature, or the Inborn Intellectual forces have been interferred with, the body, like an old machine is finally worn out. If we were once well and normal, why be sick now?

DR. W. C. GAULD, at Hicksville, Ohio, will prove that the many incoordinations of the head, throat, lungs, stomach, liver, intestines, etc., are due to interference with the life force from the brain to the organs, through pressure on the spinal nerves causing disease wherever these nerves extend.

The human boy is so constituted that it is unnatural for diseases to creep in without cause. The nervous system is designed to give perfect health to all the organs and keep them in repair as long as there is no interference between these organs and the brain.

If their is a jolt, strain, fall, wrench, or any other accident to the body sometime in life, the movable bones of the spine are misplaced, even slightly, they cause pressure upon the nerves and interfere with the flow of the life force. Weakness and disease result in the organs that these nerves supply.

Doctors experimenting at Cornell, say that many diseases, Sciatica, Neuritis, Lumbago, Neuralgia, Angina Pectoris, and others are really caused by "mechanical nerve irritation."

They discover "that injury to a small bone at the base of the back can cause pressure on nerves that in one man will cause pain in the foot, in another chronic headache." Their remedy is to set this bone in place. Chiropractors discovered and announced that long ago.

We wish to call our readers' attention to DR. W. C. GAULD at Hicksville, who has a reputation above reproach and is one of our most successful Chiropractors.

CORN BORER JOTTINGS

Some of The Practical Ways In Which to Help Exterminate The Borer, and Why the Farmer Should Cooperate Fully

Use Present Equipment When Possible:—"Through experiments and demonstrations Purdue University is attempting to find the best and most economical way so that farmers may use as far as possible their present equipment in fighting the corn borer," Director G. I. Christie of Purdue University has said on many occasions. Purdue does not recommend the buying of new machinery unless it is absolutely impossible to do the job with the equipment the farmer now has. In most cases the farmers' equipment can be so adjusted and the method adopted that the desired results can be obtained. The county agents, assistant agents and specialists from Purdue will give all possible help to individual and groups of farmers in order that the job in Indiana may be well done."

Careful Plowing in Backlot Gardens:—Backlot gardeners who live in the towns or cities in the infested Indiana counties should remember that backlot gardens will be checked over also in the corn borer control campaign to see that no remnants of corn stalks or cobs are left on the surface of the plowed soil to furnish a harbor for living corn borers. To do this most effectively, the corn stalks should either be raked and burned or else the owner should be on hand when the garden is plowed and after each round with the plow, see that projecting stalks are laid flat in the furrow. No claim for extra labor allowance can be made for less than one acre of corn.

Science and Uncle Sam Should Outwit Borer:—No other menace to this country, excepting stark war, also has brought out the array of organization and inventive genius that is now being marshalled against the intrusion of the European corn borer. Now that the scientists have worked out the life history and habits of the pest, the job is to destroy it when and with such means as will accomplish destruction in the easiest way.

Long Invents Stalk Teaser:—Now comes a young tenant farmer, R. B. Long of Milford township, LaGrange county, with an interesting little device made of strap iron that attaches to the furrow wheel of a sulky plow and which is doing a more effective job of putting stalks under the furrow work to get the barnyards and other feeding places cleaned up so that the corn borer cannot be harbored. And so the rest of us will chip in and help the farmers in the infested areas to do extra work which is necessary not only to protect themselves but us as well."

Corn Borer in Lima Township:—LaGrange county has only two townships in the infested area but R. D. Flentz who is operating the government owned stubble beater in Lima township, found a corn borer last Thursday in one of the stubbles on the field in which he was working the pulverizer.

Stoner Cites Canada Warnings:—Charles R. Stoner, president of the Whitley county farm bureau was over in Essex and Kent counties, Ontario last fall. He says, "It is no jolly about the complete destruction the European corn borer has done in those Canadian fields. These two counties have about the same climate as we have here. The European corn borer has reduced the corn acreage until now it is only one-tenth what it was five years ago. The farmers have had to go to raising to-

Those who saw the demonstration in Milford township, LaGrange county last week on the Willets Bros. farm say that this invention was making it possible to do a 99 per cent job of completely covering heavy corn stalks with a 16 inch bottom plow.

Uncle Sam Registers "Determination:"—And Uncle Sam is fighting the corn borers too. And who is Uncle Sam? Well, this personification of the federal government is the people because in this country, the people are the government. And so when the European corn borer got so "rambunkious" that he threatened the farmers of the country, Uncle Sam decided that it was time he took a hand in the fracas. Businessmen know that anything that threatens America's premier crop, corn, really threatens the entire fabric of the country. Therefore they are interested in it.

Farmers Everywhere Chipped In:—And so what happened is this: Farmers and businessmen everywhere, when it was determined that plowing under was what was necessary to stop this pest or at least slow down his westward progress, said in effect. "It will take extra work for farmers to plow where they have been disking for oats. It will take extra

"CHRYSLER" Standardized Quality

The motor car industry admits today that, working under the personal direction of Walter P. Chrysler, Chrysler engineering and more basic improvement to the automobile than has been brought forth in the past decade.

There is scarcely a motor car of importance today that is not striving to emulate Chrysler design and practice, Chrysler performance and appearance.

The influence of Mr. Chrysler and his associates is bound to be even more pronounced in the future as the logical result of the Chrysler plan of Standardized Quality.

Chrysler standardization of quality, is the honest interpretation, by way of co-ordinated engineering and precision manufacturing, of the fundamental principles of engineering science.

It was given its first revolutionary expression in the Chrysler "70" and now extends to the lighter six Chrysler "60," and the new Chrysler "50," finest of fours and reaches its supreme interpretation in the Imperial "80," as fine as money can build.

The power and speed of all Chrysler cars are designed to excel the power and speed of any previous stock engine of the same size. Along with these is a fuel economy whose like has never before been dreamed of in conjunction with such performance.

Chrysler owners and the entire Chrysler power and speed are permanent qualities.

That Chrysler engines are designed and built to stand high speed; not in a momentary spurt, or once or twice in their entire life, but for a day at a time, and day after day, for thousands upon thousands of miles.

And that, in the net, is what Chrysler standardized quality gives.

A speed ability, a power ability, an economy far in exess of the ordinary and the average, as the result of a fixed and complete inflexible quality standard which enforces the same scrupulously close limits—the same rigid rule of engineering exactness—the same absolute acuracy and precision of alignment and assemblage—in the measurement, the machining and the manufacturing of every part, practice and process in four lines of Chrysler cars—"50," "60," "70" and Imperial "80."

And this rare and unique co-ordination of engineering and manufacturing gives to each and all of four lines of Chrysler cars, that rare and vital ability to go on through months and years, delivering power and speed and economy with an eagerness and a certainty that only a Chrysler owner understands and counts on.

THE CAMPBELL-HOLBEN SALES COMPANY, 215 East 7th Street, AUBNRN, is the Chrysler representative in this section and they will be glad to demonstrate to you Chrysler Standardized Quality.

Most all sales for new cars are made through deals for used cars and The Campbell-Holben Company pride themselves on offering the "BEST IN USED CARS." They are gaining a reputation in this section for fair dealing and Honest Values.

Everything in Hardware and Farm Implements

The establishment of WILLIAM CURIE, here at St. Joe, is one of the reliable hardware and farm implement stores in this section that carries an up-to-date stock of Quality. An immense stock of goods is carried by this institution as it keeps pace with the demands of its customers.

In the present day of hurry and rush the patrons insist that his demands for a nail or screw be given the same careful attention as if he were buying a malleable range. Particular attention to just such details of the business have won great popularity for this store.

This firm has one of the largest stocks of Hardware and Farm Implements in this section of Indiana, which comprises sheif and heavy hardware, stoves and ranges, also kitchen utensils, Acme Paints and A. C. Dayton Radios. They also handle the complete line of McCormick-Deering Farm Implements and Repairs.

When the name of WILLIAM CURIE is behind the hardware, Radios and FARM IMPLEMENTS that you purchase, you know they will be of high quality and well worth the money. This store has maintained a reputation for High Grade Goods for many years, and their standing in the community is behind everything they sell.

They are specializing on the A. C. Dayton Radios. Radio is no greater than its reception and reception varies greatly with the vast number that are on the market. The A. C. Dayton is the ideal radio for the farmer, it has necessary range to pick up distant market reports. Its clarity and freedom from static means that the weather reports, lectures, music, etc., comes in clearly and unmistakably. The simplicity of its construction results in long life and greater freedom from necessity of service, attention and repair.

There is no one firm in this section that is more deserving of the support of the citizens of this community than that of WILLIAM CURIE, here at St. Joe, who has by his fair and accomodating business methods, done as much to advance the "Buying at Home Rule" as any firm in this section by furnishing the highest grade goods at Most Reasonable Prices.

We are pleased to be able to place the establishment of WILLIAM CURIE among the leading business firms of St. Joe as he has always been progressive and enterprising.

Baby Chicks For This Season

Baby Chicks for this season that are "REAL BABY CHICKS" is offered the Farmer and Raiser of poultry, by the BUTLER CHICK HATCHERY at Butler.

The farmer and chicken raiser runs no risk of hatching chicks. He can buy his young chicks from this Hatchery, can see what he buys and thereby can select "Strong Healthy Chicks." In fact these are the only chicks that are hatched at the BUTLER CHICK HATCHERY at Butler.

The capacity of this Hatchery is 40,000 chicks at every hatching. The eggs that are used for hatching these chicks are selected from the best known breeds of hens and tested cockerals. This insures strong and healthy chicks, with strength and vigor which comes from pure blood and scientific mating. These chicks will develop rapidly into prolific and perfectly shaped fowls.

Another feature of buying chicks from the BUTLER CHICK HATCHERY is the saving of time and trouble of setting hens and continually fighting lice, mites and other infections common to hen hatched chicks.

After you have your chicks hatched and ready to raise every precaution should be exercised to help nature produce flesh and strength. It is very essentian that the best food should be given them that they may have all the advantage toward rapid growth and maturity.

Here also the farmer and poultry raiser can be benefitted, as the BUTLER CHICK HATCHERY, through years of investigation offers the best there is in chicken feed. They suggest "WAYNE FEEDS." These feeds have been scientifically compounded toward producing good, strong chicks and if used continually will bring to the raiser of poultry the success that is desired. Here also you will find the "Royal Heaters." and "Dickleman Brooder Houses." If these heaters and brooder houses were not the best that the market affords the BUTLER CHICK HATCHERY would not recommend them to its patrons.

Call at this Hatchery and have a talk with the management. You will obtain some valuable information as to the raising of chicks from them as they have had years of experience in the raising of poultry and will be pleased to confer with you.

The Beauty of Nature

More and more every day people are beginning to realize that a few beautiful flowers often add "that one necessary touch" to make the home artstic and attractive.

There is no one concern in this section that has done more in this community to further the general use of Potted Plants and Cut Flowers than THE COUGILL GREEN HOUSE at AUBURN.

AT COUGILL'S GREENHOUSE you will always find a large and Attractive Stock of Potted Plants and Flowers of all kinds growing and in a hardy condition. This display at all times would compare favorably with that of similar establishments in the larger cities.

They make a specialty of Designs for Parties, Weddings, Funerals, Lodges and Receptions. Prompt and satisfactory attention is given to all Mail Orders.

Another feature of this most modern establishment is the LARGE ASSORTMENT of FLOWERS and VEGETABLE PLANTS of all kinds that are Hardy and Thrifty and ready for transplanting to everyone, the Farmer, Gardener and City Gardener by purchasng the plants from this concern have done away with labor, trouble and uncertainty of planting from the seed. They have a large number to choose from and at Prices Most Reasonable.

No matter what the occasion may be that demands flowers, you will be pleased both with the High Grade Stock, and Eminently Satisfactory Service you will receive from this floral establishment.

Another feature of COUGILL'S GREENHOUSE is the large variety of nursery stock and their landscape gardening. The Nursery and Landscape business requires considerable capital as well as a wide range of ability and experience. MR. COUGILL has been in the business practically all of his life and is thoroughly conversant with all the branches of the business.

Here you will find a wide variety to select from. All kinds of Apple, Peach, Pear, Cherry, Plum, Quince, Nut and Shade Trees, Climbing Vines, Roses and Shrubbery. These are kept in a healthy and sturdy condition so that they arrive at your placet in excellent condition for planting.

They are practical Landscape Gardeners and are able to give valuable suggestions as to kind and number of Tress, Plants, Shrubs and flowers necessary to make your grounds a veritable paradise.

When it comes to this class of work, the relability and nearness of COUGILL'S should be considered and we advise all our readers to consider very carefully before having anyone else do their landscaping.

We take pleasure in referring to COUGILL'S GREENHOUSE at AUBURN as one of DeKalb County's progressive industries.

The Firm With The "KNOW HOW"

THE SHEET METAL WORKS OF WIDNEY & SHUGART, at Auburn, is gaining in popularity each day as its work is known to be reliable and the fact that it has the reputation of being an expert Sheet Metal Firm contributes in no small degree to its increasing popularity.

They have installed many jobs that comprise some of the big jobs in AUBURN and surrounding country. They speak for themselvs and by their record they are known and their business is increasing from year to year.

They are representatives for the Front Rank and Majestic Furnaces. These furnaces have stood the most severe tests as to the production of heat and economy of fuel.

When it comes to the installation of Furnaces they have had experience in this business and gave their customers the benefit that insures their patrons the best service.

By giving first class work at moderate prices they have built their business to its present high standard.

Promptness and good work executed on time are the watchwords of their business.

They have a complete line of repairs on hand at all times and being expert repair men can remedy any trouble in a short time.

When it comes to Tin and Galvanized Roofing they use the best material and only put on the kind that does not leak or rust through in a few days.

ALL KINDS OF SHEET METAL and COPPER WORK, CORNICES, SKYLIGHTS, VENTILATORS, VALLEYS, EAVES SPOUTING, RIDGE ROLLS, FLASHINGS and general jobbing are executed by them promptly and in a workmanship maner at Prices Most Reasonable. They are the distributors in this section for the Frigidaire Electrical refrigerator. This is a product of the General Motors Company and is in popular demand in both city and country.

MESSRS. WIDNEY & SHUGART are very courteous and will be pleased to assist anyone with their plans.

The News compliments them upon the prominent position they have obtained in the business life of this section and upon the modern and satisfactory work which they execute, and on being one of the most complete Sheet Metal Establishments in this section of the State.

Maurer Is The Man To See

In this day and age when conservative men are constantly seeking investments where they are not only assured a permanent source of income, but a reasonable certainty of increase in value, the real estate dealer is doing more than his share to meet the demands of such men.

One of the oldest established real estate dealers whose experience of many years in this line has made him an authority and who is the best known dealer in farm lands in Northern Indiana, is SIMEON H. MAURER, Auburn, City Realtor, in the Auburn State Bank Building, Auburn.

MR. MAURER has for years been closely identified with the growth and expansion of this section and has made a close study of real estate conditions so that he could offer both the buying and selling public the very best of service.

The MAURER office has on its books a large list of desirable farms and city property for sale at desirable terms that cannot fail to be attractive to the intending purchaser and he has made many important deals in this section. MR. MAURER has always made it a point not to list farms and city property for sale for more than their true value and this is where the close study of local conditions renders him an authority on values.

MR. MAURER is a courteous gentleman, well posted on land values in this vicinity and will be pleased to talk with anyone desiring anything in the REAL ESTATE line.

Reliable Used Cars

Any person with a few dollars in his pocket can purchase a "USED CAR." In the days of time past when horse trading was considered an art, every fellow trying to get the best of the trade, or in other words the one that was the most scientific in "doping the beast" and making it appear "what it was not" was the party that got the best of the transaction.

Today a person in buying a USED CAR has the same amount or more so of "doping" to contend with as in the old days of "horse swapping."

There are many unreliable dealers selling "Used Cars" that try to put it across on the purchaser. Unless a person is a mechanic it is indeed difficult to detect the weak spots in the mechanism of a used car.

The purchaser in almost every instance is compelled to rely upon the word of the dealer. E. W. OSBORNE at Auburn, has on hand at all times some real buys in good used cars. You do not have to take their word for it, take any of these cars out and drive them and pass your own judgment on them.

What has been said of their dealings in Used Cars can be repeated in regard to their repair department. Here only expert mechanics are employed and only genuine parts are installed, their charges are right and the work most skillfully done and the job delivered when promised.

Since the improved Ford Cars have been put on the market, E. W. OSBORNE at AUBURN has delivered many of these all over the county. This is the reason for the large number of first class used cars they have for sale at all times.

COUNTY AGENT STINSON IS GIVING ADVICE ON DISEASES OF CHICKS, CARE OF THE EGGS, AND IMPROPER FEEDING METHODS USED.

WHY CHICKS DIE

There seems to be a wide spread loss of chicks this season. The loss seems to be more general than usual due perhaps, to the extremely wet fall and winter. Records on Indiana farms, on which better than average conditions exist, show that on 55 out of every 100 hatched are raised to marketable age. This is a heavy loss and it can be prevented. Many of our poultry raisers try to "doctor" sick or weak chicks rather than practice "prevention."

Poor care of the breeding stock, during the months preceding the hatching season, will so weaken the chicks constitutionally that those that hatch lack the power to live under ordinary farm conditions. A strong, healthy, vigorous chick, given a good system of brooding and clean, wholesome feed, should be easily raised to maturity. Where any one of these three essentianl—vitality, equipment or feed—is left out, trouble and loss are very probable.

The first big cause for loss in chicks is weak vitality or lack of constitutional vigor. This may be caused by poor parent stock, by poor care of eggs before they are set, or by improper incubation. Poor parent stock is usually the most serious of these causes.

Good healthy hens and males that are fully matured are essential for healthy chicks. The parents should have free range and plenty of good food and a well-balanced ration. Never save hatching eggs from a hen that has ever been sick.

POOR CARE OF HATCHING EGGS

Bowel trouble and other diseases in little chicks are sometimes caused by infection of the eggs after being laid, but before they are set, nests and nesting material must be kept absolutely clean. Hatching eggs should be gathered at least twice every day and stored in a cool, dry place where the temperature is under seventy degrees.

Improper incubation is often the cause of weak sickly chicks. Where an incubator is used, the operator should b very careful to see that the temperature is kept uniform and never too hot. Recent experiments at Purdue University show that many weak chicks are caused by high temperatures. Often times the incubater rom is poorly ventilated and as a result, chicks may hatch well but be weak and low in vitality. If your chicks hatch earlier than the 20 or 21st day, there is something wrong.

The above points are the main factors that are involved in vitality. If these causes are remedied, all the young chick needs is good care and feed and a comfortable place to live.

CHICK LOSSES DUE TO IMPROPER FEEDING

Chicks should be kept growing every minute until mature. The right kind of feed, properly fed, will do this, if the chick is strong to start with and has comfortable surroundings. The wrong kind of feed, or improper feeding—such as feeding too soon, in a warm room, or without some exercise for part of their feed—will not only stunt the growth of the chick, but may cause serious intestinal trouble indicated by diarrhea and ultimate death.

There are several good commercial chick starters on the market, or you may get the Purdue chick ratiol from your county or vocational agricultural teacher and mix your own. Whatever the ration, the food must be clean and wholesome; the water must be pure, the milk dishes and all feed troughs must be kept clean; and the surroundings kept sanitary. Litter must not be damp or moldy. Failure to observe these pre-

PROFESSIONAL BONDSMEN HIT

Professional bondsmen in Kassas City, Mo., have been practically put out of business, insofar as the Federal courts are concerned, by a recent order putting into effect ironclad regulations which provide that only three kinds of bonds can be accepted in that court. These are cash bonds, surety bonds and real estate bonds.

The order was designed not only to stop the activities of the professional bondsmen but also to put an end to the accumulation of forfeited bonds. It is said that the Federal court in Kansas City had on hand forfeited bonds totaling about $230,000, of which only a small per cent can be collected as the bondsmen have had their property transferred, have disappeared, or otherwise evaded the law.

According to the order, cash bonds must be in the form of cashiers' checks on national banks and surety bonds must be from surety companies approved by the Secretary of the Treasury. Real estate bonds must be on property double the value of the amount of the bonds and the bondsmen must present their last tax receipts or abstracts of title to the property. The real estate must be intirely unencumbered and it connot be used a second time for a bond without special consent of a Federal judge.

These regulations are similar to some which were originally adopted in New York and which have proved successful in eliminating the forfeited bond evil.

Wash Comfort Into Your Clothes

Cleaning and washing clothes is not only taking the dirt out but also consists of turning out a clean, smoth garment, which one would be proud to wear. New machinery and sanitary methods are necessary to "wash comfort into clothes," and in this the AUBURN STEAM LAUNDRY AT AUBURN, surpasses all others.

While the old fashioned method of dumping a bunch of laundry into a tub and swishing it around in a few, gallons of water doped with some washing powder may suit some laundries and their patrons, this popular AUBURN institution thoroughly cleanses your linen by the latest sanitary methods and returns them to you fresh and free from all germs and dirt.

At the AUBURN STEAM LAUNDRY pure soap is uses and Scientific Machinery for the Softening of the Water, which "Washes Comfort Into Your Clothes."

One of the rules of the AUBURN STEAM LAUNDRY is to make right anything that does not please, and this arrangement is a most satisfactory one in this day of hurry and rush.

The patrons of the Auburn Steam Laundry have always found that their "Linen is Returned to Them in the Best of Condition" by this up-to-date Laundry, which is turning out the Most Excellent Work at Most Reasonable Prices.

If you have never sent your laundry to the Auburn Steam Laundry, do so and you will receive prompt service.

In St. Joe leave your laundry at L. B. Meeks' Barber Shop or notify him that your laundry is ready and their truck will pick it up, as they make two trips each week to St. Joe.

We are pleased to point to the efficiency of the Auburn Steam Laundry, and to compliment them upon the admirable manner in which they are serving the public of this community.

Every room in the grade schools contributed their bit in making the display last Friday, one of the best ever made. Parents who visited the school were indeed proud of the work their children were doing and expressed their satisfaction in many ways.

Mrs. Estella Welch, one of the proprietors of the Club House restaurant of Auburn was operated on Thursday at the Sacred Heart hospital at Garertt. Although not out of danger, according to her father, Daniel Herrick, she was resting somewhat easier on Friday. The operation consisted of an abscess on the left side near the spleen. Mrs. Welch has been at the hospital two weeks. Prior to that she had been sick fourteen weeks.—Star.

A corn borer demonstration will be given in this community next Tuesday, by Purdue, showing how the farmer may use his present equipment.

Billy Baker, of Concord, son of Mr. and Mrs. Walter Baker at Concord, fell and broke his collar bone, Tuesday evening while playing in the yard.

The News is pleased to report to their St. Joe friends the arrival of a son at the home of Rev. and Mrs. C. O. Johnson, at Fowlerton, some weeks ago.

A nice bunch of I. O. O. F. members and a few from Butler, gave the St. Joe lodge a great surprise Tuesday evening, April 18, by putting on the Initiatory Degree, even bringing a very fine lunch along and ice cream galore. All present having a good rousing time. Brothers we welcome you, thrice welcome. Call again.

Defying the government corn borer clean-up regulations in DeKalb county is practically unknown, and farmers and agents alike are using good common sense about the matter. If we have the borer, let's clean up, seems to be the attitude, and that is the right spirit, "An ounce of prevention, is worth a pound of cure," and that holds good in the clean-up measures.

New radio commission now functioning. Officials are disappointed at lack of co-operation shown thus far by broadcasters in reaching agreement as to the method of reducing number of national broadcasting stations from 100 to 60, and local stations from 635 to 300. Under the new law, however, the Commission has no power to force such a reduction but will probably seek this authority from Congress at the next session.

Another big improvement in Auburn is under contemplation by Ashton Staman, druggist, who recently acquired the building at the corner of Main and Ninth streets from the Auburn State bank. The corner building on the property abutting the one owned by Mr. Staman in which his south drug store is located is occupied by the Metropolitan Cafe and he plans to remodel the structure for his own use when the restaurant's lease expires.

Architect's plans and drawings are being prepared for extensive improvements at the Hotel Auburn. Twenty additional rooms will be built to conform with the present architecture of the building at the corner of Main and Ninth streets. The new addition will be three stories in height and will be built to the south of the dining room and the two business rooms facing on Ninth street. New bath rooms will be added and a new dining room will occupy the ground floor of the new part.

Henry Ford's paper, The Dearborn Independnt, is being sued for a million dollars damage by Aaron Sapiro for alleged libel in connection with a series of articles printed in that paper purporting to show the designs of Mr. Sapiro to get rich off the farmers and that instead of his doing the farmer any good, his operations have resulted in a net loss of millions of dollars to the farmers. Conditions are not what they should be regarding such things. When a newspaper sets out to expose gigantic frauds, backed by rich men, that newspaper has to defend itself at its own expense and gets no reward for protecting the public.—Butler Record.

Community Building

Nothing Worth While in Cheap Construction

The old saying "appearances are deceitful" applies nowhere more forcefully than in home building. Something more than good looks is necessary in the proper construction or alteration of a house.

To be certain that you are securing a home in keeping with your dream of cozy comfort and lasting service you should take counsel with those who know how to build. You should also use materials that are not only attractive but also are durable and best suited to the uses they are intended to serve.

Many new houses soon become a source of trouble and expense to their owners because of false economy practiced in their construction. A little paint, some showy decoration, and to outward appearances your house can be a thing of beauty on the day you move in. The test will come when the newness wears off. Short-lived materials, selected for vital installations because of saving in first cost, will begin to fail.

This means replacement at an expense much greater than the so-called saving effected by use of substitute materials at the beginning. And there is, in addition, the inconvenience and trouble occasioned by tearing up floors, opening the walls, repainting and papering incident to the replacement of unserviceable or worn-out installations.

Therefore, the first point to be remembered is that substantial, enduring materials increase the cost of your home but little at the start. Eventually they are the cheapest as well as the most satisfactory materials.

Trees Always Symbol of Good Citizenship

You will notice that the substantial, the thrifty, the worthy and the likable classes of people plant trees, no matter whether they are in a new and treeless country or in one already well planted, and that the shiftless, the transient, the careless and the selfish are as little likely to set out sheltering trees as they are to be neat, thrifty or good neighbors.

Show me a developed town with no trees and I will show you a town to avoid as a home for your families. Go through districts where want and squalor and crime and filth are the rule and you will be lucky to find even a gaunt specimen of a tree anywhere about.

This is not by chance; the planted and tended tree is as sure a sign of civilization as a revered flag or a church spire or a schoolhouse belfry, and the English, who have carried civilization to every part of their dominions scattered far and wide about the earth, plant shade trees almost before they finish their houses or start their towns.—Luther Burbank as reported by Wilbur Hall in the Saturday Evening Post.

Upkeep Will Be Less

The well-planned and properly built house will have considerably less upkeep and annual depreciation than the house that is poorly planned and cheaply built. The home builder employing a competent architect will save the architect's fee in the obtaining of a thoroughly well-planned, well-built house.

Architectural supervision of the construction may be on a time basis, charging for the actual number of trips required to the building site, but the usual charge is on a commission basis. On a small home this runs as low as $150 to $200, certainly a small sum for the kind of security the architect provides.

Truth Is Mighty

Truth is a very deadly thing at last when it confronts the clever liar at a place where he cannot escape. If he tried the air instead of the sea, the bizarre and fascinating little structure which was meant to defy the universe bursts into flame and perishes at contact with a flash of truth.—Dr. Lynn Hough.

PAUL LANDERS' fine car came to a stop in front of the Bannister's pretty home. As he opened the door to step out, he was aware of half a dozen other cars parked nearby, and the buzz and laughter of many women's voices came from the wide verandas.

Isabel Bannister's tea! And it was Isabel whom he wanted to see—wanted to carry off this imperious young beauty with him on that long ride he must take to Shorecliffs. He had planned that they would dine at some wayside inn, and come home by moonlight—perhaps the good old moon would help persuade Isabel to say "Yes" to the question he was going to ask. But that was all off now, he thought disgustedly, bending over the wheel. This Shorecliffs matter had come up at four o'clock and called for instant attention—well, he would have to go in now, anyway, and perhaps Isabel could slip out and go with him, leaving her mother and that pretty little southern cousin who was visiting them, to entertain.

"Ah, Mr. Landers!" Isabel nonchalantly greeted him, smiled dazzlingly, for she meant to marry him some day, and gave him a cup of tea.

"Shorecliffs?" murmured Isabel with a shocked glance around at the chattering women and the few men, "I couldn't possibly—not this afternoon, you see?"

"Of course not! It was an idiotic suggestion on my part," said Paul truthfully. "I must take my leave—" he was saying formally, when she suddenly thrust an empty plate into his hand.

"Please give this to that stupid Hilda and tell her to bring some waffles—she is somewhere around—" she turned back to the man who was commanding her attention. A man with more money than Paul. The maid was nowhere in sight, and so the tall grave young man finally found his way to a large sunny kitchen where he found Polly Bannister, the Tennessee cousin, baking waffles over a hot gas flame.

"Why, Mr. Landers," she said in her soft drawl, "I'm dismayed to see that empty plate—these are the very last ones—the batter's all gone and the eggs are gone, too! I cannot make any more waffles, and Isabel will be so disappointed."

"I understood that this tea was in your honor," Paul said suddenly.

Polly stared vaguely. "Why, of course it is, but Isabel is so proud of my cooking and everyone loves cream waffles, you know."

"I know," he said drily, and he read the truth underlying the girl's casual explanation.

Mrs. Bannister, plump, warm, and worried, came hastily into the room. "Polly dear, are the waffles really gone? Oh, I should have ordered more eggs—Mr. Landers, have you had a cup of tea? Are you going now? Shorecliffs? What a wonderful day for a long drive! Do take Polly with you—she has stewed in this kitchen all day—Hilda is just a plain cook, you know, and Polly offered to help out—run away, dear—Isabel will have another tea for you—that is right, Mr. Landers, look out for her—she's a dear child."

Away from the affectionate gush of her Aunt Effie, and the smell of cooking, Polly drew a long breath of delight. In spite of the embarrassment of filling Isabel's place in the Landers car, Polly was blissfully happy. In her month's stay among her northern cousins she had learned that Paul Landers, rich and influential, was madly in love with her beautiful cousin, Isabel. Polly had admired him from afar, but she could enjoy this brief hour and pretend that he had really asked her to drive with him, and that she had not been thrust upon him by a well-meaning aunt.

Paul Landers, accustomed to drive with Isabel's clear cut cameo profile beside him, glanced down and felt a queer sensation in the region of his heart. Polly, small and young, smiled demurely up at him, and he marveled at the thick softness of her dark lashes. Her face "sparkled" with joy. The rounded curve of her cheek was childishly dear—he felt a curious sense of protection—he felt like a small boy with his little sister. He was stoutly glad that Polly was not his sister!

After the business at Shorecliffs had been concluded, there was a never-to-be forgotten dinner at a quaint inn overhanging the water, where Landers learned all about Polly's happy girlhood in a southern city, and told in his turn of his motherless home.

"Sometimes I dream of a home of my own," he told Polly, neither one of them remembering about Isabel.

"Of course, you do," nodded Polly understandingly. "I do hope that you will have a dear home—and that you will be happy—to make up for those lonesome years—the little boy that you were, makes me cry, somehow!" She blinked back the bright tears.

He was infinitely touched. He forgot his admiration for Isabel. He really loved this tender-hearted girl—later, when she went back to Tennessee, he would go down there!

"You must come down and see us when you're South," drawled Polly. Their eyes met, and the girl blushed beautifully. "I am not always in the kitchen," she laughed merrily.

"What do I care?" he retorted. "You know I don't object to being 'kitchen company.'"

STATE LEASES FARM NORTH OF AUBURN

Land Owned By Mrs. Alberta Eckhart to be Headquarters For Corn Borer Control Activities

Negotiations were closed Friday between Mrs. Alberta Eckhart, of Auburn, and Frank N. Wallace of Indianapolis, state entomologist, by which the state leases the thirty-eight acre farm of Mrs. Eckhart, north of Auburn, for a year. The lease may be renewed from year to year according to the terms of the contract.

The Eckhart farm and buildings will become the general headquarters in Indiana for the operations ters n Indiana for the operations of those connected with the department of entomology in the corn borer control. The laboratory, storage for all machinery, tractors, pulverizers, service cars and equipment will be converged at the Eckhart farm.

Instructions by department workers will be given to farmers at the new headquarters as to what is expected of them in the corn borer control campaign which is being waged by the U. S. government and the State of Indiana for the eradication of the pest.

The Indiana department, working in connection with Purdue University has been considering the Eckhart farm for a number of weeks. It is ideally situated and conforms admirably to the needs of the department. Two tracts favorably considered, the one leased Thursday and a tract near Kendallville. With the extension of an electric light line to Elkhart farm all the requirements of the state department of entomology have been met.

The headquarters of the state entomologist department for corn borer control have been maintained heretofore in a business room of the Hotel Auburn.

TWO POULTRY CLUBS BEING ORGANIZED

At the first meeting of the St. Joe Valley Bank Poultry Club in the high school auditorium, Thursday evening, April 6th, Floyd Knisely was chosen president and Clarence Erwin, secretary-treasurer. It was voted to have regular monthly meetings with speakers and a program with a tour in August and a show in the fall.

The plan of paying for the chicks at the bank was discussed and arrangements made to handle the chicks when they will be delivered at the school house next Friday. Mr. Worden from Hicksville discussed feeding and care of chicks and his remarks were supported and elaborated upon by Dr. Keller, also of Hicksville. Both men answered questions by the club members and their parents.

Seventeen members will receive 1,175 Rhode Island Red Chicks next Friday in lots varying from 25 to 100. Members will feed and care for chicks and attempt to raise as good individuals and as economically as possible.

Light refreshments were served after the meeting.

Boys and Girls in the St. Joe and Spencerville Poultry Clubs, who have at least 100 Rhode Island Red Chicks may join the B. & O. Poultry Club being organized by Mr. Hurley, of the B. & O. R. R. and Mr. Smith and Mr. Case.

The plan is to enroll those boys and girls who can meet the above requirements into this organization and those members will be eligible to all local prizes and B. & O. prizes in addition.

The B. & O. will give prizes the first year as follows: best pen of five, $3.00, $2.50. $2.00 and $1.50; best individual cockerel, $1.50, $1.25 and $1.00; best individual pullet, $1.50, $1.25 and $1.00. A member going into this club must continue with the flock or his original pullets the second year. The plan the second year is to produce eggs. A member must have at least ten birds but he is urged to take more. At the beginning of the egg producing project, the member is to make a complete inventory of the number of birds he has on hand and their returns. The winner on the second year's work is determined as follows:

Of meetings held, number attended (percentage) 15.

Of birds hatched or bought, number raised (percentage) 25.

Of three class exhibitors at county shows, 10.

How exhibit placed, 15.

How exhibit placed at Interstate show, 15.

Individual progress and report 20.

HOME EDUCATION

THOSE DARK MOMENTS IN DISCIPLINE
Edith Lochridge Reid

No matter how earnestly we have tried to guide our children in the right, there occasionally occurs for most of us a disappointing surprise at their conduct. And the way in which we meet these strange and disturbing situations is the test of our sympathy and strength of understanding.

George and Alice are neighboring playmates. One morning they each took an apple from the wagon of the vegetable man when he wansn't looking. They giggled and ran behind a tree and ate the stolen fruit. The act was purely on impulse and after the thrill had died away they decided to confess.

Alice's mother scarcely waited for her to finish before she exclaimed in a trembling, tearful voice, "O, darling, how could you be so wicked! You have hurt Mother so that her heart is almost broken! That was a terrible thing for you and George to do!"

George's mother quietly listened to what her son told her of his difficulty. Her heart ached of course at this disappointing act, but she did not burst into hysterical reproaches. She was silent for a moment and thoughtful. Then she inquired in a sympathetic tone, "Can you think of anything more you would like to tell me about this?"

George looked right into his mother's eyes. He saw there a great constant love shining, and he took hope.

"I was just getting kind of hungry when Tony came along with his truck. I didn't want to take time from play to come home so I grabbed the apple—and Mother, I'm so sorry. I think I can run down the street and give Tony the nickel from my allowance, If I hurry.

Outside George met Alice. "Say, listen," she said, and she was nervous and worried, "the next time we steal an apple I don't dare let my mother know it, or she'll cry."

As a result of this one incident Alice became a less confiding daughter. She had glimpsed a false standard of conduct. The fact that she had taken Tony's fruit was minimized and overshadowed by the thought that Mother had been hurt. Alice had not been met by an understanding attitude, was in no way reformed, but she was more or less awed by the reaction of her mother, and her one thought had been to escape from her presence.

Naturally any of us are shocked at certain flagrant departures from normal conduct. But we cannot afford to lose our self-control and act shocked. The big issue that we face is not that our own pride has been dragged in the dust and our faith tested. What we must do above all is hold tight that tie of confidence that will encourage our children to tell us everything, even though they have erred in judgment and conduct.

We must help our children to choose wisely. We must direct love and efforts toward training them in right standards and values but they must not infer that lapses which "make Mother feel badly" must be kept from her. These are the very confidences that they should bring to us. And when those confidences have been freely forthcoming, to scold or to act grieved is to betray the trust,, the hope of help and comfort, that the "telling" displayed.

Any child who is frank and penitent enough to admit a mistake is in no mood to be scolded, and any suggestion of sympathy and help that Mother can give will create more genuine loyalty and desire for improved future conduct than a shocked attitude could ever do.

Any discipline, no matter how close its relation to the mother's personal feelings, must always be administered from the child's viewpoint and with loving regard for the effect of the incident on his future. He can, of course, be made to understand that his lapse has been serious, but Mother can best show him this by her intense earnestness in analyizing the situation, no matter how heartbreaking it may be. Her purpose must be to assist in character-building and not to defend her own soul from grief and shock, though as she strives for and attains the higher aim, her own peace of mind will result.

Home Bureau Activities

The Concord Township Ladies Home Bureau met at the home of Mrs. Lulu Brodbeck last Friday. Mrs. Brodbeck was assisted by Mrs. Beulah Coburn, Mrs. Minnie Pepple and Mrs. Katie Storer, and they entertained with two contests which were much enjoyed. Mrs. Nellie Lindley and Mrs. Pluma Hamilton being the prize winners.

The first lesson in second year Nutrition was given by the Township project leaders, Mrs. Mary Krise and Mrs. Gertrude Borthwick. The subject, "Wall Covering for Dining and Living Room," was ably handled by Mrs. Vera Elson. Twenty-three members responded to roll call with "House cleaning suggestions." One guest Miss Ethel Lindley was present.

The hostess and committee served delicious refreshments consisting of light and dark cake, banana split and cocoa with marshmallows.

The next meeting will be held May 20 at the home of Mrs. Huldah Reasoner.

The Maytag In Country Homes

In past years every known convenience has been invented to lighten work of man. Inventions for the housewife were slower in being perfected. However, today there is offered the women of this section an invention which really gives her an extra day in the week. A MAYTAG WASHER.

THE MAYTAG WASHERS sold in this section by the SANDERS MAYTAG COMPANY, 118 W. Eighth Street, Phone 144-J, Auburn, is without a doubt the most popular and therefore the best on the market today.

There are nine outstanding features which account for this popularity, Washes Faster, Washes Cleaner, Largest Hourly Capacity in the World, Most Compact Washer Made, Takes Floor Space only 25 inches square, Cast Aluminum Tub, can't warp, rot, swell, split or corrode; Easily adjusted to your height; Clothes put in or taken out with Washer Running, Tub Cleans itself, All Metal Wringer, self-adjusting, Instant Tension Release.

Years ago the MAYTAG COMPANY started to make washers and it has only been in recent years that people fully appreciated the convenience of the MAYTAG WASHER. Today the MAYTAG COMPANY, the largest washing machine company in the world, ships MAYTAG WASHERS by the trainload.

Most people think of the necessity of electricity when MAYTAG WARSHERS are mentioned. Not so for the MAYTAG GYRAFOAM WASHER is equipped with the famous MAYTAG MULTI MOTOR which operates on gasoline.

THE MAYTAG MULTI MOTOR developes ¾ horse power. It is air cooled and equipped with high tension fly wheel magneto, light in weight, compact, thoroughly reliable.

Just call SANDERS MAYTAG COMPANY at Auburn and a free demonstration in your home will be gladly given. If you so desire they are sold on easy terms with 52 weeks or 15 months to pay. Give them a call and you will thank us gladly for calling your attention to the MAYTAG in this DeKalb County Farm Edition.

They Pay The Highest Price

It has only been in recent years that great industrial firms recognized the value of systematic disposal of waste material. In certain communities a few enterprising men saw that they could develop something of value to themselves to handle the waste material of both large and small industrial plants.

This today is the business of the AUBURN IRON & METAL COMPANY, corner of VanBuren and Third Street, Auburn.

Few people realize the volume of such business. One gasps with surprise when one realizes the number of tons of old iron and scrap shipped out by this firm. And this does not include the great amount of junk disposed of locally. Thus a profit is brought into the community from the disposal of waste material.

The Auburn Iron & Metal Company is valuable to the community in another way. Users of any kind of machine, and automobile users in particular find this yard a true economy. A part of their machine is broken. Everyone knows the high price of new parts, but they do not have to spend money in this way. They need but come to the Auburn Iron & Metal Company's yards, tell what they want and immediately the manager goes to the carefully stored piles in the great majority of cases finds the part wanted and it is purchased at only a fraction of the cost of a new part.

They make a specialty of buying autos that are torn down and all kinds of scrap iron of every description and pay the highest price that the market affords. The business of this concern is not limited to Auburn but covers the adjoining territory for miles around.

The owners of this business are up and coming business men. They believe in their business and for that reason have made a success of it. They are highly respected in business circles of this community.

Often Buttered---But Never Bettered

The staff of life is bread and we should be very particular about the kind of bread we eat. That it is made in a Sanitary Bakery by Bakers who are particular and who use only Wholesome and Pure Ingredients.

That is why BANNER BREAD, made by the SEELY BAKING COMPANY, at Hicksville, is found upon so many tables in this section.

The housewife has discovered that this bread meets all the requirements of a "good bread" and that is why she insists upon her dealer keeping BANNER BREAD.

No other bread meets with such universal satisfaction as this, and that is why the SEELY BAKING COMPANY is kept busy at their Bakery at Hicksville.

The baking industry is practically as old as the discovery of fire and the methods used in ancient times have changed from baking on stones and in rudely constructed ovens, as like other great industries, it had a humble beginning. Today it is quite different at the MODERN and UP-TO-DATE Establishment of SEELY BAKING COMPANY, where the latest styles of ovens and machinery are in operation for the production of BANNER BREAD.

Another feature of this establishment is the Cleanliness which is insisted upon throughout the intire plant. Everything is kept Scrupulously Clean and in a Strictly Sanitary Condition. Only the Very Best of material is used, which is made of the best quality of ingredients that money can buy, and the most competent help employed.

The housewives of St. Joe and vicinity can always obtan BANNER BREAD at the leading grocers.

We assure you that you will always find in "Banner Bread" a uniform standard of quality that has won for it a place among the housewives of this section who know good bread and therefore will only have "Banner Bread," the Bread this is "Often Buttered but Never Bettered."

They Invite Your Patronage

There is no firm in this section more widely known as extensive dealers in EGGS and PRODUCE than the HICKSVILLE PRODUCE CO., at Hicksville, Ohio.

Through their forward and above board policies they have established an enviable reputation in these parts and the farmers and the people generally have come to look upon them as one of the prominent concerns of this section that always pays the highest prices.

Through their extensive dealing in EGGS and POULTRY they have afforded the farmers of this community a most advantageous market right at their very door, where they are able to secure the best prices for their products, and in addition are saved trouble and expense of shipping.

They bring thousands of dollars into this section each year that would otherwise go to some other center were their policy and service not so entirely satisfactory in every particular.

As regards EGGS and POULTRY let it be said right here that this concern is considered among the leading establishments in these parts on this subject. Just as they have come to this firm for information and advice in regard to Eggs and Poultry, so have the farmers of this section learned that they can secure here "The Highest Market Prices."

Here also the farmers can obtain by phone the latest market quotations and the HICKSVILLE PRODUCE CO. invites every farmer in this section to avail themselves of this service.

There is no concern in this section that is more worthy of the patronage of the farmers than the HICKSVILLE PRODUCE CO., at Hicksville, Ohio.

There are few sections that have located in their midst such a large firm or one of more benefit to the community than this concern.

In this DeKalb County Farm Edition we wish to compliment this firm and Mr. Swisher, the manager on the way this establishment is conducted.

For Dad and Lad

There is nothing so important to the farmers and residents of the smaller city as an up-to-date establishment in close range where "Dad and Lad" are able to secure the metropolitan styles and service in Clothing and Haberdashery.

This is the day and age when men, both old and young, must be neatly attired in clothes of distinction and quality. In Hicksville and vicinity the desires and demands of the male population are more than satisfied at the store of MAXWELL BROTHERS. This establishment is strictly modern and up-to-date, stocked with a class of goods that would do credit to a much larger city than Hicksville.

They feature HART SCHAFFNER & MARX, MICHAEL STERN and CURLEE CLOTHES FOR MEN AND YOUNG MEN. These clothes are widely known for their snap and style, as well as the high quality and wide range of patterns for both conservative and ultra fashionable customers.

You will find that their other departments are on a par with their clothing, for MAXWELL BROS. are representative for widely known and highly popular lines of Men's Wear, which are known as the most superior grade of Men's Furnishings.

Their entire store is stocked with Collars and Underwear of highly popular brands; Shirts of the most fancy stripes; Ties that are approved by the arbiters of fashion for the present and approaching season; Hosiery of the latest styles and patterns; Hats and Caps of the latest styles and shapes; in fact, every need of the well-dressed man will be found here at most reasonable prices.

Maxwell Bros. up-to-date Boy's Department is their pride, and well they may be proud of this department, as it is one of the most modern and up-to-date Boys' Departments in Western Ohio, where everything can be found for the youngster.

MAXWELL BROTHERS at Hicksville are men of ability, successful in their chosen field of mercantile endeavor by reason of their wide experience and comprehensive knowledge of Men's Clothing and Men's Wear.

MAXWELL BROS. are among the leading business men of Hicksville, and we are pleased to compliment them upon the very excellent establishment which is adding to the prosperity and progress of this section.

With A Knowledge That the Best Has Been Done

In the sad time of one's life, when the last rites have been performed over the remains of some dear loved one, when they have been laid to rest, with a knowledge that the best has been done that was possible to do for them then our sorrow is somewhat lessened with the knowledge that they have been placed in a receptacle that will protect their body from vermin of the earth, water and dampness.

There is today offered to the NATIONAL BURIAL VAULT, manufactured by THE NATIONAL VAULT COMPANY at Ashley, which is absolutely the most moisture proof and water proof vault on the market today.

The vault is molded of steel reinforced by concrete by a patented process guaranteed to last for ages, protects the body in every way and gives to the friends of the deceased a feeling of security that no other means of burial can do.

When our dear ones are lowered into the grave, placed in a frail casket of wood and cloth trimmings, we picture within our minds, that within a few weeks their body will be unprotected to the ravishes of the vermin of the earth as well as to dampness and water. If a NATIONAL BURIAL VAULT is used to place their body in the grave we can know absolutely that the latest improved scientific vault has been used to protect them.

If we loved the departed one in life, is it not only just as a continuation of our love to see that they are laid away in a manner that will give to us a feeling that even in death we still love and cherish their memory with a clear conscience that all was done for them that was possible up to the very last.

Insist that your funeral director obtains for you a NATIONAL Burial Vault. There are other vaults, but if you thoroughly investigate the advantages this vault has above others, you will insist that your funeral director furnishes you with a NATIONAL Burial Vault.

We are pleased to present to our readers the NATIONAL COMPANY as being fully reliable and their Burial VAULTS as being the best that has been placed before the public.

The Art Of Photography

In this DeKalb County Farm Edition we feel that we should devote some of our space to a frank testimonial of the excellent work performed by MR. JONES the foremost Photographer, whose Studio is located at 215 North Main Street, Auburn.

The "Art of Photography," which was introduced nearly a century ago has within this period developed from a mechanical trade to an art of science and the Photographer of today must be a person of advanced ideas and thorough training so as to successfully compete with the people who are making this profession an "art science."

As regards the JONES STUDIO at Auburn, we can say that MR. JONES is a finished Photographer who has made a study for years of this interesting profession and Modern Photography is executed by him in a truly "artistic manner." He has in his studio what might well be called an "Art Center," the latest mechanical devices for the production of "Artistic Photographs," and is admirably equipped to produce anything in the way of "Modern Photography" to please the most critical. Special attention is given to Enlargements and Amateur Finishing. In the artistic production of Children's Pictures he has gained well merited commendation.

In portraiture MR. JONES is a "real artist," having studied the art for thirty-two years. His pictures are entirely different from anything ever seen in Auburn. The most difficult copying and enlargement is also done. None of the work is sent away. While the work executed by MR. JONES is Highly Artistic, the Prices are Reasonable.

It might be well to say that MR. JONES has had thirty-two years experience in the business and has worked in some of the largest studios in the United States.

We feel that the people of St. Joe and community are indeed fortunate in having in their midst such an artist as MR. JONES.

COUNTY AGENTS ADVICE ON CARE AND FEEDING OF CHICKS.

coutions may cause sudden and unexpected losses.

A great majority of the chicks that die during the first few weeks of their lives show some form of bowel trouble or diarrhea.

They "paste-up" behind, become listless, refuse to exercise, grow weaker and weaker and finally die. Many such cases can be traced to weak vitality in breeding stock, chilling of eggs, or chicks, too high or too low temperature in incubator, too much or too little heat in broder, misfeeding, exposure to cold winds. These are all man controlled conditions and with good "horse sense" they can all be prvented. It is true that thousands of chicks die of bacillary white diarrhea every year. From the many "sick chick" calls that I have made in the last eight years, I believe that the most of them are of the preventable disease type.

The remedy, then, for the great annual loss of chicks must be prevention." If disease does strike, every effort should be made to remove its cause first. "Doctoring" seldom pays with chickens. Get some reliable poultry bulletins at the County Agent's office and follow the instructions given in them. The Experiment Station is equipped to try different methods and we should use what they have found to be best under our conditions. The County Agent will be glad to assist you in your poultry problems.

LONG MARRIED LIFE ENDS IN DIVORCE

After fourty-four years of married life, during which they became parents of twelve children, John and Anastasia Trapp, of Garrett, appeared in the DeKalb circuit court last week in a divorce suit.

Mrs. Trapp filed the case, charging her husband with cruelty and with charging her falsely with extravagance. He answered that his wife and some of his children wasted his money and that he was justified in his treatment of them. Mr. Trapp is sixty-eight years old and his wife is sixty-seven.

As soon as the decree was entered Mr. Trapp filed suit for the partition of the property in Garrett and the farm in Butler township. The son, Frank, brought suit against his mother on a note for $500 that he says was executed Oct. 8, 1925. He asks for a judgment of $647.

You have learnd everything essential about the youth if you know whether he calls himself a college student or a college man.

The Greatest Sensation of 1927

The announcement of the "Most Beautiful Chevrolet" has been the automobile sensation of 1927.

The "Chevrolet" that is sold in this section by RALPH E. FURNISH at Spencerville, is a car which in beauty, luxury, quality and modern design challenges the costliest creation of the day.

Here in a price class where average standards have been the rule, is now offered a car so far beyond all expectations that comparisons cease to exist. Seven superb models styled as low priced cars were never styled before and offering such marks of fine car distinction as: full crown one-piece fenders, bullet type lamps and "fish-tail" rear deck modeling. New and supremely beautiful bodies by Fisher. And above all, finer quality, the result of a host of additional improvements such as AC oil filter, AC air cleaner, coincidental steering and ignition lock, larger 17 inch steering wheel, gasoline gauge and many, many others.

All this is combined to a supreme degree in the long famous leader of the "Chevrolet" line,—the Coach. It would be a brilliant achievement for any manufacturer merely to design such a splendid car to sell at any reasonable low price. But to sell it at the amazing price of $595 fob factory is a feat of history-making proportions.

This one price reduction alone would suffice to center world-wide attention on the Chevrolet. But due to economies of tremendous production plus the vast resources of General Motors, "Chevrolet" alone announces striking price reductions on all models of 1927.

For years "Chevrolet" has led the world in providing 'Quality at Low Cost.' But now in 1927 with a new and more beautiful car, a car finer in quality and greatly lower in price, "Chevrolet" stands supreme and unchallenged in "dollar-for-dollar value."

No matter in what price class you intend to buy or whether you plan to spend more or less than the price of a "Chevrolet" go to the salesroom of RALPH E. FURNISH, AT SPENCERVILLE, and see the most beautiful low priced Coach ever designed. Admire its marvelous style and grace; mark its many new fine-car features; learn for yourself by personal inspection why, as its new low price, it is the "Greatest Sensation of 1927."

A Valuable Market For the Farmer

The IRA J. MIX DAIRY COMPANY, at Garrett, is one of the institutions that is aiding materially in the development of this section of the state and has especially been instrumental in aiding the progress of diversified farming in the community.

The IRA J. MIX DAIRY COMPANY, furnishes the farmer with the most advantageous market for "Milk" and therefore operates an institution that is of great economical value to the public. Their prices are far more favorable than would be secured by the people if they had to ship eleswhere for it is a well known fact that this concern Pays the "Top of the Market" at all times.

One of the recognized principles of farming along scientific lines today is the raising of livestock. It is because of the excellent service and the desirable market afforded by such firms as THE IRA J. MIX DAIRY COMPANY that this feature is receiving more attention from farmers today and progress along this line is particularly noticeable in this community where the producer knows that he will receive the highest prices for his "Milk." Then, again, the Whole Milk Seller has no Cans to Wash, No Separator to turn and Keep in Repair, No Cream to Care For and No Loss of Butter Fat in the Skim Milk.

Another feature of the very satisfactory service of this popular concern is the courtesy and accommodation which marks their dealing with the producer. This establishment is under the direction of competent men and they have associated with them only such assistants as they can depend upon to render the most courteous service.

They are always willing and ready to give you the latest quotations and those wishing to market their "Milk" to the best advantage will do well to get in touch with this well known firm.

The large volume of business that IRA J. MIX DAIRY COMPANY is enjoying goes to show that the farmers of this section appreciate their fair and honest business methods and consequently are selling them their "Milk."

We are pleased to be able to mention the IRA J. MIX DAIRY COMPANY in this Farm Edition and we assure our readers that at this establishment they will get a "Square Deal."

CORN BORER JOTTINGS

bacco, sugar beets and soy beans. These Canadian farmers in the borer swept counties say that if they had heeded the warnings of their county councils corresponding to our farm bureaus and the agricultnral agents years ago they wouldn't be having the losses now that they have. A good many farmers did clean up but their efforts were for nothing because of an occasional careless plowman."

Would be Staggering Loss: "I think that if the European corn borer ever gets in here like it has in Ontario, it would be the most staggering loss that the corn belt has ever suffered," says John Wing, prominent potato grower and farmers of DeKalb county "We don't ofen realize it but corn is the foundation of all our feeding business and when the corn growing and feeding business is gone, there isn't much left in the corn belt."

Why Assistant County Agents: —A county agent's regular projects generally start in the spring and continue during the entire year. During the spring months is when the county agent is busy getting enrollment in various boys and girls clubs carried on in his county; during that time, the seed corn testing stations require attention, alfalfa campaigns are being planned, programs for the year's meetings are being outlined. In short, if he should take two months out to devote to corn borer work, his many other projects would go by the board. It was with this in mind that assistant county agents were appointed in the infested counties whose business it is to assist farmers in their many perplexities concerning corn borer destruction, thus leaving the regular county agents to prepare and execute their plans for the year's agricultural activities of that county.

Named From Human Body

The Anglo-Saxons gave names to many localities from the supposed resemblance to parts of the human body, as, headland, a neck of land, a tongue of land, the mouth of a river, the brow of a hill, the foot of a hill, an arm of the sea, and so on. Battersea was once known as Peter's eye, or Peter's island; Chelsea was Shelee-eye, and Bermondsey was Bermonds-eye, all of them having been originally islands.

The Flour Depends on the Mill

A mill struggling to keep pace with an age of progress with old, out of date, worn machinery, with meager facilities for making flour, with no thought of cleanliness or sanitation; a mill run by millers whose chief object is to get the wheat ground and the day's work done, cannot or could not be expected to produce a good flour.

The mill in the front recognized as an institution having the most modern mill machinery that money can buy, with every means of making their product clean and sanitary, with a reputation of being a sanitary mill run by millers who have made and are still making a study of their business in a continual effort to make their products better.

This is the class of mill that is operated by the AUBURN ROLLER MILLS, AT AUBURN, and from which is produced WHITE STAR FLOUR, the flour that is becoming a household word the country over.

THE AUBURN ROLLER MILLS at Auburn has one of the most modern equipped, clean, sanitary mills in the country. They are very particular not to allow an inferior product to leave ther mill; that is the reason for the high quality of White Star Flour.

Their greatest desire is to have their mill stand in the front ranks of mills throughout the nation, and it is their earnest desire that every barrel and sack of their White Star Flour that leaves their mill will go into the home as the best flour that modern machinery and careful milling can maunfacture.

The flour depends upon the mill and for this reason the management of THE AUBURN ROLLER MILLS insists that their mill not only be the most modern, but Clean and Sanitary Mill in Indiana, but also that White Star be the Best, Cleanest, Most Sanitary and finely milled flour.

WHITE STAR FLOUR is a real triumph of better milling. Ask your grocer of the opinion of a friend who has personally used WHITE STAR FLOUR. Their opinion is what counts. Then also remember that behind every sack of WHITE STAR FLOUR is a guarantee of satisfaction or your money back.

Ask your grocer for WHITE STAR FLOUR. If he does not have it, insist upon his getting it for you.

They have remodeled their mill since the fire and are now prepared to do custom grinding and exchange flour for wheat.

Health is Wealth

DR. R. E. TUTTLE at Hicksville, well known progressive practitioner of OSTEOPATHY, has kept pace with the times, and is now enjoying a large and increasing patronage from the city and the surrounding territory. In this great age of specialists in various professions, the science of Osteopathy has progressed wonderfully, and is still progressing very rapidly.

The moss-covered ideas of yesterday are thrown aside and the Progressive methods of today take their place. By adopting all advances of science that have aided the modern development this popular Osteopathic Physician has kept thoroughly abreast of the times.

There is not another unit of the field of research that has made greater progress than the modern science of Osteopathy. The greatest professional scientific minds of the world that have developed such material progress in this leading profession, and all features receiving the country's approval, are now available to the residents of this section when they consult this able Osteopathic Physician. His years of study, wire knowledge have implanted confidence in his rapidly increasing clientele.

A well merited tribute to his efficient methods of treatment is the high degree of general satisfaction expressed by his numerous patients among whom are people of the highest standing in the community.

Away back in 1874 the science of Osteopathy was discovered. Eighteen years later, in 1892, the first Osteopothic college was founded at Kirksville, Mo. Today there are numerous recognized schools throughout the United States. The entire course of study in the Osteopathic Colleges is now completed in four years. It is the only non-drug profession that is licensed in all states in the union.

We take pleasure in this DeKalb County Farm Edition in directing your special attention to DR. R. E. TUTTLE, and assuring you that when you consult with him you will be honestly advised as to what steps to take to gain the most rapid return to normal health and spirits.

Community Building

Service of Architect of First Importance

Most persons suppose that the plan of a small home is simply the result of following a few "rules of thumb," and that by a few trials and shufflings of mere spaces for rooms, with walls on four sides, and some kind of a cheap roof, a house can be compiled. The sorry truth is that many so-called houses emerge from this method, but certainly no correct solution of a home builder's problem is thus achieved.

Each room must have its appropriate size, shape, aspect and relation to other parts of the house. Proper relation of rooms means no waste of time to the occupants when going from one part of the house to another. A saving in steps is a real comfort to the busy housewife. All parts of the house must be properly lighted with sufficient window area, and doors must be properly placed so as to leave suitable spaces for furniture. An architect never studies plans for a home without placing properly the necessary pieces of furniture, and being sure that there is room enough for them.

Now, all this may seem simple enough, and it is, were not the inevitable factor of cost ever present to determine the limit of what can be done. This most important item can be controlled most properly by the architect who makes complete preliminary drawings for his client and obtains preliminary bids before final construction is begun. The plans made by an architect, complete in detail, show the contractor exactly what is expected of him. The architect eliminates "the extras" so often incurred by the unenlightened using poor plans or possibly no plans at all except "their builder's" sketches.

South Need Not Alone Be Land of Blossoms

In recent years landscape experts have demonstrated that more pleasing effects are produced by a few well-placed ornamentals than by the masses of vegetation which it was the custom to crowd into a front yard or back yard a few years ago. Perhaps when the Japanese taught us the beauty of a single long-stemmed blossom in an appropriate vase, they taught also new ideas in the beautification of grounds.

No climate is more favorable than ours for the production of trees, shrubs and flowers. In most parts of the South the soil is also adapted to easy planting and comparatively quick growth, though in light soils the use of fertilizer is important. In no other region can a flower garden be made to bloom so many months in the year. For this reason, the residents of other sections of the country have come to look upon the South as a land of blossoms; but sometimes actual conditions are disappointing.

With little effort every home in Mobile county could be made a place of infinite attractiveness. Let us make front yards smile, not only for our own pleasure and wellbeing, but also for the pleasure and benefit of strangers who come within these hospitable gates.—Mobile (Ala.) Register.

One-Story Factories

Where choice is unhampered, as by lack of ground space, the trend is strongly toward the one-story building for general factory purposes. Comparison of typical structures of each class shows much additional expense and waste room incidental to stairways, elevators and approaches in the multi-story building. Walls and columns also take up a greater part of the inclosed space, and for a total floor area of 72,000 square feet in a representative six-story building there is a non-productive floor area of 13,368 square feet, as against only 4,428 square feet in the one-story structure.

The cost of additional roof construction for one-story buildings is offset by the lower cost of floors which are laid directly on the ground in the single-story factory. Cost of land is a minor item as compared to that of the building.

Because of the large number of skippers which may be produced by a single piece of meat, it is advisable to destroy promptly all infested meat which can not be reconditioned by trimming.

To prevent silage flavor in milk, feed the silage immediately after milking. Some farmers feed it during or before milking and as a result find their milk flavored with the feed. Although milk will absorb some silage taint from the air, the greatest amount comes through the body of the cow.

The use of certified seed potatoes insures the grower against planting seed stock containing a high percentage diseased or weak plants, and with proper cultural attention and satisfactory soil and climatic conditions assures him a maximum yield of good quality stock. In 11,627 tests conducted in many localities in the United States and Canada the average gain from certified seed potatoes was 46.4 bushels per acre.

Progressiveness

"By the simple act of installing a telephone a family places itself among the list of progressive, enterprising people who are interested in the events that are taking place about them, who keep in touch with the affairs of their neighborhood, of the country and world.

"For this reason no man sets up a household now days without installing a telephone, whether his wife is left alone in town with the children, or is isolated in a farm house far from neighbors, every man wants his wife within speedy reach of assistance in case of need."

CITY OF AUBURN GETS $4,825

The city of Auburn has recovered subsantially all of the amount for which the American Surety company of New Work was liable on the bond of Walter W. Mounts, former collector of the Auburn Water and Light Works.

As readers will remember the case was tried twice, at Albion, the city secured a favorable decision. Following this every means was used to get the city of Auburn to compromise the amonut of the settlement, while the court ordered settlement at $5,000, the amount of the bond, while the loss is placed at $8,030. It was thot that the bonding company would take an appeal and while they are offering a compromise of $4,800 and interest from time of judgment, it would be better to settle the case rather than have expense of another suit.

Mr. Mounts is in Chicago where he is employed in the hardware department of a large department store.

STORY FROM THE START

Claude Melnotte Dabbs, returning from New York to his grocery store in Peace Valley, Pa., brings with him a stranger, Ned Carter, whom he introduces to his housekeeper, Aunt Liddy, as a chance acquaintance. Ned tells that he has broken with his folks because of their pacifistic leanings. Visiting in Clover Hollow, the two men almost run over a dog belonging to a girl whom Ned recognizes. Later Ned delivers a grocery order, and in his absence the girl, Dorothy Selden, tells Dabbs that Ned's name is Rangeley and that he is the son of the famous banker. Next morning Ned, starting to work as a delivery boy, takes an order marked "Johnston" to the "White House," where he meets Mary Johnston. She tells him the servants have left, leaving her alone with her mother. Ned promises to get new servants. Meeting Dorothy, who is his former fiancee, Ned evades explaining his presence in Peace Valley. He arranges with Ettie Pulsifer to begin work with the Johnstons, but she is unable to start at once. Ned returns to tell Mary about hiring Ettie, and in explaining this matter to the mother is astonished at her emotion when Dabbs' name is mentioned. The cook arrives, and Mary and Ned start to town for groceries. They are seen by Dorothy Selden. Worried over financial difficulties, Mrs. Johnston is bothered by Dorothy, who warns her there is something suspicious about Ned. After seeing Mrs. Johnston at the inn, Dabbs tells Ned that he has something that he wants to get off his mind.

CHAPTER V—Continued

Claude Dabbs leaned forward and looked. He was long about it and said nothing. Neither Mary nor her mother saw them. They were engrossed in the print. Mary was discussing it with the proprietor, while Mrs. Johnston examined it.

Claude quietly put out his hand and closed the door.

"Handsome woman, isn't she" said Ned. "Absolutely different in every way from her daughter. Did you ever see such a lovely contrast as they make?"

Still Claude did not speak. He stood staring before him. Then, noticing that Ned was looking at him, he pulled himself together, muttering something about a headache.

Ned was concerned. He offered to attend to Claude's business and drive him home. He was sure Mrs. Johnston wouldn't mind in the least. Or, he could arrange with some one to bring the truck back, and Claude could occupy the front seat with him.

Claude shook his head.

"It isn't anything, my boy. Just a headache. Get them often. Guess I drove the car up too fast and had the sun in my eyes. You stick to your job."

He was off down the street, leaving Ned protesting. A moment later, Mrs. Johnston and Mary came out into the sunshine.

* * * * * * *

In the library that evening Claude was far from being in his usual form. He was fidgety and restless, unable to settle down. Ned comfortably arranged himself, lit his cigarette and asked:

"Have you always lived in Peace Valley, C. M.?"

Claude started and gave Ned a searching look.

"Just about. I was the only son of my father, and he was a grocer, too. He wasn't a very good one. Good man—but not a good grocer. No judgment. Credit to everybody and never pressed a bill. He and Mom had ideas beyond grocering for me. They sent me to Rutgers to get an education, but I only stayed three months. I got into a kinda wild set."

"At Rutgers?"

"Yeh. I got gamblin' and lost fifty dollars and I got behind another fifty in my expense. Gee! It was tough. It's more'n twenty years ago, but I remember I thought of killing myself one night. What just about finished me was getting a letter from Mom telling me Pop was so sick they didn't expect him to live, and asking me to come at once.

"What did you do?"

Claude gazed at Ned, hesitated, and then said slowly: "Got home, in time, of course. Never went back though. My father died and I had to take on the grocery and run it, and—that's all."

"Take you up on that."

Claude laughed. "It's true, and that's what's eating me tonight. Here I've lived my forty-seven years, cautious and careful-like, and never once let go and did anything real brash. And when you get to forty-seven without any one really belonging to you, why it makes a man think hard. At forty-seven a man's in a position to take a survey of life, and—oh well, what does it amount to after all?"

He sighed. "I bet you've done more in ten days than I have in all my forty-seven years."

Ned shook his head. "You can't pull that off with me, C. M. You forget I've been watching you conduct your life and business for awhile." He leaned back to survey this new phase of the versatile C. M. Somehow he had never contemplated Claude Dabbs as restless and discontented.

To his astonishment, Claude did not wait to analyze or be analyzed further. He rose, crossed to the door, and jerking his head toward the office announced that he had to wrestle with an old account.

Ned, wholly unprepared for this move, had no time to think of anything to stop him but he had no desire to sit there reading and smoking alone.

Aunt Lyddy met him in the hall on her way upstairs. Eight o'clock, or half-past eight, was her hour for retirement. She looked at Ned with some surprise.

"Going out for a walk, Aunt Lyddy. Uncle Claude's busy."

"Suffering Saints! It's bedtime. Well, don't get into any more mischief than is natural and can't be helped." She yawned a good-night as the door closed, and took her way to bed.

Ned went past the lighted window of the office, little guessing that

"It's More Than Twenty Years Ago."

Claude Dabbs was struggling through one of the crucial moments of his life.

The woman whom Claude had seen at the Iron Hand inn, might have evolved herself out of the Polly Johnston he had known. He wished he had been able to study her unobserved and for a longer time. If it was Polly, what a wonderful thing life was. To make out of that discontented, ambitious drudge, the woman he had seen today! He commenced several imaginary interviews and stopped them, laughing at himself. He kept saying "if," yet he felt sure that it was Polly. He imagined speaking to her, meeting her. What would her face look like as it turned toward him? He remembered how it had looked this afternoon when he saw her in the Iron Hand inn as she spoke to the girl.

The girl! Absorbed in the thought of Polly, he had forgotten the girl. Who was she? Had Polly adopted her, or—

Dabbs smote his desk with his fist and rose from his chair. He began walking up and down, trying to piece Polly's life together, thinking, thinking, stopping, beginning again, with a new thread each time, but all pulled him back to the same question.

He bent over his desk, writing numerous letters—all to one woman. Finally he leaned back in his chair, tore up the last note and thrust it deep into the pile already in the waste basket. The thing would not solve itself. He was still at sea as to his first move.

Ned, thrusting his head into the doorway to say good-night, found a weary-looking, grim-mouthed man. This was so unlike Claude's usual face and greeting that he was puzzled. Claude stopped him.

"Don't mind the way I look and act tonight. I've got something on my mind. Something personal, and if I find it'll help any telling it, you're the one I'll come to."

"I'm your man, any hour of the day or night, Uncle, if I can really help you out."

When he had gone, Claude closed the door heavily and went back to the desk. He gave up letter writing for the night and sat there, absorbed in his thoughts.

CHAPTER VI

Though it was late, Ned could not sleep. Deciding to read awhile, he lit the student lamp, propped himself up on his pillow and picked up a book. He looked up as Claude Dabbs entered his room.

"Ready to drop off, Ned?" he inquired tentatively.

"Not a bit of it. All sails set for reading half the night," Ned assured him. "Come in and smoke, C. M."

Claude entered. Ned wondered what this midnight visit meant. He looked at Claude with a smile, and Claude, knocking the ashes from his cigar into a little blue vase, said:

"Ned, I told you about my being at Rutgers for three months and never getting back. But I didn't tell you all."

"No, I don't think you did."

"There was a—a girl there."

"Ah, no man ever does tell all about himself and a woman, does he?"

"Well, it isn't so easy to tell."

"Nothing about one's life and a woman ever is," Ned answered, as one deeply experienced in the world and women. "Why, if I tried to explain to myself, let alone you, what earthly attraction I ever found in Dorothy Selden, I'd just stampede."

"But this is different. It'll probably do me good to talk it out and be done with it. By the way—it isn't known in Peace Valley."

Ned nodded, understandingly.

"There was a young servant girl in the house where I was boarding. Now, this girl—well, an uncle of hers turned up one day with a pile of money, but he said every girl should have a husband. The girl was a regular terror for hating the men. I didn't blame her, being waitress and chambermaid at our boarding house was enough to sour any woman on young men.

"To make a long story short, the uncle was dying and he'd had an awful time finding the girl. She was the last of his family. Yet he said he wouldn't leave her a cent of his money unless she got married. She hadn't a fellow. His doctor told her the old man was getting low and there wasn't much time. He'd made a will and everything. It was quite a pile, and she got it all, providing she married before he died. She was in an awful stew about it. She hadn't told anyone in the house yet. I doubt if she'd told me if it hadn't just happened so. You see, she kinda trusted me and she wanted that money bad. Wanted to make herself into a lady. She had great ideas.

"Well, there we were. She was in a funk, and I was in a funk that night. I'd come home ready to kill myself because there was the telegram from Mom. I hadn't got the money to get home to Pop, and Mom said he was dying.

"Well, there she was fixing up my room. She always left my room to the last because she'd got to know I'd never make the row the others did or tell on her. I guess she kinda liked me. She was the only person I had to talk to, so I blurted out my troubles. She thought a moment and then she came out with hers. She hated men and didn't want to get married, or so she said—and I—well, I didn't care what I did, just so that I could get home, in time, to Pop."

He paused, glanced at Ned, then took up his confession. "Well, the upshot of it was, I couldn't borrow the money from any of the boys. I went with her to a country justice of the peace, who didn't know either of us, and we got married. I had promised that for five hundred dollars I'd do it, and never trouble her again. She could get a divorce for desertion whenever she liked."

He looked at Ned, as though expecting an interruption, but Ned simply stared at him.

In the next installment Claude tells more of his amazing marriage to Mrs. Johnston.

Campaign That Cave Vast Area to Whites

But for the success of Col. George Wright and his soldiers in the battle of Spokane Plains, a few years before the Civil war, development of the entire Northwest might have been indefinitely deferred. It was this battle that climaxed the campaign that resulted in crushing Indian resistance throughout a region as large as the present state of Oregon and made possible the settlement of the inland empire by white Americans, giving a new impulse to economic development. Earlier forces that had attempted to rout the Indians had been armed with defective, short range weapons, but Colonel Wright's men were equipped with the first high-powered rifles and howitzers employing explosive shells that ever had been used against the natives. The trip north from Walla Walla, Wash., was a triumphal march, terminating in the total defeat of the Indians near Spokane.—Portland Oregonian.

SCARF AND TIE GIVE GAY TOUCH; PRINT FROCKS SMARTLY TRIMMED

GAY spring colors are at their gayest when it comes to the scarf, or kerchief square or necktie, either of which is playing a strenuous part in enlivening the smart Twentieth century costume.

Wearing a scarf has grown into a habit with us modernists. If not a scarf, then a modish kerchief square, or at least a boyish tie like the one in the picture.

To choose a scarf has become a matter of unalloyed joy, for there's no qualms of conscience as to whether it is too gay, too bizarre. No matter if a whole palette of colors were to be used in its hand-painting or hand-blocking, there's no possibility of its offending good taste.

GAY SCARFS AND TIES FOR SPRING

If you aspire to be up to the last-minute mode, you will wear with your new spring tailleur a surah silk square in gorgeous plaid patterning, tucked under the collar of your coat with the triangular folds arranged at the front, or knotted in cowboy fashion at some effective spot on the shoulder.

What a bevy of artists and craftsmen must be working overtime this spring, to supply this insistent call of the mode for more and yet more hand-painted and hand-blocked scarfs. Designs like those in the picture are the fashionable kind and they are made of crepe, of georgette, of surah or of chiffon. It is quite something worth while, this being able to secure from any neckwear department genuinely hand-painted scarfs at a price which ordinarily one would expect to pay for merely a machine-print article.

The favor for magpie effects has resulted in a run on black-and-white scarfs. Now that navy has come into such prominence, navy-and-white hand-blocked types are wresting the honors somewhat from black-and-white.

The vogue for the two-piece suit which calls for the tailored blouse, brings the gay print tie, as pictured, into the list of popular neckwear for spring.

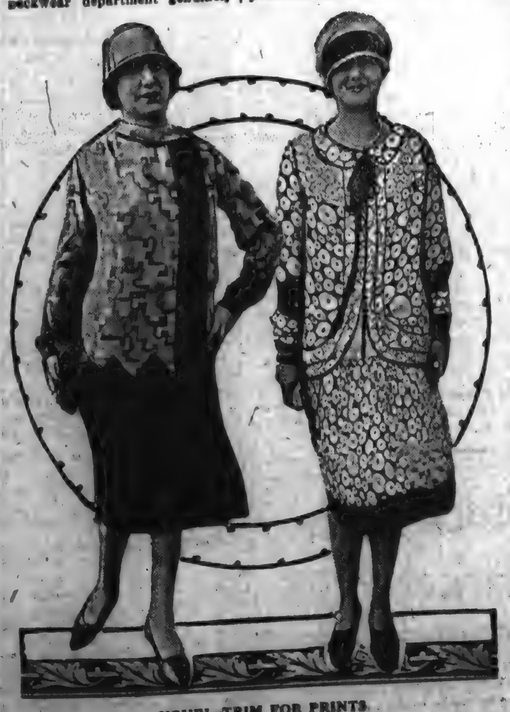
Seems as if everybody is going to appear in print this season—silk print, if you please. More fashionable than ever are gay print fabrics. It is the tiny patterned prints which are holding the center of the stage at present. Perhaps the debut of these diminutive prints was not greeted with the degree of enthusiasm they merited, but the more we see 'em the more we like 'em.

One of the pleasing things about these wee merry-go-round prints is their adaptability to every winsome and cunning styling. Perhaps that is why the couture of Paris have taken such a fancy to them—they rather challenge the imagination as to what can be accomplished in their fashioning.

The attractive Paris-made gown to the right in the picture, does it not capture one's fancy at a glance? Regardless of its air of unsophisticated youthfulness, it reveals the master-touch in every detail.

Special attention is called to the wide bandings of solid colored silk which trim each of the frocks in the picture. Using plain with print is a widely exploited feature of the mode. This fashion trend toward using solid with figured is variously interpreted, sometimes by complementing a simple one-piece silk print dress with a short coat of plain silk. This is the ensemble type especially favored by the Parisienne for immediate wear.

An elaborate conception of the plain-with-print idea is that of a recently designed silk frock of vivid chintzy pattern on a black background, the trimming of solid black borderings being handsomely worked with little red beads.



NOVEL TRIM FOR PRINTS

As the season advances it is more and more apparent that blue, especially navy, has become the first choice of smart women for spring. Consequently many silk print frocks are banded with navy, also the accessories which complete the costume are navy. The newest silk or chiffon prints present navy-with-white in keen competition to black-and-white.

PETER AT THE TRANSFIGURATION

LESSON TEXT—II Peter 1:16-18; Mark 9:2-29.

GOLDEN TEXT—And a voice came out of the clouds saying, This is my beloved Son, hear ye Him.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Jesus Shows Peter His Glory.

JUNIOR TOPIC—The Beauty and Glory of Christ.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—What Peter Saw and Heard in the Mount.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Majesty and Glory of Christ.

I. The Meaning of the Transfiguration (II Peter 1:16-18).

These verses are an inspired interpretation by one who was present and knew all that transpired. The hope of the disciples was crushed. When Christ announced His death which was to take place on the cross, they were unable to see how victory could issue from death. Jesus took with Him, Peter, James and John, and they went into the mountain by themselves. Before going into the mountain He declared that there were some standing in His presence who would not taste of death till they had seen the kingdom of God come with power.

Two men from the upper world were sent to converse with Jesus about His approaching death at Jerusalem—the very thing about which the disciples refused to talk. Then, too, God's own voice was heard in words of approval of Christ's course, directing them to hear the Master.

II. Jesus Christ Glorified on the Mountain (v. 2, 3).

He took the disciples "by themselves" and was "transfigured before them." This shows that the purpose of the transfiguration terminated upon the disciples and not on Christ. Christ's rebuke of Peter for his unwillingness to hear concerning His death apparently for a time estranged the disciples from Him. His appearance on the mountain typifies His visible appearance on the Mount of Olives (Zech. 14:4, 9).

III. Peter, James and John Represent Israel in the Flesh in Connection With the Kingdom (v. 2).

Christ is peculiarly the King of Israel. According to Ezekiel 37:21-27, the Israelites are to be the central people in the kingdom. This people shall be gathered from among the nations and united as one in that kingdom, in their own country.

IV. Moses and Elijah Appeared in Glory With Jesus (vv. 4-13).

These men in the glorified state are typical of the saints in glory. Moses who was once denied an entrance into Palestine appears now in glory representing the redeemed of the Lord who shall pass through death into the kingdom. Elijah represents the redeemed who shall pass into the kingdom through translation. Some shall be living upon the earth when the Lord shall come and they without dying shall be changed and thus pass into the kingdom (I Cor. 15:50-53; I Thess. 4:14-18).

1. Peter's proposal (vv. 5, 6).

So definitely was the method of the kingdom unfolded before Peter that he proposed to erect tabernacles for Christ, Moses and Elijah. It is true that the unveiling of the majestic person of Christ and the panoramic display of the kingdom somewhat disconcerted Peter, yet he grasped its central meaning and proposed to celebrate the advent of the kingdom which had been prefigured in a tangible way.

2. The divine voice out of the cloud (vv. 7, 8).

God declared Jesus to be His Beloved Son in whom He was well pleased. If one would know what is pleasing to God, let him study Jesus Christ who perfectly did His Father's will.

3. Jesus' charge (vv. 9-13).

He charged them that they should tell no man concerning the things which they had seen until He had risen from the dead.

V. A Demonstration of the Purpose of the Establishment of the Kingdom (vv. 14-29).

When they descended from the mountain of transfiguration they witnessed a great multitude in a state of perplexity. The immediate cause of this state was the grievous condition of a young man possessed with a demon (v. 18). This young man's state is representative of the nations who are oppressed by the devil. Just as this young man was grievously oppressed, causing him to cast himself into the fire and into the waters, so the nations today in their great perplexity are doing the things which will result in their own destruction.

The War at Close Range Described In a Remarkable Series By an Officer of the Marines —

Capt. John W. Thomason, Jr.

(Illustrated by the Author from Sketches Made on the Battlefield)

Copyright 1926 by The Bell Syndicate Inc. WNU Service

STORY FROM THE START

The author describes how the First battalion of the Fifth marines are quartered near Marigny during the first part of June, 1918, when they are suddenly sent up north to relieve the First division, bearing the brunt of the German offensive. Part of the Fifth wrest Hill 142 from the enemy and wait there for the German counter offensive they can see forming. A terrific German attack soon develops, wreaking fearful havoc among the marines, but not dislodging them. In the immediate vicinity other fierce encounters are reducing the American troops and forcing the necessity of replacements. On the sixth of June the Fifth runs into bitter fighting in the vicinity of Champillon and drives out the Boche, but at great cost. Then came the Bois de Belleau and again the marines acquitted themselves marvelously.

The lieutenant went happily back to his men. The word had already gotten around, by the grapevine route, and grinning heads stuck out of every hole. "Well, sergeant, pass the word to get set—goin' out, tonight." "Yes, sir! Ready right now! Is the division bein' relieved?"—"No, Sixth regiment comin' in—" "Well, sir, I hope to God they ain't late. Did you hear, sir, anything about us goin' back to St. Denis, and gettin' liberty in Paris, an' a month's rest—" That unaccountable delusion persisted in the Marine brigade through all of June and into July. It never happened. "No, I didn't hear any such thing. But it's enough to get out of here. This place is like the wrath of God!"

It was nearly midnight when the relieving troops came in. The lieutenant's opposite number reported, chap he hadn't seen since Quantico, back in another lifetime.—"Well, here we are! Out you go—" "I say, is it you, Bob? Heard you were killed—" "Oh, not at all—heard the same thing about you—not strange; lot of serious accidents have happened around here—" "Well, good luck—" "Sure—bon chance, eh?—so long—"

The platoon left the wood and angled down to the Torcy road. A string of shells howled overhead, 88s by the sound of them, and broke on the road. The lieutenant halted and watched: "Dam' unusual, shellin' here this time of night—must know it's a relief—" It was the conviction of all that the Boche knew everything, down to the movements of the lowest corporal.—"I think we'll cut a corner, and take a chance of gettin' through the line over yonder—" He led away from the road, through the trampled wheat to his right, away from the shelling. This was really No Man's land, for the line curved from the wood, and thrust out again along the line of another crest, also wooded.

Such intervals were watched by day and patrolled by night, and ration parties, carrying details, and other wretches who had to traverse them always sweated mightily and anticipated exciting incidents. It was full of smells and mysterious horrors in the starlight, that wheat. Once the platoon came upon a pig, feeding unspeakably. . . . The woods ahead grew plain; the men walked gingerly, straining their eyes at the shadows. . . . "Eighth machine-gun in there—take it easy, you—risky business, this—wish to God I'd—" The platoon stopped, frozen, as they heard the charging handle of a Hotchkiss snick back. A small, sharp voice barked: "Halt—who' there?"—"Platoon of the Forty-ninth—can we get through here?" "My God, I dam' near gave you a clip! What the hell, comin' up here—don't you know you ain't supposed to come bustin' around a machine-gun position you—" "All right—all right!—shellin' the road down there"—and the platoon scuttled past the Hotchkiss gun, while its crew reviled them. Machine-gunners are a touchy lot, prone to shoot first and inquire afterward; the platoon gave thanks for a man who didn't scare.

They turned left now and finally reached La Voie du Chatelle, where Regimental was, and there the old Boche always shelled. It was a little farm, pretty well knocked to pieces now, but Regimental was reported to prefer it to a change; they had the Boche's system down so that they could count on him. His shelling always fell into method when he had long enough, and the superior man could, by watching him a few days, avoid unpleasantness. La Voie du Chatelle, as the world knew, received his attention from 11:45 to 12:10 every night. Then he laid off until 8, when his day-shift came on. You could set your watch by it. The platoon went cheerfully past.

A full kilometer farther they hiked, at a furious pace. Then the lieutenant considered that they might catch a rest; they had come a long way and were in a safe spot. Ten minutes' rest out of every hour was the rule when possible. He passed the word: "Fall out to the right of the road," and sat down himself, a little way off, feeling for his chewing tobacco. You didn't smoke on the front at night—lights were not safe. And chewin' was next best. Then he observed that the platoon was not falling out. They stood in groups on the road, and an angry mutter reached him. "What th'ell?—Goin' out, an' then he wants to rest!" "Yeh, 'fall out on the right of the road,' he says, the fool—" The lieutenant knew his men, as you know men you live in hell with. He got up, chuckling.—"Well, if that's the way you feel about it—come on, you birds!" and he set them a killing step, at which no man complained.

The dawn was coming when they rendesvoused with the battalion in Bois Gros-Jean—beans for breakfast, and hot coffee, tins of jam! That afternoon they had off their clothes for the first time in three weeks or so, and swan in the Marne at a place called Croutte. And at formation they heard this order published:

VI Armee
Etat-Major
6930/2 An G2a le 30 Juin, 1918.

In view of the brilliant conduct of the Fourth brigade of the Second United States division, which in a spirited fight took Bourescbes and the important strong point of Bois de Belleau, stubbornly defended by a large enemy force, the general commanding the VIth army orders that, henceforth, in all official papers, the Bois de Belleau shall be named "Bois de la Brigade de Marine."

The General of Division Degoutte
Commanding VIth Army.
(Signed) DEGOUTTE.

"Yeh," said the battalion. "Now, about this liberty in Paris—" But they didn't go to Paris. They took a road that led through Soissons, and St. Mihiel, and Blanc Mont, and the Argonne-Meuse, to Nieuwied, on the far side of the Rhine.

* * * * * * *

We can now consider some marines singing one of the marine songs: "Bang Away, Lulu".

There is also a very noble song: the Marine Corps hymn. It is taught, along with close order drill and things like that, to recruits at Parris island and on the West coast. It begins:

"From the halls of Montezuma
To the shores of Tripoli,
We have fought our country's battles
On the land and on the sea. . . ."

and it closes, gloriously:

"If the army and the navy
Ever look on heaven's scenes,
They will find the streets are guarded
By United States marines. . . ."

This platoon, however, led by a brazen-throated gunnery sergeant, is roaring out:

"Bang Away, Lulu. . . .

CHAPTER IV

Ominous Events Leading Up to the Charge at Soissons.

The First battalion lay in Croutte-sur-Marne. It drank deep of the golden July weather, and swam noisily in the Marne, which swung a blue and shining loop below the town. The battalion took but little interest in the war, which could be heard growling and muttering intermittently to the north and east. Indeed, the unpleasant Bois-de-Belleau-Bouresches area was only a few hours' march distant, and Chateau-Thierry was just up the river. The guns were loud and continuous in that direction.

But the Second American division—marines and troops of the regular army—had just finished a hitch of thirty-eight days attacking and holding and attacking again, from Hill 142, on the left, through that ghastly wood which the French now called the "Bois de la Brigade de Marine," to Vaux, on the right; and in this battalion, as in the other units of the division, such men as had service were quite willing to think of something else.

July 14 came. "Sort o' Frog Fourth o' July," explained a learned corporal, standing in line for morning chow. But Croutte took on this day no especial joy in the far-off fall of the Bastille.

In the afternoon a Boche came out of a cloud and shot down in flames the fat observation balloon that lived just up the river from Croutte. Certainly there grew to be a feeling in the air. . . .

About one o'clock the morning of the 15th the Boche dropped nine-inch shells into the town. The battalion was turned out, and stood under arms in the dark while the battalion gas officer sniffed around busily to see if the shells were the gas variety. They were not, but the battalion, after the shelling stopped and the casualties were attended to, observed that in the east a light not of the dawn was putting out the stars. The eastern sky was all aflame with gun-flashes, and a growing thunder shook the still air.

The flies remarked that they were glad not to be where all that stuff was lightin', and after breakfast projected the usual swimming parties. Aquatic sports were then vetoed by regretful platoon commanders, since it appeared that Battalion H. Q. had directed the companies to hold themselves in readiness for instant movement to an unspecified place. Thereupon the guns eastward took on a more than professional interest. The civilians looked and listened, also. Their faces were anxious. They had heard that noise before. The hot July hours passed; the battalion continued to be held in readiness, and got practically no sleep in consequence. There was further shelling, and the guns were undoubtedly louder—and nearer.

Breakfast on the 16th was scant, and the cooks held out little encouragement for lunch. Lunch was an hour early, and consisted of beans. The shadows were lengthening when the bugles blew "assembly" and the companies fell in, taking the broad white road that led down the river. At the next town—towns were thick along the Marne from Chateau-Thierry to Meaux — they passed through the other battalions of the Fifth marines, jeeringly at ease beside the road.

Pathos in Survival of Colonial Remnant

About a half acre of colonial New York survives on the west bank of the Harlem river, just north of the University Heights bridge that connects West Fordham road with West Two Hundred and Seventh street. A long, low house covers a goodly portion of this plot that smacks so obviously of a more roomy past. The dwelling droops wearily as if under its staggering weight of years. It was erected when the Harlem was a picturesque stream with some pretense to scenic attractions.

The loneliness of this colonial survival is emphasized by the present commercial and industrial character of the locality as a whole. The river is lined at this point by brickyards, coal pockets and other similar effects not connected with exclusive society. The trim little craft that can be pictured as once pausing at the landing below the house have been supplanted by squat scows, riding low beneath the burdens of rugged merchandise they ferry to and from the yards. The silence of the section, that was once broken only by the natural notes of birds and insects, is now shattered by the snorts of straining tugboats and the clamorous horns of motor cars.—New York Times.

Lifting Machines Old Idea

Lifting machines with pulleys, ropes and winding drums, are as old as Archimedes, 236 B. C. They were used in the coliseum in Rome; in the Middle ages for military purposes; and the germ of the modern elevator is in the drawings of the universal inventor, Leonardo da Vinci, and in Agricola. But the earliest known primitive passenger elevator is that in the convent of St. Catherine, on Mount Sinai. It was worked by a capstan, and carried both people and stores to the upper floors, to be safe from the desert robbers.

A perforated rack to be fastened to the edge of a golf bag has been invented to keep clubs separated.

Constipation! How to Keep Bowels Regular

To Dr. W. B. Caldwell, of Monticello, Ill., a practicing physician for 47 years, it seemed cruel that so many constipated men, women, children, and particularly old folks, had to be kept constantly "stirred up" and half sick by taking cathartic pills, tablets, salts, calomel and nasty oils.

While he knew that constipation was the cause of nearly all headaches, biliousness, indigestion and stomach misery, he did not believe that a sickening "purge" or "physic" was necessary.

In Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin he discovered a laxative which helps to establish natural bowel "regularity" even for those chronically constipated. Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin not only causes a gentle, easy bowel movement but, best of all, it never gripes, sickens, or upsets the system. Besides, it is absolutely harmless, and so pleasant that even a cross, feverish, bilious, sick child gladly takes it.

Admirers of Bret Harte Get Relics

A portable writing desk presented to Bret Harte, the American author, by friends in England and used by him until his death in 1902, is included in a group of intimate Harte association items, autographed first editions and letters recently sold at auction in New York city. The objects belonged to Mrs. Richard Bret Harte of Los Angeles, for whose account they were sold.

The desk, which folds into a chest, has a drop front and is fitted with compartments for holding papers and envelopes and four drawers. It was used by Harte regularly in his European period and many of his later tales were written on it. Various personal articles used by him, including his silver pencil, pocket mirror, photograph case, papercutter, locket, cuff links and cigarette and cigar cases, also were sold.—New York Herald-Tribune.

Arabs Make Good as Desert Police

Because of their exceptional military qualities, more noticeable in the service of the French authorities, the Chambaa tribesmen are acquiring a distinction as conquerors of the Sahara.

They are less known to the world than are the Tauregs, plunderers of the camel caravans and explorers. However, the Chambaa are earning a reputation in tracking down the despoiling elements and have made it possible to cross the Sahara from Algeria to the River Niger with no fear of danger.

Staid as the camels on which they are mounted, able to ride over the hot sands for days and nights, stopping only to eat from their little bags filled with dried grasshoppers, and endowed with a keenness of sight that gives deadly accuracy to their rifles, these nomads inspire a great fear among the plundering tribesmen.

Many people imagine that Worms or Tapeworm cannot be expelled entirely. A single dose of "Dead Shot" proves that they can. 372 Pearl St., N. Y. Adv.

Diving Dog

Doris Pigeon of North Adams, Mass., has a "diving dog." Brownie, as he is named because of his color likes to go swimming better than anything else. Doris says that one of his best stunts is to stand on his hind legs and dive into the water. Brownie does all the other "dog" tricks, such as "praying," sitting up, and speaking for his dinner, but Doris and her friends think that his "diving" stunt is entirely different from anything else that dogs usually do.—Washington Star.

Now Off the "Ragged Edge" Stages Quick Return to Health

Art Sauer's illness now but a memory. For three months he suffered agony. Nervousness and knife-like pains made life a misery. Tanlac quickly helped him

Arthur Sauer lives at 1034 Berwin Street, Indianapolis. Several years ago he was working at high pressure when his health snapped. Here are his own words: "Plugging away without let-up, day in and day out, put me on the down grade, on the ragged edge of a bad breakdown. My hand trembled like a leaf and I had knife-like pains in my back, chest and kidneys. That's not natural for a young man, but I had to prod and urge myself to go to work.

"I could not rest and when I did close my eyes had disagreeable dreams. Rest time or meal time did me no good. I grew pale and weak and wasted away to a shadow of my old self. The lightest food caused heartburn, palpitation and bloating.

"Since taking Tanlac all these distressing symptoms have vanished. I am my old optimistic self again, have nerves like steel and eat and sleep like a lumber-jack. My weight has jumped from 135 to 153. Tanlac has given me so much strength and stamina that work is play to me and I can only heap praise on this wonderful tonic. It only took three bottles to fix me up. That was a year ago and I've been in fine shape ever since."

Mr. Sauer is but one of many thousands Tanlac has helped. Over a hundred thousand grateful friends have written to tell us what Tanlac did for them. It is nature's own tonic, made from herbs, roots and barks.

Your druggist has Tanlac. If overwork or neglect is telling on you, get a trial bottle today. Over 52 million bottles already sold.

Stanley P. Nelson, Quality Monuments

In the selection of a suitable monument or marker your thought and desire is to select something that is appropriate and within the amount of money that you feel you can spend and at the same time embody that which is lasting and beautiful in design.

Few people think of the enduring qualities of granite and lose sight of the fact that by placing a monument you are perpetuating this name through the coming century.

Stanley P. Nelson, who has for the past eight years been engaged in the monument business in this county and who has erected a large portion of the work in this vicinity, has just opened his New Monument Works, located opposite Woodlawn and Roselawn Cemeteries at Auburn.

Mr. Nelson has for your selection one of the most complete stocks of Monuments and Markers shown in Northern Indiana. Each Memorial in stock was shown at the National Convention of the Granite association last year and represents the last word in Memorial Autocraft. In addition to his shop at Auburn, Mr. Nelson maintains an office at 208 Central Bld., Fort Wayne, and enjoys a nice trade in that city.

It is a pleasure to suggest to the readers of The News, that before making your selection that you consult Mr. Nelson regarding a suitable memorial, he is a pleasant business man and is reliable.

24 Hours a Day, 365 Days a Year!

The Electric Light and Power Service of this section of Indiana, of which St. Joe is one, is supplied by the INDIANA & MICHIGAN ELECTRIC CO. The service which this company is giving to St. Joe and other towns is one without adverse criticism. The company furnishes a 24 hour Electric Service to this section, which has resulted in the building up of many small industries and in general an almost universal use of Elictric service in the homes. The service lines of the company cover every section of St. Joe, affording every home the opportunity to avail itself of the conveniences of Electric Service for lighting purposes.

While Electric Lights have become popular as the proper illuminant in the home, the merchants of the towns that this company supplies have recognized it as the proper form of illumination for the interior of their stores, to secure the best results for window lighting and also for exterior lighting to attract trade. Not only in connection with Electric Light has the INDIANA & MICHIGAN ELECTRIC CO. been active, but they maintain a staff of Power Engineers who are competent to enter the plant of any industrial concern and after making a survey submit a proposition which enables the plant owner to appreciate the fact that by installing group or individual electric drive that his cost of production can be decreased and his output in most cases increased. In addition, the Installation of Electric Motors takes up practically no space as compared with any other form of plant operation.

This Electricity is sold on Very Favorable Terms and is a uniform current that renders the Best of Light and Power. The operation of modern and successful Light and Power Plants is an undertaking that requires the services of men of vast experience and the comprehensive knowledge of electricity.

THE INDIANA & MICHIGAN ELECTRIC CO. have this work in charge of experts. It is a large concern, with ample capital, organization and resources. It has made Electric Light and Power Service its business.

Therefore: Any community is fortunate in having such a modern and efficient concern to solve the difficult problem of adequate Electric Light and Power Service so satisfactorily as the INDIANA & MICHIGAN ELECTRIC CO. is solving it for the cities and towns which it supplies.

It appeals to us that St. Joe, as well as other towns which are served by the INDIANA & MICHIGAN ELECTRIC CO., have evidenced a civic economy and wisdom which is conducive to the progress and prosperity of the community.

Why Save?

Well, there are a thousand good reasons why you should save, to every one that you shouldn't. There may be sickness, unemployment and many other uncertainties.

It is equally necessary that the average man make his thrift effective by consistantly building up his savings and placing them in sound investments that will earn at least a small, regular income. Money employed in honest, successful enterprises, is the most powerful foe of dependent old age. We have such securities and bonds for sale.

MONEY THAT WORKS

A MAN visited our bank a few weeks ago who had just sold some property.

HE WAS not ready to invest the money again for a few months but he did not want the money to 'loaf' and earn nothing for him during that time.

SO HE wanted to know what he could do with the money to make it earn some profit and be available in case he needed it.

OF COURSE we suggested a Certificate of Deposit. You can have a "C. of D.," for any amount and continue it as long as you wish. It pays a nice profit, too.

THERE IS no better plan for your money that is not otherwise employed. Let us tell you more about this plan.

HICKSVILLE GIRL IS KILLED BY CAR

Mother Witnesses Tragedy From Window, Powerless to Avert Accident

Funeral services were held Tuesday at 2 P. M. at the home of her parents for Helen Corinne Daub, six-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Fordyce Daub, East High street, who was killed shortly after 5 P. M. Saturday when hit by I. W. Koos, of Bryan, a rug salesman. Her neck and back were broken and she died in ten minutes.

The victim accompanied LeRoy Neidhardt down town in an auto to get his father, Harry Neidhardt who is employed at the Rank market. As they parked the car opposite the Neidhardt and Daub homes on their return, the girl challenged the elder Neidhardt that she would beat him up the hill. She dashed out of the car in front of the machine driven by Koos.

Eye witnesses said Koos was driving under ordinary speed and made every effort to avoid hitting the child by applying his brakes and swerving the car. He stopped and declared he had been unable to avoid the accident.

Mrs. Daub witnessed the tragedy from the window. She saw the approaching Koos car and realized the danger but the accident occurred so quickly that she was unable to avert it.

Mr. Neidhart carried the victim into the Daub home and physicians were summoned, but her injuries were beyond medical help.

Little Helen Corinne had developed an unusual talent for public speaking and musical readings. She had appeared on the community chautauqua programs and the night before her death had given four selections in a public entertainment at Edgerton, directed by Mrs. Darla Mann Fusselman, of whom ahe had been a pupil.

Burial took place at Forest Home Cemetery, with E. R. Kinsey as funeral director.

Mrs. Daub will be remembered as Miss Inez Hart, a former resident of St. Joe.

WHAT GRABILL CLUB IS DOING FOR ITS TOWN

"After several weeks of hard work on the part of the local commercial club, they are finally successful in negotiating with the Merriman Manufacturing cororation, of Fort Wayne, to move their plant to this place. Local business men feel sure that this is one of the best moves they have made for some time. This comany has been manufacturing a patented kitchen table which contains a folding ironing board and a compact breakfast set for apartment use. These articles are also made in toy size and it is this feature of their project which seems to be very promising."

Business men of St. Joe, does this prove anything to you as to what might be done here? With the prospects of a cigar factory not a single man has shown any interest in trying to bring this about, and why? It is time we consider business matters a little more serious for the benefit of our little town, and see whether possible to bring added business to St. Joe.

"Cheap" house paint is a luxury for the rich man only

If you have loads of money . . . if you can afford to buy twice as many gallons . . . if you can pay the cost of burning or scraping off the old paint every two years or so—and the added cost of frequent repainting . . . then you are rich enough to use a "cheap," low price house paint.

But if you want to make every dollar count—to get value for your money—then you'd better buy the best house paint money can buy—SWP. It costs no more in the beginning—and much less in the end.

Come in and let us tell you the truth about the exorbitant cost of "cheap" paint.

GUARANTEED!

SWP is guaranteed to look better, last longer, cost less per job and less per year than any house paint on the market.

CELEBRATING FOUNDING OF I. U. THIS MONTH

Bloomington, Ind., April 28.—The 107th anniversary of the founding of Indiana University, which is being celebrated this month in many parts of the world by I. U. alumni and former students, finds DeKalb county represented by twenty-three students at the state school.

In striking contrast to this present day showing from a single county was the opening enrollment at the University back in May, 1824, when Prof. Baynard R. Hall called together ten boys from the Hoosier backwoods and gave them their assignments in the only two courses afforded, Greek and Latin. Three lawyers, tree physicians, two ministers, a tanner and a merchant were products of that first class. All lived to manhood and served society efficiently. The most illustrious among them, Joseph A. Wright, became Governor of Indiana, U. S. Senator and U. S. Minister to Prussia. He made part of his way through school by sweeping out the building and ringing the bell.

Today this class of ten boys has grown to a registration which last year reached a total of 5,643 different students on the campus from every county in Indiana and from a number of other states and foreign countries. The simple cirriculum of two subjects offered in 1824 likewise has expanded to include approximately 700 different courses in more than thirty departments of the college of arts and sciences and in the schools of law, medicine, education, commerce, music, dentistry, and in the graduate school and the extension division.

The registrar's list carries the following students from DeKalb county for the second semester:

Ashley: George Urey.

Auburn: John Creasy, Louis Watson, Ralph Watson, Esther Whitten, DuVerne Graham (Dental school, Indianapolis,) Clayton Hathaway (Medical school, Indianapolis.)

Butler: Mary Eakright, Loren Jennings (Medical school, Indianapolis,) and Marguerite Kosht, (Nurses' training school Indianapolis.)

Garrett: Lorne Baurer, Lois Cobler, Marvin Dickson, Jane Hart, Harold Marts, Lowell Painter, Maurice Klinger, (Medical school, Indianapolis,) Mildred Painter, (Nurses' training school, Indianapolis.)

Hamilton: Glenn McClellan.

Hudson: Horner Stomm.

Waterloo: Harold Latier, Ross Myers and John Showalter.

In Society

The last meeting of the L. L. C. was held at the home of Mrs. Wm. Curie, entertained by Section No. 4. Mrs. Curie was presented a basket of carnations by the club for being the only one hundred per cent member, having never failed to be present at club for the past three years.

We were then pleasantly surprised by being taken to the home of Mrs. B. O. Shook at Spencerville, where a little playlet was given by Mrs. R. G. Walter, Mrs. L. B. Fisher, Mrs. C. G. Rectenwall, Mrs. Fred High, Mrs. Beeks Erick, Mrs. Wm. Tyndall, Mrs. L. O. Wade and Mrs. Shook of Spencerville and Mrs. Sharp from Fort Wayne. After which ice cream, cake and coffee were served.

We were then invited to return to Mrs. Curie's, where after numerous interesting contests, we were seated at tables and a delicious lunch was served. Twenty-seven members and guests being present. All departed at a late hour having enjoyed a very pleasant evening.

"MAKE IT SNAPPY," AMERICA'S SLOGAN, SAYS SOUSA

"Make It Snappy, is the watchword of the American music public," says Lieut. Com. John Philip Sousa, who is coming to the Shrine Auditorium, Fort Wayne, Sunday matinee and night for two concerts the afternoon starting at 3 o'clock and at 8:15 in the evening. Each season he finds that the thousands who hear his programs in all sections of America demand more action and more novelty—but particularly more action. More numbers and shorter ones, is their slogan.

"The musician should remember that the people who attend his entertainments are the people who dance to jazz music, attend the movies, get their news from the headlines, go out to lunch and get back to their offices in fifteen minutes and drive sixty miles an hour in an automobile enroute to the place where they expect to loaf all day," says Sousa. "The American lives so fast that he is losing his ability to give full attention to one particular thing for more than a few minutes at a time. I find that the way to hold his attention—and his patronage—is to give him music of the tempo of the country in which he is living.

"When I am in New York, I attend the performances of the symphony orchestras. Always I watch the men in the audience, and particularly those who seem to be business men. As long as the theme is to frequent variation, they are the most appreciative persons in the hall. But if a passage is long and involved, their minds will be wandering off to other things, generally to business. Even while the strings play allegro non tanto, the Tired Business Man is back at his desk.

"This lack of attention does not indicate a failure to appreciate good music. It merely indicates a trend of the national mind resulting from national habits of life, and the musicians should learn to meet it rather than to decry it."

DAILY VACATION BIBLE SCHOOL

May 2 to 23

The purpose of the Daily Vacation Bible School is to religiously educate the child. The school will not be able to completely educate the child, but it will be a great aid to the other agencies that are working toward this end. It will endeavor to aid the child in:

Developing a more adequate idea of the Heavenly Father.

Coming to a better understanding of Jesus, the Friend of Children and the Ideal Hero.

Learning stories of religious nature.

Developing friendly and helpful attitudes.

Learning to worship the Heavenly Father.

Developing right habits.

In acquiring Christian standards.

In order for us to have the best school possible it will be necessary for the parents and community to co-operate to the fullest extent with the local organization. All four churches of the township are represented in the organization.

Let us then work together for the betterment of our children.

Rev. McKnight, Mrs. C. R. Price, Mrs. Chas. Koch and Mr. and Mrs. F. B. Leighty attended the Sunday School Educational conference of division workers held at Garrett, Saturday Mrs. Price gave a talk on "Training the child and children's division work;" Mrs. L. E. Nicholson gave instructions on preparing work for Daily Vation Bible School work and Rev. Finch gave illustrated work on conducting Daily Vacation Bible School.

Mrs. Nicholson, who has been hired to teach the school at this place will be here next Friday and would like to meet all the officers and teachers at the school house at 9 A. M. She will give instructions to all those who will assist in the school at this place, which will open Monday, May 2. If you have a child in the home between 4 and 12 years of age, please see that he is a pupil in the first Daily Vacation Bible School held in St. Joe.

Mrs. Nicholson urges every patron of school to visit school some time during the three weeks that school will be in session.

STORY FROM THE START

The author describes how the First battalion of the Fifth marines are quartered near Marigny during the first part of June, 1918, when they are suddenly sent up north to relieve the First division, bearing the brunt of the German offensive. Part of the Fifth wrest Hill 142 from the enemy and wait there for the German counter offensive they can see forming. A terrific German attack soon develops, wreaking fearful havoc among the marines, but not dislodging them. In the immediate vicinity other fierce encounters are reducing the American troops and forcing the necessity of replacements. On the sixth of June the Fifth runs into bitter fighting in the vicinity of Champillon and drives out the Boche, but at great cost. Then came the Bois de Belleau and again the marines acquitted themselves marvelously. Replacements arrive to cover the heavy losses. The marines are relieved and a fine tribute to their fighting qualities is paid them by the general commanding the Sixth French army.

Beyond them was the Sixth regiment of marines, arms stacked in the fields by the river. Each battalion took the road in turn, and presently the whole marine brigade was swinging down the Marne in the slanting sunlight. Very solid and businesslike the brigade was, keen-faced and hard from the great fight behind them, and fit and competent for greater battles yet to come. The companies were under strength, but they had the quality of veterans. They had met the Boche and broken him, and they knew they could do it again. The rumble of the guns was behind them, and the rumor of the leave area still ran strong enough to maintain a slow volubility among the squads. They talked and laughed, but they did not sing. Veterans do not sing a great deal.

It was getting dusk when the First battalion of the Fifth, leading, rounded a turn in the road and came upon an endless column of camions, drawn up along the river road as far as one could see. The companies became silent.

"Camions! They rode us to Chatto-Terry in them busses—" "Yeh! an' it was a one-way trip for a hell of a lot of us, too!" "Close up! Close up an' keep to the right of the road."

"Camions! That's a sign they want us bad, somewhere on the line," commented the lean first lieutenant who hiked at the head of the Forty-ninth company. "Walter,"—the officer beside him—"I wonder what happened yesterday an' today, with all that shooting." "Don't know—but this Chateau-Thierry salient is mighty deep an' narrow, unless the Boche spread himself yesterday. . . . If we were to break into it, near one of the corners. . . ." "Yes! Well, we're right on the tip of it here—can jump either way—Lord! there's a lot of these conveyances."

Later the battalion knew what had happened on July 15, when the Boche made his final cast across the Champagne country toward Rheims and Epernay; and his storm divisions surged to the Marne, and stayed, and lapped around the foot of the gray mountain of Rheims, and stayed. Just now the battalion cared for none of these things. It had had no supper; it faced a crowded trip of uncertain duration, and was assured of various discomforts after that.

Well accustomed to the ways of war, the men growled horribly as they crammed into their appointed chariots, while the officers inexorably loaded the best part of a platoon into each camion, the dusk hiding their grins of sympathy. "Get aboard! get aboard! Where'll you put yo' pack? Now what the hell do I know about yo' pack—want a special stateroom an' a coon valley, do yuh, yuh—!" The sergeants didn't grin. They swore, and the men swore, and they raged altogether. But, in much less time than it took to tell about it afterward, the men were loaded on. The officers were skilled and prompt in such matters.

Wizened Annamites from the colonies of France drove the camions. Presently, with clangor and much dust, they started their engines, and the camion train jolted off down the river road.

They left the river, and by the testimony of the stars it seemed to the lieutenant of the Forty-ninth that they were hurrying north. Always, on the right, the far horizon glowed with the fires of war—flares, signal lights, gun-flashes from hidden batteries; the route paralleled the line. The lieutenant visualized his map: "Followin' the salient around—to the north—the north—Soissons way, or Montdidier. . . . The Boche took Soissons. . . ."

Quiet French villages along the road, stone houses like gray ghosts under the pale moon, and all lights hooded against Boche planes. Long, empty stretches of road. Shadow columns of French infantry, overtaken and passed. Horse-drawn batteries of 75s on the move. Swift staff cars that dashed by, hooting. Then, long files of horsemen, cloaked and helmeted, with a ghostly glint of lance-heads over them—French cavalry. Presently, dawn, with low clouds piling up in the rosy sky.

It was mid-forenoon when the train stopped, and the battalion climbed out on cramped legs. "Fall in on the right of the road. . . . Platoon commanders, report. . . . Keep fifty yards' distance between platoons. . . . Squads right. . . . March!" and the companies moved off stiffly, on empty stomachs. The little dark Annamites watched the files pass with incurious eyes. They had taken many men up to battle.

Company by company, the First battalion passed on, and behind them the other battalions of the Fifth marines took the road and, after them, the Sixth. "None of the wagons, or the galleys—don't see the machine-gun outfits, either," observed the lieutenant of the Forty-ninth company, looking back from the crest of the first low hill. Here the battalion halted, having marched for half an hour, to tighten slings and settle equipment for the real business of hiking. "They may get up tonight, chow and all—wonder how far we came, an' where we're goin'. No, sergeant—can't send for water here—my canteen's empty, too. All I know about it is that we seem to be in a hurry."

The battalion moved off again, and the major up forward set a pace all disproportionate to his short legs. When the first halt came, the usual ten-minutes rest out of the hour was cut to five. "Aw hell! forced march!" "An' the lootenant had forgot everything but 'close up! close up!"—Listen at him—"

The camions had set them down in a gently rolling country, unwooded, and fat with ripening wheat. Far across it, to the north, blue with distance, stood a great forest, and toward this forest the battalion marched, talkative, as men are in the first hour of the hike, before the slings of the pack begin to cut into your shoulders. . . . "Look at them poppies in the wheat."— "They ain't as red as the poppies were the mornin' of the 6th of June, when we went up to Hill 142—" "Yep! beginnin' to fade some. It's gettin' late in the season." "Hi—I'm beginnin' to fade some myself—this guerre is wearin' on a man . . . remember how they looked in the wheat that mornin', just before we hit the Maxim guns?—red as blood—" "Pore old Jerry Finnegan picked one and stuck it in the buckle of his helmet—I seen it in his tin hat after he was killed, there behin' the hill— I'll always think about poppies an' blood together, as long as I live—" This last from little Tritt, the lieutenant's orderly.

"Long as you live—that's good!" gibed Corporal Snair of the company headquarters group. "Don't you know by now how expendable you bucks are?"—the lieutenant heard, and remembered it, oddly enough, in a crowded moment the next day, when he lost the two of them to a hard-fought Maxim gun.

No wind moved across the lonely wheatfield; the bearded stalks waved not at all, and the sun-drenched air was hot and dead. Sweat made muddy tunnels through the thick white dust that masked the faces of the men. Conversation languished; what was said was in profane monosyllables. Clouds came up, and there were showers of rain, with hot sunshine between. Uniforms steamed after each shower, and thirst became a torture. The man who had the vin blanc in his canteen fell out and was quite ill. "Hikin'—in. . . ."—

After interminable hours the column came to the forest and passed from streaming sunshine into sultry shades. It was a noble wood of great high-branching trees, clean of underbrush as a park. Something was doing in the forest. Small-arms ammunition was stacked beside the road, and there were dumps of shells and bombs under the trees. And French soldiers everywhere. This road presently led into a great paved highway, and along it were more of the properties of war—row upon row of every caliber of shell, orderly stacks of winged aerial bombs, pile after pile of rifle and machine-gun ammunition, and cases of hand-grenades and pyrotechnics. There were picket-lines of cavalry, and park after park of artillery, light and heavy. There were infantrymen with stacked rifles.

The highway led straight through the forest. Many roads emptied into it, and from every road debouched a stream of horses, men, and guns. The battalion went into column of twos, then into column of files, to make room. On the left of the road, abreast of the marines, plodded another column on foot—strange black men, in the blue greatcoats of the French infantry and mustard-yellow uniforms under them.

The sultry afternoon passed wearily, and at six o'clock the battalion turned off the road, shambling and footsore, and rested for two hours. They found water and filled canteens. A few of the hardier made shift to wash. "Gonna smear soapsuds an' lather all over me—the hospital corps men say it keeps off mustard-gas." But most of the men dropped where the platoon broke ranks and slept. Battalion H. Q. sent for all company commanders.

Presently the lieutenant of the Forty-ninth returned, with papers and a map. He called the company officers around him, and spread the map on the ground. He spoke briefly.

"We're in the Villers-Cotterets woods—the Foret de Retz. At H hour on D day, which I think is tomorrow morning, although the major didn't say, we attack the Boche here"——pointing—"and go on to here—past the town of Vierzy. Eight or nine kilometers. Three objectives—marked—so—and so. The Second division with one of the infantry regiments leading, and the Fifth Marines, attacks with the First Moroccan division on our left. The Frog Foreign Legion is somewhere around, too, and the First American division. It's Mangin's Colonial army—the bird they call the butcher. . . ."

It was dark when the battalion fell in and took the road again. They went into single file on the right, at the very edge of it, for the highway was jammed with three columns of traffic, moving forward. It began to rain, and the night, there under the thick branches, was inconceivably black. The flies couldn't see the man ahead, and each man caught hold of the pack in front and went feeling for the road with his feet, clawing along with the wheels and the artillery horses and machine-gun mules. On the right was a six-foot ditch, too deep in mud to march in. The rain increased to a sheeted downpour and continued all night, with long rolls of thunder, and white stabs of lightning that intensified the dark. The picked might of France and America toiled on the road through the Villers-Cotterets forest that night, like a great flowing river of martial force. No battle ever tried them half as hard as the night road to Soissons. . . .

The rain ceased, and the sky grew gray with dawn. The traffic thinned, and the battalion turned off on a smaller road, closed up, and hurried on. Five minutes by the side of the road to form combat packs and strip to rifle and bayonet. "Fall in quickly! Forward!"

Overhead the clouds were gone; a handful of stars paled and went out; day was coming. The battalion lightened, hastened. They perceived dimly, through a mist of fatigue, that a cloudless day was promised and that the world was wonderfully new washed and clean—and quiet! Not a gun anywhere, and the mud on the road muffled the sound of hob-nailed boots. "Double time! Close up! Closeup, there!"

There had been fighting here; there were shell-holes, scarred and splintered trees. The battalion panted to a crossroads where stone buildings lay all blasted by some gale of shell-fire. And by the road what looked like a well! The flies swayed toward it, clutching at dry canteens—"Back in ranks! Back in ranks, you—"

Then, barbed wire across the roadway, and battered shallow trenches to right and left, and a little knot of French and American officers, Major Turrill standing forward. The leading company turned off to the left, along the trenches. The Forty-ninth followed in column. "Turn here," ordered the major. "Keep on to the left until you meet the Moroccans, and go forward. . . ." The Forty-ninth went beyond the trench still in column of route, picking its way through the woods. The lieutenant looked back at his men as he went; their faces were gray and drawn and old; they were staggering with weariness — "Fix bayonets!—" and the dry click of the steel on the locking-ring ran along the ragged column, loud in the hush of dawn.

Inviting Crime

"Look here what I bought for that dog of Junior's," Mr. Burton announced, throwing a package on the table.

Mrs. Burton unwrapped it. "Why George!" she exclaimed. "A dog collar, of all things!"

"Yes, and I gave $3.50 for it," Mr. Burton related.

"Three dollars and a half!" echoed Mrs. Burton. "What on earth! I don't understand! You've always said you had no use on earth for Junior's dog and you wished somebody would steal it."

"Yes, that's just it," Mr. Burton agreed. "With that collar on it some one will be sure to steal it now."—Kansas City Star.

STORY FROM THE START

Claude Melnotte Dabbs, returning from New York to his grocery store in Peace Valley, Pa., brings with him a stranger, Ned Carter, whom he introduces to his housekeeper, Aunt Liddy, as a chance acquaintance. Ned tells that he has broken with his folks because of their pacifistic leanings. Visiting in Clover Hollow, the two men almost run over a dog belonging to a girl whom Ned recognizes. Later Ned delivers a grocery order, and in his absence the girl, Dorothy Selden, tells Dabbs that Ned's name is Rangeley and that he is the son of the famous banker. Next morning Ned, starting to work as a delivery boy, takes an order marked "Johnston" to the "White House," where he meets Mary Johnston. She tells him the servants have left, leaving her alone with her mother. Ned promises to get new servants. Meeting Dorothy, who is his former fiancee, Ned evades explaining his presence in Peace Valley. He arranges with Ettie Pulsifer to begin work with the Johnstons, but she is unable to start at once. Ned returns to tell Mary about hiring Ettie, and in explaining this matter to the mother is astonished at her emotion when Dabbs' name is mentioned. The cook arrives, and Mary and Ned start to town for groceries. They are seen by Dorothy Selden. Worried over financial difficulties, Mrs. Johnston is bothered by Dorothy, who warns her there is something suspicious about Ned. After seeing Mrs. Johnston at the inn, Dabbs tells Ned that he has something that he wants to get off his mind. He confesses that twenty years ago he married "Mrs. Johnston" so that she could inherit her father's estate.

"Yes," Claude Dabbs told him stoutly, as though in answer to the unspoken question, "that's what I did. Married for money. Sold myself for five hundred dollars!"

"Great Scott, C. M.! Get on! What happened?"

"After I married Polly, and got half the money down, I came home here, saying nothing to anyone. The understanding was that I was to go back at the end of the week, sign the necessary papers, and get the rest of the money. That was to end the whole business. When I got home, Pop was dying. He died the night I got home, and was buried three days after.

"After the funeral I made an excuse to Mom that I had to go back to settle things, and so I got away. I went to the lawyer's office and signed the papers. He told me that Polly's uncle was dead, had died two days after I married Polly, and I was to take the papers and deliver them to her. She was staying at a little second-rate hotel. She'd given up her job but she didn't want to spread herself until she got away from the town where she'd been a servant girl. Polly herself was to give me the rest of the money. I'd only been paid half before I went home. The lawyer laughed, when he told me that, and added: 'Women are women. She would have it so.' Then he looked sly, and said: 'Maybe this isn't such a mercenary affair as I was led to believe. If I were you, I'd make her see reason and stay in America before she spends all of her fortune in traveling, or gets taken in by foreigners. It's a lot of money. If I were in your shoes, I'd never let her go.'

"I walked away from him, thinking if he was in my shoes he'd be in a bad way. I didn't know whether it was because I was all worn out with grief over Pop, and sleepless nights and worry about Mom and the future, or whether it was because I was miles away from home and lonely. Somehow I didn't seem like myself. I seemed like some other person. I tried to shake the feeling off. I said to myself: 'All the time I'm with Polly, I'm going to be just myself—the Claude Dabbs I feel like. She don't know me as Claude Dabbs of Peace Valley.'

"I saw my future. A hard struggle with a country store and no time to do anything but work. God! how I rebelled in that short walk down. I didn't see why I should be shut up in a grocery for a lifetime, and that was all I could see before me. Why should my father have had to die, when there were men walking round hale and hearty, lots older than he.

"And I wanted Pop back! Nothing to do with the financial part of it, that ache. I cared a lot. Why, I could have stood the grocery part of it forever—for Pop. I hated every man of his age that came near me alive and happy, while Pop lay still. There was a sore place in my heart that I couldn't bear, marked with his name. Every time I went near it, I turned away, like you jump when you have had a bad spot and the dentist's fooling round.

"All the things I hadn't done that Pop wanted me to do; all the times I'd disappointed him and acted mean were there. It needed only a touch to send me running down that city street, crying like a baby.

"So I shut it off, in a corner of my mind, and said to myself: 'That's got nothing to do with this Polly I'm going to see. I'll get all through with this young woman, and then I'll go home to what I've got to go home to. But she's nothing to do with it.'"

Ned stopped him. "C. M.," he said, "I don't think you exactly hated this Polly."

"Maybe not, but I wasn't looking forward with much pleasure to seeing her. I'd hardly looked at her in the boarding house, unless I had to yell at her for not tidying up my room, or for tidying it so I couldn't find anything; or not bringing my laundry up fast enough. No, that isn't quite honest. I'd noticed her, all right. She was too pretty not to notice. But my mind had been on other things then, and she was just—Polly. Understand?"

"I think I get the state of mind you were in," Ned admitted thoughtfully, "but I still think you liked the girl a lot more than you admit."

Claude sighed. "It's possible. It's so hard to make people see, though, that sometimes you're one part of yourself and sometimes you're another."

He began again, as though anxious to get on.

"It was getting pretty late and I thought if I got there just in time for supper I would have to ask her to eat with me. I didn't think I could stand talking to her, so I stopped at a restaurant.

"I Looked Up and There Was Polly."

"Son, I don't know that I can make you understand it, but I might just as well have had something strong to drink. The food made me feel so queer; like plowing ahead at someone or something. I took a little walk, and then I said to myself that now I'd only got to get it over and then I could take the nine o'clock train home—and that would be all of that.

"The hotel wasn't far from the station, and it wasn't very handsome, I guess, but it was finer than any I'd ever been in. I asked for Polly by her own name, only saying Mrs. instead of Miss. It was her own idea. She didn't wish to have anything like talk about us. I said I was her husband. The woman called up and told me Polly would be down in a minute.

"The parlor was full of people, but nobody I knew. I sat down and waited, and while I waited that hurry and rush of excitement inside me kept up. It was hard to sit still. I wanted to walk about and talk, but I held myself in. I looked at the people who came in, and they all seemed the same kind of red-faced, common people. Nobody I knew.

"Then I heard a voice near me say: 'Well, so it's you.' I looked up and there was Polly."

Claude glanced at Ned, who, his eyes shaded with his hand, seemed to be listening intently.

"Wish I could make you see just what she looked like to me. I'd never seen her in right clothes; just house dresses and apron things. There, beside me, was one of the prettiest girls I'd ever seen in my life. She was dressed all in black—mourning for her uncle—and it set off her fair skin. It made her red hair look like autumn leaves, kinda flaming and yet soft. I'd mostly seen that hair bundled up in a dusting cap. Well, I guess I gawked at her before I rose to my feet, and Polly was confused, too, and kept looking away from me.

"'We can't say anything private here,' she said. 'Maybe you'd better come to my room.'

"I told her I guessed that would be all right, for I'd said I was her husband when I came in.

"'Oh,' she says, 'did you? Then it's all right. Come along.'

"We went up and she opened the door and I went into her room."

Claude's pipe went out. There was silence in the room as he filled it, but Claude did not feel it. He had forgotten that he was telling the story to Ned. He had forgotten everything that belonged to himself in the present. He was back in the past, seeing the shy, awkward Claude Dabbs on the threshold of that girl's room. He remembered that already it looked different from the rest of the house. She had flowers in a vase on the rough, cheap, pine dressing table. She had spread clean towels on that, on the bureau and on her trunk, discarding the dirty-looking scarfs that had adorned them. They had been too shy to look at each other. He had stared out of the window.

Every time Dabbs brought his eyes around to her, he caught her looking at him, and finally she laughed.

It was wonderful, that laugh. It made him feel young again. He had been feeling like an old man, with a weight of sorrow and care on his shoulders, but that girl's laugh had made him feel his own age. Her laugh was young and spiced with deviltry. Back of it all was the new strange feeling the girl gave him.

He saw himself solemnly giving her the papers. He watched her while she put them carefully away in a bag, and counted out the rest of the money. There had been a moment's awkwardness over that, he remembered. He had made an involuntary movement of his hand, to give it back to her, but she as involuntarily, thrust it back at him. Then he laughed, folded it up and put it away.

But he did not go. He had known that he should, but he could not. He sat down beside her, and they began talking, awkwardly enough at first. Then suddenly they were no longer the Claude and Polly of the boarding house days, but two young things who had lots to say to each other, and enjoyed saying it.

She told Claude of her plans. She meant to travel and study and see everything. She was fond of reading. Indeed, she had read and planned in a way that seemed remarkable to him for a girl, a servant girl, too, but he noted that she did not ask about his plans. Every time their conversation touched his life, present or future, she changed the subject. Then he knew that she meant him to understand she would have nothing to do with him after tonight. After tonight, Claude would not see her; after tonight she would be away enjoying things, out in the freedom of the world, with money, and she would have no use for him, no use at all. It had eaten into the young Claude's consciousness that she was going to use him as a shield until she met some one she really cared for. Then she would drop him, and his name, "After tonight" echoed and re-echoed in his mind, and he forgot that he had no right to expect anything else, for he had taken her money. Jealousy gradually took possession of him. He watched her talk and smile. It struck nine. His train had gone.

He did not go; merely sat watching her. He had known, even then, that she saw what she had done to him, and it had gone to her head. He had been one of the "boarders" in the old days, one for whom she must fetch and carry. Now he was at her mercy.

He began to think of lots of things that proved she had not been as indifferent to him in those old boarding house days as she had pretended. Even before the money came, Polly Johnston, the man-hater, had a soft spot for one man—Claude Dabbs. All unconsciously she had let him see that. Claude had wondered afterward if it was not a conscious use of her new-found power. He began to believe that it was not entirely by accident that she had made him come to her for the money, instead of having the lawyer pay him. He had never, until then, guessed that the girl liked him—that way. But now she told him more than she meant, or knew, and when she realized this, she pulled herself up and began telling him that the lawyer had arranged for her to go to France. She would go as a young widow, to people who would help her; let her see everything and do everything she wanted to do.

He remembered how the other, younger Claude, after listening to her silently for awhile, had blurted out:

"When are you coming back?"

"Never!"

Follow the astounding adventure of Polly and Claude in the next installment.

Sting Removed From Rebuke of Small Son

I have a little son called Jim—just Jim Nye, that's all—and one day when he was only five years old I requested him to do some slight thing or other, but he kept on playing and humming a little song about the "sand man." I spoke to him again more firmly, for as a general thing my children regarded me more as a source of amusement than anything else, and as he did not stir I gave him a gentle spank with the dictionary. It did not hurt him, and he rather enjoyed it until he looked at my face and saw that I was in earnest, and then his heart broke with a large report.

At dinner he said nothing and ate very little, and when it was over and we were just about to leave the table he got up in his mother's lap and said:

"Mamma, I wish you had mawied Jesus. He loved little children."

This episode did not make me feel so frightfully proud of myself, but I was glad that the child at least regarded his mother as a very worthy woman.—From "Bill Nye, His Own Life Story," by Frank Nye.

SWEATERS VIVIDLY PATTERNED; BEGUILING SNUG-FITTING HATS

WHEN springtime arrives with its program of outdoor events, it is the girl in sports attire who is the center of attraction. This year she is sponsoring knitwear of the smartest. There is simply no end to novelty, this season, in the realm of knitted togs. As to sweaters, the subject is exhaustless.

The vivid, lovely colors of the new sweaters, who can describe them? Especially those in hand-blocked effect setting forth a striking modernistic patterning such as pictured herewith.

The slipon type is a great favorite this season, and it is smartest worn with a white jersey or silk knit skirt. A convertible collar, such as styles the sweater in the picture is much to be desired as it adds both to its modishness and its utility.

Knitted construction grows more and more complex. All sorts of fancy stitches are called into play to produce openwork stripes and novel lacy effects—in fact the newest things show these sheer filmy patternings. Quite out of the ordinary is the Turkish toweling knitwork, of which entire suits are made.

Horizontal stripes play a colorful and spectacular part in sweaterdom. Compose effects are also high-lighted throughout knitted modes. Another striking feature is the prominence given to black and white combinations.

Much of the effectiveness of the season's knitted costumes is due to the accessories, such as a felt or crochet-straw hat in color tuned to the ensemble. A bewitching belt of gold kid or embroidered rafia straw, adds charm upon charm. And there is the new printed silk or cotton kerchief; it has entered into the scheme of things with a will. No golf links scene is complete without the picturesque silk square tied in every capricious way—knotted at front, at shoulder, or just caught with a bar pin.

Devotees of the little felt hat refuse to be influenced by the many rumors of its "positively last appearance." Not while the winsome felt persists in staging a continuous performance of new tricks of color and design, not while Paris continues to send over such beguiling new felts, will women of smart dress be persuaded to bid farewell to the snug-fitting felt, which has so long been the hat of her choice.

Now that every perfectly appointed wardrobe includes headwear matched to each costume, there is need for hats of every genre from felt to fabric to straw. The exquisite felt types in the picture are an eloquent argument in their own favor.

The employment of felt in two tones, is one of the attractions of hat number one in the group. It illustrates how effectively the millinet trims felt with felt this season.

Just below this model is a patrician felt style, which introduces a wide grosgrain ribbon as a background for an embellishment of tidbits of colorful felt. The shape itself is beige.

The modish felt in the lower left corner is handsomely elaborated with an applique of cutout felt leaves and fruit.

The next clever model employs two shades of faille silk in connection with leaves of felt which are stenciled with gold paint.

To the right is a felt of enticing design which displays deft handicraft, also a most exquisite color scheme of rose beige with monkeyskin.

For the lovely model at the top to the right, gold tinsel thread and colorful jewels unite in achieving the decorative note.

There is this to be said of felts, only the finest qualities are now in demand and their coloring must be choice, their styling convincing, in order to win milady's acceptance.

PETER'S DENIAL AND REPENTANCE

LESSON TEXT—Mark 14:53, 54; 66-71; Luke 22:61, 62.

GOLDEN TEXT—Let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Peter Grieves Jesus and Is Sorry.

JUNIOR TOPIC—The Story of Peter's Disloyalty.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—How Jesus Is Denied Today.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Danger of Sudden Temptations.

I. Peter's Downfall (Mark 14:29-71).

This began when he refused to hear about the cross and ended when he, with a foul oath, declared: "I know not the man." When the disciples would no longer hear Christ's message about the cross, they not only ceased to grow in knowledge, but they began to deteriorate in moral discernment and were exposed to the possibility of the shameful denial of their Lord. Steps in Peter's backsliding:

1. Overweaning self-confidence (vv. 29-31).

His unwillingness to face the cross alienated him from Jesus and when apprised of the fact that the disciples would all forsake Jesus, Peter declared that Jesus was certainly mistaken, saying: "Although all shall be offended, yet will not I." Our condition is most perilous when we are most sure of our safety.

2. Sleeping at the post of duty (v. 37).

In one short hour the very one who was so confident of his self-sufficiency had fallen asleep instead of watching. The only way to escape from backsliding is to watch.

3. Lack of prayer (v. 38).

The legitimate inference from the Lord's words "watch and pray" is that He had commanded them to pray as well as to watch. The reason there is so little prayer is due to the lack of the sense of need of God's help.

4. Misguided zeal (v. 47).

Peter drew a sword and cut off an ear of a servant of the high priest (John 18:10) when they came to arrest Jesus. He was thus zealous for the Lord. He was trying to make up in outward service his conscious lack of communion.

5. Followed Jesus afar off (v. 54).

Christ's rebuke for taking the sword and the awkward position in which his act had placed him, caused him to follow afar off. He keenly felt Christ's reprimand. Following Jesus afar off got him into trouble.

6. Warmed himself at the enemy's fire (v. 67).

This fire was built by those who had come unsympathetically to witness the crucifixion and even to mock in this tragic hour. For Christ's disciples to try to get comfort from the things prepared for the satisfaction of His enemies is sinful. Many professing Christians are living a life of compromise, even attempting to get pleasures out of the things which the enemies of Christ have prepared for themselves.

7. Open denial (vv. 66-71).

Step by step downward Peter went until the words of a servant girl provoked open and blasphemous denial. This even by one who had said: "If I should die with thee I will not deny thee in any wise." Peter's trouble began when he shrank from the cross. It was that shunning which separated him from contact with God. It should be remembered that there can be no backsliding until there be established a position from which to slip. Many of the so-called backsliders have never been born again.

II. The Repentance of Peter (Luke 22:61-62).

1. The look of Jesus (v. 61).

This was a most wondrous look. It was doubtless filled with pity and pain. Christ knew the trials through which Peter and the other disciples would pass and He prayed for them. This look brought to Peter the full consciousness of his cowardice and disloyalty and his blasphemous words of denial, and yet it displayed His pity and forgiving love.

2. Peter's bitter tears (v. 62).

The look of Jesus brought conviction of sin. It called to mind his boastfulness and cowardice. How awful must have been his condition as he went out that night into the darkness, little suspecting that there would be found a way to get back into communion with his Lord. Doubtless the message from the women as they came from the tomb brought the first good cheer to his heart. Christ said to them: "Go and tell my disciples and Peter." This encouraged him, no doubt, as it indicated Christ's particular consideration and love for him.

CORN BORER JOTTINGS

Corn stubble in sight means borer trouble all right—plow the stubbles so they'll be out of sight.

We Must Control the Corn Borer.—In all the haze of discussion relative to the corn borer, it should be remembered that the purpose of this clean plowing is to get rid of this pest rather than to get by the regulations when the inspector comes to the final windup. The main idea is to fit the soil so carefully that there will be no remnants of corn stalks or cobs left on the surface to harbor living borers when they come to the surface after being plowed under.

Why Not Use Lights For Moths? Many have asked, why don't they use lights for the moths and catch them when they fly in June, July and August? Lights in various forms have already been tried and the corn borer moth does not seem to be attracted to these lights in any large numbers. And when it is recalled that in bad infestations, there are upwards of 80 million moths to the acre, it would take an unthinkable number of lights and the official lighter would have to start a tankage factory to get rid of the takings.

What Happens to the Worms? The corn borer is in the worm stage now—in the stalks exactly as he wintered over. It has been found that if these are plowed under, the corn borers come out of the stalks and up to the surface of the ground. Here they are picked up by birds or destroyed by the sun UNLESS they can find some stalks or cobs on the surface of the soil to burrow into. In that event, they "dig in" and go thro the resting stage and emerge as the moth in June or July equipped to lay from 350 to 600 eggs at one setting.

Use Three Twelve Foot Wires. Of all the simple means of turning under trash that is easily within reach of all, the use of three wires fastened to the coulter shank is the best. Lately the writer has seen several plows that had the wires on all right but they were only three or four feet long. These short wires are little better than nothing. The wires must be long enough to run back far enough so that the weight of the furrow makes tension enough to pull the trash right up against the furrow slice.

"We Must Clean Up or Be Cleaned Out" Says Jenkins. F. A. Jenkins operates 340 acres in DeKalb County. Last fall, the scouts came to his field and said they found three corn borers. Jenkins was skeptical. Later they came back and found 50 more corn borers. They asked Jenkins if they could hold a demonstration on his farm. He finally agreed but thought he would just go down and examine the hills they had staked to see if he could find the corn borer.

Shot Holes In Stalk.—"The first hill I found was supposed to have three borers in it" said Jenkins. "I looked and I looked and I looked but no corn borer could I find. Then I went to another hill and after much looking there, I found a shot hole where the borer had gone in about a foot and a half from the ground. Then I went back to the first hill and found where the borers there had entered the stalk."

Views Complete Destruction in Ontario. Later, Jenkins went to Ontario where he saw fields, lots of them, in which the corn wasn't worth husking. "There's no use for a fellow to kid himself into thinking the corn borer won't do any damage," says Jenkins. I am convinced that the thing for us to do is to clean up this corn borer before he cleans us out.

Shuman Plows From Poor To Perfect. Otto Shuman of Fairfield township, DeKalb county, was using three horse sulky 14 inch plow in standing stalks that had neither been poled nor pastured. He was doing a very poor job and spending half his time picking stalks while the horses were resting. By attaching two 12 fot wires to the plow, he did nearly a perfect job of covering them with only an occasional stalk to pick. This was in a field that ranges from gumbo to clay and gravel and is quite rolling—in places almost steep.

Wild Rumors. Some of the wild rumors that have been floated about the corn borer control campaign would be funny if they weren't so ridiculous. One man is widely reported to have "checked in" branded with a monkey wrench thrown with murderous intent. The man with the brand on has not yet been found, always being in the next county. Last week a few aeroplanes from the flying field north of Fort Wayne flew around with their passengers and directly they were taken to be corn borer air scouts watching to see how farmers were handling their corn stalks.

Control Men Are Reasonable. This should always be remembered. Those in charge of the corn borer regulations are reasonable men. The real job that every farmer is interested in is to control the corn borer. From contact all through the infested counties, it seems apparent that at least 98 per cent of all farmers really see the problem and want to clean up the corn borer for their own good. The regulations are to protect these 98 honest intentioned folks from the one or two per cent of careless men who have an obstinate bump and don't believe there is any corn borer in the first place and in the second place, they want to gratify their ego by telling what they will and will not do.

Disk Coulter Does Wonders. It is remarkable what man's inventive genius will bring out in times of stress. Recently a man has invented a disk coulter which serves as a cutter and jointer all in one. Arthur Barron of Thorn Creek township in Whitley county with 16 inch tractor drawn plow could not do a satisfactory job of covering the stalks. He put on one of these disk coulters and behold, right in heavy stalks that hadn't been pastured, he did a job that is a surprise to everyone who has seen it.

Notes From Sunday Service

Text: Mark 10: 36. "What would ye that I should do for you?"

I come to you for the beginning of the fourth year of ministry. Our three years preceding have been joyful ones. Now, "what would ye that I should do for you?" Study to preach new sermons? Lead you in Christian activities? Be your financial agent? Smooth out the Word of God to suit your whims and fancies? or, Receive the Word from the mouth of God and declare it without fear or favor. Shall we seek to find out what the natural man wants and do it? or, what the will of God is, and do that? "What would ye that I should do for you?"

Shoshones Make Unique Peace Treaty With Whites

A historic friendship of three generations' duration between the Shoshone Indians and the whites was further cemented by a remarkable ceremonial held recently on the Shoshone reservation at Fort Hall, Idaho, when Chief Tendoy III completed a unique treaty of peace between the Shoshone nation and President Carl R. Gray of the Union Pacific railway. The illustration shows Chief Tendoy and A. C. Hinckley, representing Mr. Gray, at the conclusion of the ceremony.

Rotate Batteries to Lengthen Life

Radio Engineer Explains How to Cut Down the Cost of Operating Set.

A report relative to estimating the life of "B" batteries containing helpful suggestions to radio set owners, has been issued by W. B. Schulte of the Burgess Battery company.

It is suggested that when the total hours of service have reached the computed value that the broadcast-listener remove his detector battery and replace it by one which has been on the amplifier circuit. If later the signals begin to fade, this battery can be removed to the amplifier set and replaced by another which has not been on the detector. The battery service then is distributed between all of the batteries and it is estimated that from 10 per cent to 20 per cent more service hours can be obtained.

It is pointed out that much of the service life of dry cell "B" batteries in receiving sets depends on the conditions of use, together with the type and number of tubes. In this report these various factors are discussed and examples are given.

"The usual 'B' battery is an assembly of 15 small dry cells soldered together in series and sealed in a convenient non-conductive box with terminals at end cells, furnishing a voltage of about 22½," said Mr. Schulte. "Some units have 30 cells of 45 volts, but 15 cells is usually considered the standard for a 'B' battery.

"'B' batteries have heretofore been designated by 'large,' 'medium' and 'small,' and it has been generally understood that the largest battery would last longer than the smallest. A simpler classification is used in this report, in which the batteries are grouped according to the approximate weight of a 22½-volt unit.

Service Characteristics.

"The characteristics of a 'B' battery, which are of most importance to the broadcast listener, are: shelf or storage life, service hours, noiselessness, uniformity.

"The shelf or storage life of a battery is its ability to retain its service-hour capacity while standing idle either before use or between periods when it is in use. A good shelf life is, of course, desirable to enable the broadcast listener to receive the maximum service from the batteries he purchases and to extend the hours of service when he is not using his batteries regularly.

"The service hours is the total time that a battery will deliver the necessary current before it must be discarded from the set as being no longer useful. High service hours are therefore necessary for economical operation.

"Noiselessness in a battery is a difficulty determinable characteristic and it indicates that the battery is free from minute voltage fluctuations which, by action through the tubes, cause noise in the phones. Noiselessness is a quality closely connected with the nature of the chemical mix, the cell zinc can construction and the cell insulation, and obviously a noiseless battery is to be desired.

Uniformity Important.

"Uniformity is a quality of no small importance. It is impossible to manufacture all batteries absolutely alike, but the ability of the manufacturer to control the process is measured by the uniformity of the batteries.

"The shelf life of a battery is determined from a study of many batteries which are regularly examined or tested at various ages. For example, batteries of various ages can be tested by different methods and the voltage or service hours determined and the average results plotted as a curve showing the percentage of the initial value at different ages. There is only a slight falling off during the first months. The heavier the batteries the better shelf characteristics they will possess.

"Inasmuch as the average 'B' battery is put into service within a few months after manufacture, the broadcast listener need not fear a serious loss due to shelf depreciation," said Mr. Schulte.

"A good shelf life characteristic is obtained by perfect insulation between cells, which allows no internal cross currents and a resulting decrease in service-hour capacity. Excessive heat during storage lowers the shelf life by drying out the chemicals in the battery. Impurities in the chemicals will likewise cause the cells to lose their capacity through internal action.

Current Not Constant.

"The current from a 'B' battery to a tube does not remain constant but drops off as the battery voltage decreases. Therefore to estimate the service hours of batteries on various tubes it is necessary to know the average working voltage of the batteries as it drops from the initial value to the end point of 17 volts. The average working voltage may be considered as the average between 22 volts and the end voltage of 17 volts—that is, the average working voltage of one battery dropping to 17 volts is 19.5 volts. The 45-volt unit reaches the end of its usefulness when the voltage reaches 37 volts. 'B' batteries should always be tested with a voltmeter after they have been in operation for an hour or two, otherwise they will show a deceptive reading, because they recuperate while idle."

Radio Electrical Terms That Are in Common Use

The words ampere, volt and ohm are continually being mentioned in connection with radio. In order to clear up any misunderstanding among radio fans, some simple definitions, which are reprinted from Radio Broadcast Magazine, are given here. The first two terms are explained by means of hydraulic analogies:

"Ampere—A current of water in a pipe is measured by the amount of water that flows through the pipe in a second, such as 1 gallon per second, or 10 gallons per second, etc. Electricity is measured by the amount of current that flows along a wire in one second. This quantity is known as the coulomb, and if this term is used, we would express the current as 1 coulomb per second or 10 coulombs per second, etc. In electricity, however, we have a special name for the rate of flow of 1 coulomb per second which we call 1 ampere. Thus, 8 amperes is the same as 8 coulombs per second. Ampere, then, is a term defining the quantity of current that is flowing per unit of time.

"Volt—The number of gallons per second of water flowing in a pipe, or the number of amperes flowing in a wire, depends upon the pressure under which it flows. The electrical unit of pressure is the volt. A volt means the same thing in speaking of a current of electricity that a pound pressure means in speaking of a current of water. It follows then, that the greater the pressure (voltage) at the supply, the greater will be the flow of current.

"Ohm—There is no hydraulic unit which corresponds to the ohm, which is a measure of the resistance of a wire to the flow of current. A wire is said to have 1 ohm of resistance when a pressure of 1 volt will cause a current of 1 ampere to flow through it. If the resistance were doubled, the current would be halved, etc."

According to the definitions given in Radio Broadcast, then, we see that amperes represent the amount of current, volts the pressure causing this current to flow, and ohms the resistance impeding the flow of current. These three units bear a definite relation to each other. This relationship, named after the scientist who discovered it, is known as Ohm's Law, which states that the number of amperes flowing in a circuit is equal to the voltage of the circuit divided by its resistance.

Gas Bubbles Cause "Boiling"

During the last stages of the charging process the solution in storage battery cells starts to bubble violently, and a little may splash through the vent caps. Do not be alarmed by this, as the agitation is caused merely by the bursting of bubbles of hydrogen formed during the charging action.

Cut Power, Amplification —Way to Get Distance

Like everything else in radio, DX is changing and I find that few radiolsts are taking this fact into consideration, writes a radio expert. Frequently I am called in to pass judgment on a set and give my opinion as to why it doesn't pull in the distant stations as it should.

In every case lately I am finding the same thing. Operators are groping for distance in the old-fashioned way. They are giving their sets every bit of power they've got and are plugging in every available tube. And that's just what's wrong.

Nowadays the way to get distance is to cut down on power and amplification. That is, if the set is one of the modern multi-tube affairs, power operated and equipped with a power tube in the last stage, or power amplification between the output of the set and the speaker. The change has come about because of two things:

Increased station power.

Increased set sensitivity and amplification.

Put these two together and power may be the stumbling block when seeking DX, because in addition to the station you want you get a half dozen which you don't want. Result: An annoying heterodyne between conflicting waves.

If the owners of newer sets want distance they should strive for selectivity and cut down on amplification in a great many cases.

This Worth Remembering in Operating Your Radio

Remembering not to forget, being one of the real problems of operating radio sets, as in anything, it is well to take advantage of good habits. Much "B" elimination trouble can be traced to letting the unit operate when the set is not working, and to remember to switch off the eliminator it is only necessary to stop the set at the eliminator switch before pulling out the plug to the speaker.

It has been found by watching many radiolsts that when they switch off at the eliminator first they never forget to pull out the speaker plug, whereas if they start at the plug they are apt to forget to switch off the eliminator.

Three Volume Controls in R. F. Amplifier

The three favorable volume controls in the radio-frequency amplifier are: Firstly, a filament control rheostat in one or more tubes of the RF amplifier; secondly, a high variable resistance in series with the plate circuit of one of the RF amplifiers, and thirdly, a tickler in the detection tube. If two or more of these methods are used in the RF amplifier it will not be necessary to use any volume control in the audio-frequency amplifier.

To Get Power From Sea

A floating factory to draw power from the sea is an idea conceived by French engineers. It is to be operated by turbine-driven generators converting into power water driven through pipes plunged 1,000 meters into the sea. The floating plants would be hexagonal in shape and are planned so that ships may be loaded or unloaded on bridges at the edges.

Lack of Hospitality Toward "Poteen" King

Accused of manufacturing "poteen," the famous Irish moonshine, the king of the bootleggers of the Galway region was sentenced recently to pay a fine of $50 or spend three months in the jail. On the day appointed for his choice he appeared at the gates of the prison and announced that he would serve his time, as he was unable to pay the fine.

He had not, however, complied with the rule of the prison to provide himself with a police escort and a committal warrant. Admittance to the prison was refused. The following day he again applied for admission with the same result. Vowing that he would pay off the fine by distributing more of his troublesome "poteen," he turned away from the inhospitable prison and went back to Connemara.

Takes Movies of Plants

The slowest motion pictures ever made are those of the United States Department of Agriculture which portray the growth of plants. This is done by the use of a "time-lapse" machine, invented by Howard Greene, that exposes only one frame of film at a time and regulates the time between such exposures. These periods usually are about 20 seconds, so that in an hour only about 180 pictures would be taken.

FOR LUNCHEON AND SUPPER

What to serve for Sunday night lunch or supper is often a problem.

After a heavy meal in the middle of the day a light supper is best enjoyed.

Ham-Tomato Toast. — Fry a tablespoonful of minced pepper and one-half tablespoonful of flour, a teaspoonful of minced onion in two tablespoonfuls of butter; add two tablespoonfuls of flour, a teaspoonful of sugar, one-half teaspoonful of salt and a few dashes of pepper, one cupful of tomato puree and a half cupful of minced ham. Serve hot on well-buttered toast.

Corn and Chicken Soup.—Take six cupfuls of broth in which a chicken has been cooked. Add one cupful of corn and a half cupful of finely minced cooked chicken. Season with salt, red pepper and celery salt. Simmer for half an hour, then add butter to season and a half cupful of milk. Bring to the boiling point and serve. To make a richer and more nourishing soup thin cream or egg yolk may be added.

Fish Aspic.—Put head and bones of a whitefish into a quart of cold water. Add two cupfuls of tomato juice, two tablespoonfuls of chopped onion, two tablespoonfuls each of chopped carrots and celery, two sprigs of parsley, a bit of bay leaf and one and one-half teaspoonfuls of peppercorns. Simmer gently one and one-half hours, strain, season with salt, cayenne and lemon juice. When cool add the whites and yolks of two eggs with four tablespoonfuls of gelatin, stir until the boiling point is reached, let stand ten minutes, strain through double cheesecloth and mold until firm. Serve on lettuce with any desired dressing. This aspic may be used as a foundation of any number of fish salads. Take some of the aspic, halves of cooked egg, shrimp, cucumber and an olive or two finely sliced, serve on lettuce. Other flavors will occur to one and the salads may be varied and unusual.

Shredded Cabbage Salad.—To serve with oysters there is no salad enjoyed better than the finely shredded cabbage dressed with salt, pepper and cider vinegar, adding a bit of sugar.

Food for the Aged.

We seldom find any reference to food for the aged members of the family. The inference is that they must take what they may from the family table without regard to its suitability.

The food for an aged person should be chosen as carefully as that for the young child. One cannot go far wrong in using about the same kind of food for the old as for the young.

Vitamines are found in milk, butter, fresh vegetables and especially in greens and tomatoes. Chicken, fish, and especially oysters, are particularly good for the aged. Of the fruits, apples and oranges are excellent for old and young. When they are unable to eat the apple because it needs mastication it may be scraped or baked.

Orange juice is a mild tonic; if plenty of the juice is taken it should prove most invigorating. Orangeade, lemonade, with a beaten raw egg added to a glass of either, is very nourishing.

Milk is excellent for elderly people as it is rich in vitamines. Milk toast, milk soups, well-cooked cereals with whole-wheat bread are all easy of digestion.

Queen of Puddings.—Put into a double boiler one quart of milk and one-half of a box of gelatin. When dissolved add the well-beaten yolks of four eggs. Let the mixture cook until thick, then add the beaten whites of the eggs with four tablespoonfuls of sugar and one teaspoonful of vanilla. Remove from the fire and pour into an oblong pan rinsed in cold water. Turn out on a platter when cold and serve with cream. Make the day before serving.

Pear Dessert.—Dissolve two tablespoonfuls of gelatin in one-half cupful of boiling water, add half a dozen ripe pears—drained canned ones will do—put through a sieve or ricer, add sugar to sweeten, vanilla to flavor, add two cupfuls of whipped cream, mold in a wet mold and turn out when set.

FAMOUS MINING STRIK

By THOMAS E. STEWAR

Tennessee's Famous Mi District

A UNIQUE American minin gion is that of Ducktown, which is of particular interest first place because it contain per, sulphur, iron, zinc and le ver and gold, and in the second because the fumes from its re furnaces have been used as a for developing one of the world gest centers for the manufact sulphuric acid.

Copper was the metal first m the Ducktown district and a st the area made for the governm W. H. Emmons, head of the ment of geology at the Univer Minnesota, declares that some metal was extracted by the I prior to the days of white setti This would indicate that the town deposit may have been longer than any other in America.

This district lies in an angle o states—Tennessee, North Caroli Georgia, but the principal min in Tennessee.

White men first began their for metals near Ducktown in '40's, and as usual, the first pro ing was for gold, of which som found. It is told that an early named Weaver obtained a lea exploit a mine known as the Hi and shipped 31,000 pounds of Boston for smelting. As it p this ore was extremely rich, ru 25 per cent copper, but when t turns came back from the s Weaver had disappeared. Oper were suspended for a time and lost what might have been a fo

During the next decade, long the great western and Michigan per mines were known, Ducktow a frontier center of mining excit and speculation. In 1855 near 000,000 tons of copper were pro in its mines, mostly by small c nies owned in the North or in London.

The iron, precious metals, zinc and lead of the Ducktown area have been of chief interest to geologists, having existed in quantities so small that little has ever been recovered. For the most part the precious metal content has been so low that it would not have paid to extract it by refining.

It was the existence of a great amount of sulphur in the Ducktown ores that led to the mammoth development there of sulphuric acid manufacture. In the smelting of copper from these ores, the sulphur was removed. Conditions were found to be ideal for sulphuric acid manufacture and mammoth plants were built.

The importance of this substance is one often overlooked by the layman.

It is a fortunate circumstance of the Ducktown deposits that the farming areas of the states surrounding it are deficient in the very fertilizers it can produce, thus providing a nearby market for its products.

Klondike Gold Rush

GOLD was discovered in the alluvial sand deposits along the border line between American Alaska and the Canadian Klondike as long ago as 1887. For some years after that the number of miners at work in placer mines of that district gradually increased, but it was not until 1897-98 that the richest Klondike strikes were made, to be followed by the mad rush of Americans, Canadians and foreigners that brought to mind the previous historic rush into California.

The difficulties of getting into interior Alaska, where the gold lay, were tremendous, yet more than 30,000 miners made this extremely arduous journey in a period of four years.

The name "Klondike" came from the principal river of this famous gold-bearing area, but it was not alone as a wealth producer. Over an area of something like 800 square miles every creek, brook and river was a source of treasure and the sands of every stream were carefully panned by the gold-hungry adventurers.

During the brief three and a half months of the Arctic summer it was a simple matter to wash the gravel along the Alaskan streams, but when winter set in the miners found their problem one of extreme difficulty. Food was scarce, camps were almost unbearably uncomfortable, and, worst of all, the sand and gravel was all frozen so hard that a pick made little impression. Under these difficulties the miners finally adopted the method of building huge fires on the sand at night. Awakening in the morning, they were able to shovel out the sand for a depth of a foot or so. This they loaded up in a stockpile to be washed when warm weather returned and thawed out the frozen mass of gold-bearing sands.

Alaskan gold production reached a maximum of $22,000,000 in 1900, but had declined by 1906 to a little more than a quarter of that sum. The population of Dawson City, the principal Klondike camp, dwindled from 10,000 to 3,000 and then gradually sank still lower. Canadian estimates have placed the total gold extraction on both the Canadian and American sides of the Klondike border at approximately $100,000,000 in the entire period between 1897 and 1906.

By Meredith Nicholson

Walking backward, blindfolded, on the edge of a precipice!

This strikes me as a fair characterization of the course of the United States with reference to national defense. Like many other Americans I have watched with close attention the trend of things in this particular since the end of the Great War.

"We'll never be caught napping again!"

Such was the declaration of many thousands of citizens when, with all Europe shaking, we were brought face to face with war, and found ourselves poorly prepared for the emergency.

It was the repetition of an old story. The United States never has been prepared for any war in which it has engaged. With the winning of national independence our people, loving peace and desiring freedom from the jealousies and hatreds of the old world, trusted in Providence and the width of the two great oceans for protection. But the danger of war was immediate and constant from the beginning, as the most casual reader of American History knows. Even our frontiers were inadequately protected from savage ferocity. Here indeed, with all our genius and passion for efficiency in commerce and industry, we seem disposed to trust to luck in the most vital matter that affects the nation.

I believe it to be the honest prayer of every true American that wars shall cease throughout the world. War, we can all agree, is horrible; it is the blackest blot on civilization The Great War, showing as it did the new terrors contributed by modern science to the business of slaughter, must increase hope that we shall one day be done with war forever.

But that time is not at hand! I am of those—and we are a considerable company—who look anxiously for the perfecting of some compact between the nations that will provide a court for the adjudication of differences between governments—some tribunal with power to summon threatening belligerents for a hearing in keeping with the orderly processes of civil courts, and with power to enforce its writs. This is a great ideal—the noblest that can engage the attention of mankind.

But while we wait for sentiment to crystallize favorable to some such device to prevent war it is the height of folly to ignore the ever-present danger of attack. Until there is some league of world-powers for peace it is only the part of wisdom to be fortified against the assualt of an enemy.

We hear constantly of the slumbering antagonisms of other nations toward America. And it is stupid to assume that our up-piling wealth in itself is an insurance against war. Dollar-power can but munitions, but powder and guns are worthless without man-power. The idea that overnight we can instruct officers and men for effective military service is not held by sensible people.

As long as we stand alone in the world we've got to be prepared to fight. We've got to be ready to meet an enemy in the field, on the sea and in the air.

It is manifestly absurd to fail to meet a square-cut issue. The National Defense Act of 1920 is in no sense a move toward militarism, but only a sane provision for the training of officers and men for military service against possible need.

The mothers and fathers of America, living in dread of the scourge of war, can do nothing better calculated to prevent war than to stand behind this measure to develop the training camps to their highest effectiveness.

This is my business and yours. It is of the nature of peace insurance. It is one way of helping to destroy the red-fanged War Dragon.

"Let us have peace!" said the war-worn Grant after Appomattox.

But let us not get caught in a trap! This, we may be sure, would be his counsel today.

Peace, the desire of all America! Preparedness, the first great step toward safe-guarding the nation.

For many years I have had some knowledge of the military training in American schools and colleges. No one familiar with this work will pretend that it has ever made a militarist. The training in itself is conceded to be of greatest value in teaching the student to think quickly, to be prompt, to be obedient. It contributes to the physical well-being of the young men. The answer to the constant charge that our youth, under the pressure of these strenuous times, and confronted by new dangers to their moral well-being, are not what their fathers were is sufficiently answered by the swinging lines of bright-eyed young men to be seen every year in the American training camps.

Hats off to the flag! The boy who enjoys the benefit of military instruction becomes a better American because he knows that if any hand strikes at his flag he is prepared to strike back.

Better than a great standing army is the Reserve Officers' Training Camp. The time is at hand to make provision for the better development of this service. The law is there but the money is lacking. The people of Indiana, never deficient in patriotism, may help this important work by writing to their congressmen urging the essential appropriations to make the Defense Act more effective. If five thousand officers must be qualified every year to keep America in readiness to produce an Army, then five thousand young men must be trained against all contingencies.

I salute the American Legion, Department of Indiana! May it bring all zeal to the work in this behalf which it has undertaken in so fine a spirit of patriotism.

HUSBAND SLAPPED HER AS MERE CHILD

Mrs. Vera Washler, Married at the Age of 16 Years, Granted Divorce

Vera I. Washler, testifying in the DeKalb circuit court last Wednesday, declared she heard her father-in-law tell her husband, Donald A. Washler, that if she didn't mind him he should strike her.

Mrs. Washler told the court that her husband slapped her as if she were a child. They lived near the home of his parents in Concord township. She was only sixteen when she and Washler went to Michigan and were married May 4, 1923. She said his parents complained of the way she kept house; that they took her washing from the line because they said the clothes were not clean, and washed them over. She averred that her husband nagged her about her housework, but that she did the best she could and that they got along until his parents interfered.

Washler had filed a complaint in which he alleged his wife neglected her household duties, associated with questionable people over his protest and told him she didn't care for him. She filed a cross-complaint and he agreed that she should get a divorce without a contest. In her cross-complaint the plaintiff said her husband owns $1,500 in personal property and she asked for $500 alimony. However, a settlement of this issue was made outside the court. The plaintiff's maiden name, Vera I. Rhoads, was restored by the court.

MEETING TROUBLE

They say that people who go out hunting trouble usually find it. You can meet trouble without even HUNTING for it.

And then What? Are you prepared? Suppose there is a long spell of sickness—a death in the family—an accident—losses by fire, flood, storm, theft? Then is when ready money is needed. That's why it pays to keep a little account at our Bank. We can advise you on a safe line of investments for the bulk of your money, but it pays to always have a little ready money at the Bank.

CONFIDENCE IS WHAT COUNTS.

MONEY THAT WORKS

A MAN visited our bank a few weeks ago who had just sold some property.

HE WAS not ready to invest the money again for a few months but he did not want the money to 'loaf' and earn nothing for him during that time.

SO HE wanted to know what he could do with the money to make it earn some profit and be available in case he needed it.

OF COURSE we suggested a Certificate of Deposit. You can have a "C. of D." for any amount and continue it as long as you wish. It pays a nice profit, too.

THERE IS no better plan for your money that is not otherwise employed. Let us tell you more about this plan.

DAILY VACATION BIBLE SCHOOL

Concord Township begun their first Daily Vacation Bible School Monday morning with an enrollment of 78 pupils; 17 in the Kindergarten, 24 in the Primary and 29 in the Junior department.

Mrs. L. E. Nicholson conducts the worship period of one hour. Mrs. C. R. Price has charge of bible or character story period.

Mrs. Hattie Widney, who has charge of securing a pianist for the term has Mrs. Pauline Jordan for the first week.

After the worship period each teacher with their pupils go to their rooms for their study period.

Mrs. Nicholson instructs the Junior girls and Rev. J. F. McKnight the Junior boys.

Mrs. C. C. Woodcox and Mrs. Carl Perkins have charge of the Primary and Miss Cleota Morr and Mrs. Chas. Koch instruct the Kindergarten department.

Mrs. Koch also acts as secretary.

It surely is inspiring to witness these children with their teachers march in the school house under the Christian and National flags and again we want to urge the public, and especially the parents, to attend this school and be sure to be there at the beginning of the first session.

He is indeed stingy who will not give you a smile.

BENJAMIN BALTZ COMMITS SUICIDE

Benjamin Baltz, aged sixty-three, for a week an inmate of the DeKalb county infirmary committed suicide early Friday morning by drinking carbolic acid.

He was found in some hay in the barn of Andrew Sponhour, four miles west of Spencerville. Albert Musser, formerly of Auburn, discovered the body and thought Mr. Baltz was sleeping. Later upon a closer examination he was found to be dying and Sheriff John C. Armstrong was called from Auburn. When he arrived at the Sponhour farm, Baltz was dead.

The suicide left the county farm Thursday afternoon coming to Auburn. It is said that he bought a 2 ounce bottle of carbolic acid while in Auburn. He was seen passing the Moffett Auto Livery on South Cedar street.

Baltz before going to the county infirmary a week ago lived in a small shack near the Spencerville bridge. He was a laborer and was recently employed as a night watchman at the Silver Fox farm near Spencerville.

He is survived by a brother, William Baltz of St. Joe and John Baltz, another brother at Hicksville, Ohio.

Interment was made in Spencerville cemetery Saturday.

COMMENCEMENT ACTIVITIES ARE ON

Both the Sencerville and St. Joe high school commencement activities are on, and last Saturday evening the Spencerville class gave their play, "A Hot Day" to a full house and on Friday evening the Junior-Senior play at St. Joe, "Be An Optimist," was given to a full house. In fact the school spirit always warrants a good audience and then too, real entertainments are given by the young folks and people know what to expect. Next week we will be able to give further announcement of the programs to follow.

In the shadow of the "cheap" house paint can

Don't let the low price on "cheap" paint fool you. Once you get in the shadow of the "cheap" paint can you will have a gloomy outlook. You may think the low price is saving you money. But your reward will be a bigger paint bill—an inferior job—a short-life job—and big repainting bills.

There is only one way to real economy in house paint. Use the best paint money can buy—SWP. It costs more per gallon—but much less per job and per year. Ask us to prove it.

GUARANTEED!

SWP is guaranteed to look better, last longer, cost less per job and less per year than any paint on the market.

"DADDY" HEININGER WRITES TO THE NEWS

Grand Rapids, Mich.
March 30, 1927.

Editor of St. Joe News.

Dear Sir:—

Some one sent me your paper of the 24th inst., in which I find notice of the death of my old friend, Daniel Baker. I dearly loved that man and felt deeply interested in his Salvation. At the funeral of good Father Widney, he promised me that he would meet me in Heaven. I hope he is there. I express to his children my sincere sympathy.

In the same paper I also see that my dear Comrade Buchanan and his good wife celebrated their 57th anniversary. I congratulate them. I always feel like honoring any two who can live together that long. It shows that they have a good disposition and know how to bear and forbear. I am not surprised that Mervin Widney beat all the rest in sowing oats. He is a hustler and who ever wants to beat him, must get up and out early. We have fine spring weather. Best wishes to all old friends.

S. Heininger.

W. B. A. ENTERTAIN NEW MEMBERS

The St. Joe W. B. A. entertained their new members Thursday evening at the home of Mrs. W. E. Henley. The following program was given: Song, America, Lord's prayer, music on the Victrola, readings by Marguerite Milliman, a flower contest which was won by Mrs. Mossberger. Refreshments consisting of brick ice cream, in lodge colors, cake and coffee were served.

Those present were: Mrs. Mossberger, Mrs. Lulu Shuff, Mrs. Frank Milliman, Marguerite Milliman, Mrs. Pearl Cochran, Mrs. Harry Goshen, Mrs. Mary Shuff, Mrs. Ada Loftus, Mrs. Callie Ridgway, Mrs. Lloyd Draggoo, Mrs. Gladys Hull, Mrs. Emma Freeburn, Mrs. Blanch Leighty, Mrs. Carl Perkins, Mrs. Neva Hursh and Mrs. W. E. Henley of St. Joe; Mrs. Laura Luts, Mrs. Annis Mason and Mrs. Sarah Goodchild of Auburn. All enjoyed the evening.

KEPT WEDDING A SECRET

Miss Doris Shull, of Spencerville, Ind., teacher at Clarksville, district No. 4, gave the pupils and patrons of the district quite a surprise after the program rendered on the last day of school last week Friday, April 22.

After the exercises were over Miss Shull stepped behind a curtain as one of her pupils came forward and read the announcement of her marriage to Mark Stuck, which occurred on Aug. 12, 1926.

When she made her appearance again before the school she was given a great ovation.—Edgerton Earth, April 29.

GRANDMA PHILIPS GIVEN SURPRISE

Mrs. Sarah Philips, known as "Grandma," of Rehoboth Church, Jackson township, was pleasantly surprised after the Sunday School and church hour, (at which she was present,) Sunday, May first, at the home of her daughter and husband, Mr. and Mrs. S. M. High. The occasion being her 93rd birthday.

She is a regular attendant of Sunday School and church at Rehoboth, also being the oldest member. At the noon hour a most bountiful pot luck dinner was served cafeteria style, of which all freely partook.

The rest of the afternoon was spent socially and all enjoyed the occasion. Friends, neighbors and relatives present were as follows: Mr. and Mrs. Nan Philips, Rufus E. Strong, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur M. Friend and family, Mr. and Mrs. Charles L. Peters and family, Mr. and Mrs. Floyd Watson and children, Edward Peters, Mr. and Mrs. Arlow Batdorf, Albert Yoder and son, Harold, Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Wright and family, Mr. and Mrs. Solomon Bishop and children, Mr. and Mrs. Roscoe Bishop and family, Mr. and Mrs. Winfield Berry, Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Peters, Robert McInturf, Miss Marie McInturf, Raymond Foltz, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Batdorf, Junior and Ann Ellen Ryan,

Those from a distance were Mr. and Mrs. Everett Walker, of Hicksville, Ohio; Mr. and Mrs. Mark Morr, of Elkhart, Ind.; Mr. E. T. Brand, of New York; Mr. and Mrs. Charles S. Friend and family, of Columbia City, Ind.; Mr. and Mrs. Floyd Batdorf and daughter, of Fort Wayne; Mr. Stanley Beeber and Rev. and Mrs. A. A. Irelan, of Garrett.

MISS GLADYS SHERMAN IS BRIDE OF PAUL A. STEWARD

A lovely wedding took place Monday evening at the home of Miss Gladys Sherman on East King street when she became the bride of Paul A. Steward, son of Mr. and Mrs. A. C. Steward of South Walsh street. They were united in marriage at 6:30 o'clock by Rev. Donald J. Dunkin of the Baptist church.

The attendants were Miss Mildred Van Houten of Garrett, and Delmar Haffner of Ligonier. Preceding the ceremony Mrs. Dunkin sang "I Love You Truly," by Carrie Jacobs Bond. Immediately she began playing Mendelssohn's Wedding March and the groom and best man approached the improvised altar. Then she played the Lohengrin march and the maid of honor took her place, followed by the bride. Little Martha Lou Bovee, a niece of the bride, came ahead of the bride as flower girl. The bride was dressed in orchid georgette over silver cloth and the dress was heavily beaded in cut steel beads. She wore silver pumps and corresponding hose. She carried a huge bridal bouquet of sunburst roses and orchid sweetpeas. The maid of honor's dress was nile green georgette made with a shawl collar and trimmed in silver. She wore silver pumps and hose and a shoulder bouquet of orchids. The little flower girl was dressed in pink crepe and carried pink roses arranged in a basket.

Both the bride and groom are members of the Garrett high school graduating class of 1921 and both are well known. The bride is a member of the Sigma Gamma sorority. For a number of years she studied voice at the European School of Music at Fort Wayne. The groom has been employed at Goshen for the past six months, where he is associated with the Morris five and ten cent stores. They will make their home at Goshen after a short honeymoon trip to South Bend and Chicago.—Clipper

The guests included the members of the wedding party and only the immediate relatives. Mrs. Pernetta Steward of Spencerville was in attendance.

NEWLY BORN BABY GIRL LEFT ON PORCH AT BUTLER

A baby girl, not more than three or four hours old which was left early Saturday morning on the porch at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Gaylord Mullet of Butler, has been taken into the Mullet home and will be reared as their own.

Mr. and Mrs. Mullet heard a rap at their front door at an early hour. Opening the door they found a basket outside on their front porch and in the basket was a tiny babe. The person who left the basket had disappeared.

Pinned to the handle of the basket was a note addressed to Mr. and Mrs. Mullet. The message was in poetry and from its tone the persons to whom the baby belonged knew that the Mullets would be glad to take the baby in their home and care for it.

The baby was perfectly normal and weighed seven and a half pounds. In the basket by the side of the babe was a nursing bottle.

—11—

"How about me?" the young Claude had asked, and realized as he said it that it was a fool's question.

And the girl had laughed.

"Oh, after tonight you won't count."

She had dared to say it, actually dared to look him in the eyes and say it.

"Is that so?" the boy had snapped, and he had never been angrier in his life. Rebellion seethed within him. And yet, he remembered, he had not hated her.

"After tonight, eh? Well, the night's still young."

Something in the way he said that, struck through her laughing guard. Her expression changed. She began to look ever so little—what was it—frightened?

"It's getting late. I think you'd better go."

"It's my last night," he had answered, without moving. "Why cut it short?"

Then she had moved to the door, swiftly, and held it open. He rose to his feet somehow and moved with her. He could not have told exactly why, but there was a dangerous feeling growing up inside him. Yet, now that he understood his younger self, Claude Dabbs felt if the girl had not looked so scared, the feeling would not have grown as fast, nor been so dangerous. If she had laughed at him, he would have been ashamed. If she had trusted him he would have been compelled to be worthy of her trust. But she saw, and feared, the flood tide of feelings she had deliberately evoked and something in her must have answered his passion. She was deadly afraid of that—as well as of him.

"I want you to go now," she had said, hard, cold and staring. "If you don't, I'll call down to the office."

He had faced her and shut the door, and now he was sure he hated her. "Go on," he had said grimly. "Call 'em up at the office. What you going to tell 'em? That I'm not your husband?"

She shook her head. He could see her face, puzzled, bewildered, frightened.

"That I am your husband, and you don't care about having me 'round?"

She still stared at him, her mouth open in an odd, babyish way that, angry as he was, he remembered he had thought pretty.

"It'll make your stay in this house short, if you start a row like that."

She sprung to the door, but Claude was there before her. Their hands met on the handle, and somehow, at his touch, she had given up, and swayed against him. Claude felt a little shiver run through his strong body now at the remembrance of how it had "finished" him, too, but not in the way either of them dreamed.

He was beyond reasoning or thought then. He was entirely given up to feeling. He put his arm about her waist and held her closely to him as he turned the key in the door.

"You can have the key," he had whispered, in a queer, husky voice, "when you call down to the office and say that the man in your room isn't your husband, and you want to get rid of him."

She had looked at him, given a queer little sound, and hidden her face against his shoulders.

* * * * * * *

Claude Dabbs stared before him, his lips moving. After awhile he lit his cigar, crossed one leg over the other, and began to talk, in an even voice, quite as though he was continuing his narrative to Ned from the point he had left off.

"Next morning I went out for a stroll before breakfast, and to settle in my mind a plan I meant to carry through quickly, before Polly made up her own mind. We'd talked lots about everything, but nothing was settled.

"Nobody'll ever know how wonderful it was to me to have Polly to talk to. It changed everything. There wasn't a girl in Peace Valley could talk as she did, none I knew, anyway; and the short while I'd been at Rutgers I hadn't met any girls, except Polly. She made me realize that we'd been fond of each other for a long time, though it had taken this to bring us together."

Claude looked up at Ned, who with a languid movement of his hand removed the cigarette from between his lips. Claude noted idly that it was not lit. He glanced at the wall above Ned's desk. A small photograph in an old-fashioned frame hung above it. It was that of a lovely young country girl, with character behind the young loveliness. She was Claude's mother.

"You see, Ned, I'd always been queer about girls. I liked 'em, but expected a good deal of 'em. Not every girl pleased me. Sounds conceited, but I don't mean it that way. It wasn't that—it was Mom."

His eyes turned again to the photograph. "It's one of these things you can't find words for. It's a feeling. Anyway, Mom gave it to me about girls, and Polly was the first. I meant she should be the last. I felt that if we were careful enough about explaining our marriage to Mom she would understand and be pleased. But she never knew.

"Nobody'll ever know how wonderful life was to me that morning. I hadn't forgotten Pop, but since I'd told Polly just how I felt about him, and she'd tried to comfort me, I could bear it easier, because Polly understood. I forgot all about her money. It never entered my head. I only thought of Polly. When I was going out, she kissed me and said:

"'Claude Melnotte, is your home lit by alabaster lamps?'

"I thought she was just fooling about my silly name. She'd read the play, you see. I hadn't, then. I just told her they were Rochester lamps. When I thought about it, as I turned back toward the hotel, I wondered if there was more to her question than just lamps—something behind it. I thought she might have been turning over in her mind whether she'd live with Mom, or insist on having a separate house for just us two. I didn't care. She could have her own way about that—and most everything else, too. But I've read the play since, and I'm pretty sure that there was a catch in it. Her question, I mean. It's the part where he's blowing about the house he's gonna take her to. All lies!

"She wasn't down in the dining room when I came back from the walk, but she'd told me to give her plenty of time to pack, so I went up to her room. She wasn't there, and her trunks were gone. I went to inquire at the desk. They said the bill had been paid and Polly had gone, bag and baggage, to the station, half an hour after I left."

He Turned Out the Lamp and Left the Room.

Claude paused, knocked the ashes from his cigar, and without looking up, went on hurriedly: "I'm not asking for sympathy. The girl served me right, and I know it as well as you do. I've told you this, Ned—and you're the only one I have told—because I want you to know the worst of me.

"Polly knew blame well I couldn't follow her, seeing she had money and I had none. Her lawyer, all these years, has refused to give me any clue. But she's never divorced me. Unless I'm much mistaken, the Mrs. Johnston who is up at the White house is Polly, and what I want to know is who is Miss Johnston?"

A little sound, like a sigh, came from Ned and he turned gently on his pillow, and then silence.

Claude jumped to his feet and went noiselessly over to the bed. Ned was sleeping as quietly as a child. Claude took the cold, unlighted cigarette from between Ned's fingers and looked at him with affection.

"Forty-seven years old, and I don't have sense enough to know or remember that other people's love stories are as big a bore as other people's dreams!"

He turned out the lamp and left the room.

In the morning, when he could get Dabbs alone, Ned's apologies were sincere. But though Ned insisted that he had only dropped off at the end, Claude had a shrewd idea from the lame way in which Ned fished for information, that slumber had overtaken him in the middle of the tale. They were in the garage where Ned had tracked him down, and he only laughed as he put his hand on Ned's arm.

"My boy, I was an ass to insist on telling you my old trouble. Boiled down, without any of the frills I put on so that you would get my side of the case, the facts are that I slipped up on my promise, broke my word to Polly, and she ran away. And Peace Valley thinks me an old bachelor."

He had made up his mind that it wasn't the thing to tell Ned his suspicions until he had corroborated them, or dropped them. It would be awkward for the boy, since he was seeing the Johnstons daily.

CHAPTER VII

Mrs. Johnston, having something rather disagreeable to tell Mary, kept putting off the evil day and hour.

Sooner or later it must be told, but Polly Johnston, though by no means a fool, was of a singularly sanguine temperament. She still hoped that kind fortune might intervene in some miraculous manner and save her the trouble and necessity of telling. If not, it would have to be done, but not this day, if she could help it. Having come to that decision, it behooved her to keep away from Mary.

She could refuse to go out, pleading a headache, thus removing herself from Mary's presence and scrutiny.

When the girl presented herself, fresh, smiling, and ready for motoring, she found her mother lying down. She did not see the novel that her mother had poked under her pillow when she heard Mary coming. Explanations were made, received, and then came silence.

Mrs. Johnston wriggled herself into a more comfortable position, and the novel fell on the floor. Mary restored it to the couch. Mother never read when she had a real headache. The situation became tense.

"Come, Mother," coaxed Mary, "what's up? You've been grouching sweetly for several days, you know. I've got to know sooner or later, so let it be now."

Mrs. Johnston sighed, made a swift mental calculation that she had better tell the most obvious first, and began:

"I can't keep it from you forever, but I did want to keep it just a little longer. However, here it is, Mary. I haven't any money. Not a cent. And the dividends on the stock, payable this month, just aren't going to be paid."

Mary gave a little gasp of astonishment and sat down on the floor by the couch. "Do you mean, Mother, that we haven't any money at all, or that we're just faced with a period of depressed finances and will have to tide over things until the first of next month, when you'll get something from somewhere? Tell me the whole thing. The very worst."

Mrs. Johnston saw instantly how useless it was to keep anything back from Mary. "It means the very worst you can think. I drew the last money I had in the bank to come down here. I expected, of course, to have Colonel Rittenhauser send me enough money to carry me along for another three months.

"Well, my dear, he's been speculating with all available money and securities. He lost mine along with those belonging to other people, and he's in jail.

"The rest of my money is tied up in stock that isn't paying dividends—that is, all except money invested by my uncle in Russian securities, which are now worth nothing. There's some land here, in this country, but I can't raise money on it at a moment's notice."

"Poor old mother! Have you any cash at all?"

Mrs. Johnston laughed. "About thirty dollars left. I said I'd sent for servants, but I haven't. However, I have interviewed Mrs. Pulsifer on the subject of coming here and closing up this house for me in case I have to go to New York suddenly, so that's that. I think I'll have to go there soon. It'll be a lot harder for you, Mary, than for me. Just now you ought to have everything."

"Pooh!" said Mary. "Wait till you see me suffer. Honestly, Mother, I can't realize it. We've never had to speak of money like this before. Why, we've always had it."

"You always have," Mrs. Johnston answered, "but there was a time when I had none."

Mary was amazed. "You never told me that. You must, but not now. We'll just have to be practical, Mother. What can we sell, and how shall we go about it?" She considered for a long moment, while her mother watched her. "Bring out your jewelry, Mother, and I'll bring out mine. Rent must be paid, you know. We can do without servants."

Mrs. Johnston put her hand on her daughter's arm as Mary rose from the floor. "Don't dear. I can go to New York and borrow money on the land, I'm sure. I was making up my mind to that when you came in."

Gay Colors Put Away in Nature's Storeroom

One of the densest jungles on earth today lies along the Motago river in Guatemala. Should nature, by the process of the coal age, transform that jungle into a coal seam, it would be only a few inches thick. What a forest of tree life it must have been to produce the seams of coal which we mine today. One of the thickest on record is 66 feet. While nature was storing away the sun heat captured by the prehistoric jungles, nature also put away the color of that tropic world. Within the last 50 years chemists have discovered vats of every imaginable color concealed in gummy black coal tar. Modern styles for women's clothing quickly took possession of these color "miners," so our avenues are brilliant with the hues of luxuriant herbage which we may imagine beautified our earth, millions and millions of years ago.—National Geographic Society Magazine.

Early Church Bells

The Irish name for bell is "cleg," and in the French it is "cleche," which some assert is derived from the Irish, whose missionaries in the early centuries carried with them not alone their books, but their bells also, to ancient Gaul to be used "more Scotorum" (after the manner of the Irish) in the service of religion.

FIX BAYONETS!

The War at Close Range Described in a Remarkable Series by an Officer of the Marines

Capt. JOHN W. THOMASON, Jr.

(Illustrated by the Author from Sketches Made on the Battlefield)

(©, by the Bell Syndicate, Inc.)

STORY FROM THE START

The author describes how the First battalion of the Fifth marines are quartered near Marigny during the first part of June, 1918, when they are suddenly sent up north to relieve the First division, bearing the brunt of the German offensive. Part of the Fifth wrest Hill 142 from the enemy and wait there for the German counter offensive they can see forming. A terrific German attack soon develops, wreaking fearful havoc among the marines, but not dislodging them. On the sixth of June the Fifth runs into bitter fighting in the vicinity of Champillon and drives out the Boche, but at great cost. Then came the Bois de Belleau and again the marines acquitted themselves marvelously. Replacements arrive to cover the heavy losses. The marines are relieved, but the respite is short-lived, as they are soon ordered to the Soissons sector, where a great German offensive is under way.

CHAPTER V

—7—

The Actual Charge at Soissons.

It was 4:35, the morning of July 18.

Miles of close-laid batteries opened with one stupendous thunder. The air above the tree-tops spoke with unearthly noises, the shriek and rumble of light and heavy shells. Forward through the woods, very near, rose up a continued crashing roar of explosions, and a murk of smoke, and a hell of bright fires continually renewed. It lasted only five minutes, that barrage, with every French and American gun that could be brought to bear firing at top speed. But they were terrible minutes for the unsuspecting Boche. Dazed, beaten down, and swept away, he tumbled out of his holes when it lifted, only to find the long bayonets of the Americans licking like flame across his forward positions, and those black devils, the Senegalese, raging with knives in his rifle-pits. His counterbarrage was slow and weak, and when it came the shells burst well behind the assaulting waves, which were already deep in his defenses.

The Forty-ninth company, running heavily, sodden with weariness, was plunging through a line of wire entanglements when the guns opened. A French rifleman squatted in a hole under the wire, and a sergeant bent over him and shouted: "Combien—how far—damn it, how you say?—combien—kilometre—a la Boche?" The Frenchman's eyes bulged. He did violent things with his arms. "Kilomet'? kilometres? Mon Dieu, cent metres! Cent metres!" Half the company, still in column, was struggling in the wire when, from the tangle right in front, a machine-gun dinned fiercely and rifle-fire ran to left and right through the woods.

Type of Senegalese the Boche Feared Worse Than Anything Living.

It was well that the woods were a little open in that spot, so that the lieutenant's frantic signals could be seen, for no voice could have been heard. And it was more than well that every man there had been shot over enough not to be gun-shy. They divined his order, they developed to the left, and they went forward yelling.

Suddenly Corbett, the platoon commander, leading to the left, turned and waved his arms. And through the trees he saw the Senegalese—lean, rangy men in mustard-colored uniforms, running with their bayonets all asiant. He turned back toward his company with the sweetest feeling of relief that he had ever known; he had his contact established; his clever and war-wise company would attend to bringing it, no matter what happened to him.

The battle reared into the wood. Three lines of machine-guns, echeloned, held it. Here the Foret de Retz was like Dante's wood, so shattered and tortured and horrible it was, and the very trees seemed to writhe in agony. Here the fury of the barrage was spent, and the great trunks, thick as a man's body, were sheared off like weed-stalks; others were uprooted and lay gigantic along the torn earth; big limbs still crashed down or swayed half-severed; splinters and debris choked the ways beneath. A few German shells fell among the men—mustard-gas; and there in the wet woods one could see the devilish stuff spreading slowly, like a snaky mist, around the shell-hole after the smoke had lifted.

Machine guns raved everywhere; there was a crackling din of rifles, and the coughing roar of hand-grenades. Some Boche guns were silenced by blind, furious rushes that left a trail of writhing khaki figures, but always carried two or three frenzied marines with bayonets into the emplacement; from whence would come shooting and screaming and other clotted unpleasant sounds, and then silence.

To left and right the lieutenant caught glimpses of his men, running, crawling, firing as they went. In a clearing, Lieutenant Appelgate, of the Seventeenth company, on the right, came into view. He waved his pistol and shouted something. He was grinning. . . . all the men were grinning. . . . It was a bon fight, after all. . . .

Then little Tritt, his orderly, running at his side, went down, clawing at a bright jet of scarlet over his collar. The war became personal again—a keening sibilance of flesh-hunting bullets, ringing under his helmet. He found himself prone behind a great fallen tree, with a handful of his men; bark and splinters were leaping from the round trunk that sheltered them.

"You"— to a panting half-dozen down the log—"crawl back to the stump and shoot into that clump of green bushes over there, where you see the new dirt—it's in there! Everything you've got, and watch for me up ahead. Slover"—to Sergeant Robert Slover, a small, fiery man from Tennessee—"come on."

They crawled along the tree. Back toward the stump the Springfields crackled furiously. Somewhere beyond, the machine-gun raved like a mad thing, and the Boches around it threw hand-grenades that made much noise and smoke. The two of them left the protection of the trunk, and felt remarkably naked behind a screen of leaves. They crawled slowly, stopping to peer across at the bushes. The lieutenant caught the dull gleam of a round gray helmet, moved a little, and saw the head and hands of the Boche who worked the gun. He pushed the sergeant with his foot and, moving very carefully, got his rifle up and laid his cheek against the stock. Over his sights, the German's face, twenty metres away, was intent and serious. The lieutenant fired, and saw his man half rise and topple forward on the gun.

Then things happened fast. Another German came into view straining to tear the fallen gunner off the firing mechanism. Slover shot him. There was another, and another. Then the bush boiled like an ant-heap, and a feldwebel sprang out with a grenade, which he did not get to throw. It went off, just the same, and the marines from the other end of the tree came with bayonets. . . . Presently they went on. . . .

Later, working to the left of his company, the lieutenant was caught up in a fighting swirl of Senegalese and went with them into an evil place of barbed wire and machine-guns. These wild black Mohammedans from West Africa were enjoying themselves. Killing, which is at best an acquired taste with the civilized races, was only too palpably their mission in life. Their eyes rolled, and their splendid white teeth flashed in their heads, but here all resemblance to a happy southern darky stopped. They were deadly. Each platoon swept its front like a hunting-pack, moving swiftly and surely together. The lieutenant felt a thrill of professional admiration as he went with them.

The hidden guns that fired on them were located with uncanny skill; they worked their automatic rifles forward on each flank until the doomed emplacement was under a scissors fire; then they took up the matter with the bayonet, and slew with lion-like leaps and lunges and a shrill barbaric yapping. They took no prisoners.

Back with his own men again, the company whittled thin! Was there no limit to the gloomy woods? . . . Light through the trees yonder!—

The wood ended, and the attack burst out into the rolling wheatfields, where the sun shone in a cloudless sky and poppies grew in the wheat. To the right, a great paved road marched, between tall poplars, much battered. On the road two motor-trucks burned fiercely and dead men lay around them. Across the road a group of stone farm-buildings had been shelled into a smoking dust-heap, but from the ruins a nest of never-die machine guns opened flanking fire. The khaki lines checked and swirled around them, and there was a mounting crackle of rifle-fire . . . and the bayonets got in. The lines went forward to the low crest beyond, where, astride the road, was the final objective; and the assault companies halted here to reform. A few Boche shells howled over them, but the Boche were still pounding the wood where the support battalions followed. The tanks debouched from the forest and went forward through the infantry.

In a hollow just ahead of the reformed line something was being dealt with by artillery, directed by the planes that dipped and swerved above the fight. The shells crashed down and made a great roaring murk of smoke and dust and flickering flames of red and green. The lieutenant, his report to the major dispatched, and his company straightened out, along with men from other units and a handful of Senegalese who had attached themselves to him, ran an expert eye along his waiting squads, and allowed his mind to settle profoundly on breakfast.

The officers' whistles soon shrilled, and the attack went on. The woods fell away behind, and for miles to left and right across the rolling country the waves of assault could be seen. It was a great stirring pageant wherein moved all the forces of modern war. The tanks, large and small, lumbered in advance. Over them battle planes flew low, searching the ground, rowelling the Boche with bursts of machine-gun fire.

The Fighting in the Woods at Soissons Was Close and Savage.

The infantry followed close, assault waves deployed, support platoons in column, American marines and regulars, Senegalese and the Foreign Legion of France, their rifles slanting forward, and the sun on all their bayonets. And behind the infantry, straining horses galloped with lean-muzzled 75s, battery on battery—artillery, over the top at last with the rifles. On the skirts of the attack hovered squadrons of cavalry the marines had seen the day before, dragoons and lancers, marked from afar by the sparkle and glitter of lance heads and sabres.

And forward through the wheat, the Boche lines broke and his strong points crumbled; standing stubbornly in one place; running in panic at another; and here and there attempting sharp counter-attacks; but everywhere engulfed; and the battle roared over him.

New Zealander Proud of His Native Land

As soon as you arrive in Auckland, New Zealand, you feel the peculiar character of this most original of dominions: a blissful land where the 1,500,000 British settlers—for the other nationalities form only small and transient groups—are producing and exporting precious raw materials and engaging in sports of every conceivable kind, which they pursue with incredible verve and enthusiasm.

They are also fully convinced of their superiority to the rest of mankind and of the unique privilege they enjoy in living in these islands. They have their reasons down pat.

We must not smile at the questionnaire to be filled before disembarking in New Zealand. In it you must promise before the Almighty to be good, to observe strictly the wise laws of the land, and, finally, to remember that the experience of spending even a brief period of your existence in these islands is something to be proud of for the rest of your life.

On making inquiries I learned that there is a little unemployment—not, to be sure, because there is no work, but because the English inhabitants prefer to leave hard labor to people of other nationalities. The several hundred Italians here all find good employment in building railroads.—Arnaldo Cipolla in La Stampa, Turin (Living Age).

Famous Indian Mountains

The five highest mountains are in the Himalayas in northern India. They are: Everest, 29,002 feet in height; Godwin-Austen, 28,250 feet; Kanchanganga I, 28,146 feet; Kanchanganga II, 27,808 feet, and Makalu, 27,790 feet.

CUTE PANTIE PLAY-FROCKS: GINGHAM'S PLACE IN MODE

LIKE so many little animated daffodils and buttercups will wee tots be looking this Maytime and summer time, too, for Dame Fashion is informing mothers that until further notice yellow will rank as one of the very popular colors for little folks' dresses.

This preference for yellow is evidenced throughout all fabric showings especially ginghams, organdies, voiles and dotted swisses. Included also in the list are dainty printed dimities and piques, with flowerets scattered all over their surface or perhaps dots or pin-stripes of yellow. A piping of solid yellow, or cuffs and collars of yellow add a charming touch to frocks made of the printed fabrics. If the dress be white then cunning embroidery or applique in yellow is suggested or smocking, fagoting or cross-stitch with yellow thread or floss.

An important item in the wee tots' wardrobe is the pantie-dress. The one in the picture is made of yellow and white gingham. The collar, cuffs and pockets are finished with a buttonhole stitch worked in black and white floss. The tiny duck in the center is embroidered in black and white.

An item of importance to remember in connection with children's dresses is this—sleeves are most often of the raglan type. A reason for this is that the peasant-type frock is "all the rage" for little girls this season and that the raglan sleeve is one of its characteristic features.

Smocking, fagotting and cross-stitching are being lavished on wearing apparel for youngsters. Thus is color introduced in all its gayest moods.

Two other phases of handcraft are applique and quilting effects. The former expresses itself in quaint animal figures and flowers and even picture-book scenes are worked out in applique. Plain color quilted with gay threads is very new as a trimming for juvenile clothes.

Youngsters are dressing in ensemble as well as grownups, according to the new styles coming in for summer. These include cunning printed sheer frocks, with hats of the same fabric. Quaint little bonnet shapes are shirred, having quite large scoop brims. Some are lace-trimmed, placing little rosettes of valenciennes edging about the crown and brim.

Romance in fashionland! Gingham, yes, simple everyday gingham, has been promoted from the plebeian class into the ranks of the aristocrat. After all these years spent in the kitchen, the schoolroom, the nursery and the playground, as a medium for housedress, bungalow apron and play-frock, behold! gingham is making its debut at the country club, on the golf links, on the tennis courts and even on the avenues and the boulevards.

It is a fact, society is turning out in gingham frocks at many a smart daytime event now that the mode is high-lighting cotton weaves as of outstanding style appeal. It is really amazing to see the smart styling which fashionists are giving to gingham.

In this picture are two exponents of the new gingham movement. A pin-check in the popular black-and-white makes an arresting ensemble costume as illustrated to the left. A three-quarter length coat of the gingham is posed over a straight one-piece dress of the same fabric. The vertical tucks suggest a panel at both back and front. Since it is the proper thing to line the coat throughout in this instance a soft melon shade of ging ham has been used for the purpose.

The etou jacket suit to the right is made of hunter's green gingham with a fine block design outlined with a single thread of lighter green to which the bias banded trimmings have been matched.

That which is true of gingham is true of all cotton weaves—they have taken a place of prominence in the mode. Cotton prints which have every appearance of silk are made up with painstaking care, their appearance warranting their wear at any before-six-o'clock occasions. Printed cotton crepes are also a very smart item. Bouffant frilly organdies for summer evening wear are in anticipation, too.

Gaily colored frocks this Spring! Underthings in soft shades to match. Tint them in ordinary water—but with true dyes. Dipping will do it—in ordinary cold water—but you must have real dye to get a smooth, perfectly even tone.

Diamond dye powder is fifteen cents at any drug store; so why do half a job with something not half so effective? And when you want the tint to be permanent, just dip in boiling water instead of cold!

The druggist has color cards and simple directions for doing perfect dyeing of all sorts of material; silk or wool; linen, cotton goods; mixed goods, or any goods at all; and exquisite tinting of dainty things. Or, send for a marvelous book of suggestions in full colors. Ask for Color Craft! Address DIAMOND DYES, Dept. N31, Burlington, Vermont.

Dr. and Mrs. Price, Mrs. Emma Baker and Mrs. F. R. Bowman, were at Fort Wayne Sunday afternoon attending a flower play at the "Little Art" theatre, where a play was put on by children under 8 years. Little Miss Margaret Kilpatrick, a niece of Mrs. Price, was among the actors.

The Filling Station is making improvements about its place of business. The cement walk has been repaired and is much appreciated by the pedestrians and water has been piped to the front for radiator service. Then a few days ago two very nice bulletin boards were put up. One in the west end at Harry Kees corner, directing tourists to Butler to reach the T. & C. pike and one at the grist mill directing route to Fort Wayne, also saying this town is St. Joe.

Clarence Green, county superintendent of schools, was present at the last day of school in the grades at St. Joe Tuesday of last week. A program was given in observance of the closing day. The high school continues for another month, the grade schools being in session only eight months. The grades at Ashley and Spencerville and the grades and high school at Corunna have also completed their year's work. The high schools at Ashley and Spencerville also continue for another month.

The B. & O. railroad official inspecting crew, composed of the general superintendent and local division officers, made a stop at St. Joe last week and found things in good shape and received recommendations for some improvements in shipping conditions by way of repairing drives. Information is also received that this summer, or when the new bridges are put in, that the tracks will receive new stone ballast for a half mile each side of the river bridge. Also that the tracks will be raised through the fill about eighteen inches.

Mr. and Mrs. M. G. Stuck were called to Selbyville, Maryland, Thursday on account of the serious illness of Mr. Stuck's father. Their stay will be indefinite.

Gene Cook, a cousin of Mrs. Anna Koch, of Cedarville, was buried Sunday afternoon. Mrs. Koch and son, Roy, Mrs. Beulah Coburn and Mrs. Nan Lysher, attended the funeral.

The R. H. C. was pleasantly entertained by Mrs. Ruth Buss at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Alva Perry. The next meeting will be with Mrs. Myra Conine, May 5th.

Charles Sherwood, one of the early settlers of DeKalb county, died Monday morning in his eighty-sixth year at the home of his son four and a half miles north of Auburn on the Auburn-Ashley road. Death was caused from extreme old age.

Soon after he lit in Garrett Sunday afternoon Albert Tucci, an Italian youth of 19, became diligent in his trade, that of a burgler. He fell into the clutches of the law a few hours later, however, and he was given a ten to twenty year sentence to the reformatory in the DeKalb circuit court Monday morning.

Don E. VanFliet of Garrett, has resigned as administrator of the estate of the late George F. Baltz and his final report was approved by Judge W. P. Endicott Tuesday. Dr. Nelson J. Shook of Corunna, qualified to act as administrator by filing $400 bond, with Milo Thomas as surety. The estate consists of $200 in personal property and $8,000 in real estate. The heirs are two children, Edith L. Kelly and Fred Baltz, both of Modesto, Calif.

THE LIFE OF A BORER

Ten months of the year, from July through April, the European corn borer lives as a larva, or caterpillar, in the corn plant. In May it goes to the pupal stage (somewhat like a cocoon), shown at the bottom of this picture. In June it emerges from the cornstalk as a moth (male and female shown above), flies wherever the wind takes it, always at night, and the female lays from 350 to 500 eggs on the young corn plants. Eggs change to larvae, and the borers are at work again.

Wm. Beams has quit farming near Montpelier, Ohio, and will soon take work on the Wabash at Logansport with Mr. Aud Harter, a former St. Joe foreman.

Mr. and Mrs. Sam Keesler and daughter, Jane, and Mr. and Mrs. Wilbur Yeiser and family, spent Sunday afternoon at Edgerton, O., with a brother of Mr. Keesler, John Keesler and family.

Mrs. Elmer Crowl, 64, many years a resident of Hicksville, died at her home, Friday at 1:10 A. M. from a complication of diseases after having been in a critical condition for the last three weeks.

Mr. and Mrs. Sam Snyder of Logansport, were Wednesday guests of Mrs. P. A. Walker. On Thursday they all went to Fremont, Mich., to visit a brother, Wm. Snyder and family and a sister, Mrs. Jennie Boston, at Burlington. All returning home Friday evening.

Robert Cochran, father of C. A. Cochran, who is here the guest of his son, had a light stroke of paralysis last Wednesday evening. After being confined to his bed for a few days, is now able to sit out on the porch. He had been sick for several weeks and is now in a very weak condition.

An Oklahoma girl advertised for a husband, and landed one within a very short time. The advertisement cost $3. She paid the wedding expenses, $9. In less than a year the husband died says the Atchison Globe, and left his widow an $11,000 insurance policy. Now will you admit that it pays to advertise.

Mrs. Anna J. Pepple, 81 years old, passed away on Monday at the home of her son, George Pepple, after a long illness due to senility, having been bedfast for the past three weeks. Surviving are two sons, George of Waterloo and Will H. of St. Joe. Funeral service was held Wednesday at 3 P. M. from the Evangelical church and burial was made in Waterloo cemetery.

"Aunt Kate" Leighty has been sick for the past week and is now being cared for by Mrs. Frank Akins. She has been in bed for the past week, which is something new for her. Only a day or so at a time is all she can spare from her duties, in fact, she is thinking now that her garden will not be planted right, but by the time her men get it ready to plant she will be on the job. She has more ambition than strength, in fact she refuses to allow anyone to write the checks in paying off the labor each week, and in her weak condition she manages to write them, and expects to as long as she is here. Her speedy recovery is hoped for by all in St. Joe.

A surprise party which was attended by fifty members of the Church of Christ of Auburn was held Thursday night at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Jenkins, who recently moved to the Brandon farm north of Auburn on the Ashley road. Mr. Jenkins and his family formerly resided on East Madison street. The party was in celebration of the sixtieth birthday of Mr. Jenkins. The friends met at the court house going to the Jenkins home. At 8:30 a pot luck supper was served, the Rev. I. C. Boyts, pastor of the church offering prayer. Many gifts were presented to Mr. Jenkins and his family by those in attendance, a number of their former neighbors who could not be present sending remembrances. —Evening Star.

Last week, Ray Reasoner received a telegram directed to the K. of P. lodge, stating that William Hamm, of Marion, was dead and signed by Milderd Hamm. It has developed that the message was a "phoney" and that the party is alive and well. Ray is still unable to solve the mystery behind such a thing and is interested in knowing what is doing.

Game Wardens I. W. Pence and Howard Long of Angola, have been very busy since the ice has gone out of the Steuben county lakes. This week they secured two large fishing nets, four fish traps and made one arrest on Monday evening for shooting two ducks on the lake at Hamilton. The man arrested gave the name of Harry Harvnot, and his home as Fort Wayne. Tuesday morning he entered a plea of guilty in Justice McCrory's court in Angola and was assessed a fine and costs amounting to $48.00. Wednesday morning they secured a net near Orland, but the parties to whom it belonged made their getaway for the present, but will probably be taken into custody shortly. The net had been hung up to dry not far from where it was used, and the wardens happened along and found it. Hoping the guilty parties would come for it. They secreted themselves and remained on the watch many hours, but the net was not claimed or called for, so to save it for the owners, they have brought it to Angola and placed it in the custody of the sheriff for safe keeping. Mr. Pence has worked in this community with the other wardens. Isn't it queer that men still insist in violating the fish and game laws for a little sport? No, guess it is not so queer after all, as people will do that which they wish, regardless of law or penalties. And as a rule they are folks who cannot afford to pay fines.

Sun's Effect on Earth

From the earliest times sunlight has been considered an important aid in the preservation of health. The ancient Greeks and Romans exposed their naked bodies to the sun in the open air to recruit mental and physical energies. Exposure to the sun's rays was always adopted by the physicians of those times as a remedy for many affections, "especially dropsy, inflammation of the kidneys and paralysis."

Notes From Sunday Service

Dr. W. W. Wiant brought a very inspiring message from the text, "Speak unto the children of Israel, that they go forward." Exodus 14: 15.

He said, "Moses, born an Israelite and raised in the court of Pharaoh came to the place of a great decision; and having made it, he then had time for something which we greatly need today, namely, to be quiet, to look up, and to become acquainted with God that we may hear and know his voice. God's voice to His people throughout the ages has been 'Go forward.' Christ is not behind us and His program for the church is not back to other days but forward, with a vision that stretches on through the years."

After the sermon pledges were taken for the new parsonage.

Roy S. Brown, Minister.

LUCKY ARTIST

Loaded with what he claims to be sacks of gold, Neil Ashley, well-known desert artist, drove up to the Biltmore hotel, Los Angeles, with the announcement that he had made a rich gold strike in Death valley, 150 miles north of Barstow. According to Ashley, he was in the Funeral mountains, 3,000 feet above the bed of the valley, painting. Toward sunset, he says, he started down the mountainside on his homeward way. Suddenly he was attracted by a glittering light in the rocks. Digging into the hillside, he found a large vein containing free gold and lead.

POULTRY

EGGS BY WEIGHT IS NOT FAVORED

The Danish method of buying eggs by weight is not proving satisfactory, according to a recent report from the United States Department of Agriculture, which has been investigating the Danish marketing methods. This is an interesting fact for American poultry producers to consider as there have been many arguments presented in this country favoring this method of marketing.

The policy of the Denmark co-operatives has been to buy the eggs from their members on the basis of weight. They adopted this policy so that the small eggs would be kept at home. The plan has greatly increased the size of the eggs produced until it is not uncommon now for their eggs to weigh 30 ounces to the dozen. The average weight of American eggs is from 23 to 25 ounces a dozen. This increased weight has undoubtedly been one of the reasons for the popularity of the Danish eggs on the English markets. However, the fact that all eggs in Denmark are marketed before they are seven days old insures high quality and is an added reason for their popularity.

In marketing eggs in England, Danish co-operatives find that they cannot get a sufficient premium for the large eggs as compared with eggs more nearly normal in size to pay for the difference in food value. This is especially true when eggs are high in price. As a general rule large eggs have brought only 5 per cent more in price while they contained 12 per cent more food value. Eggs that have brought the best returns to the producer are those averaging from 24 to 26 ounces a dozen. These facts indicate that American producers should pay attention to the size of their eggs, but not to the extent of marketing them by weight.

Selection of Hatching Eggs Quite Important

Even where care has been used in selecting breeders the eggs from the breeding pen should also be chosen carefully. Uniformity in size, shape and color of eggs is desirable and careful selection for these features has some effect on the eggs the pullets will lay next fall and winter.

Size is an important matter in the market value of eggs and although in this state it is not always considered or evident, nevertheless it is true that most eggs before they reach the consumer are subject to grading. There is a relation between the size of the egg and that of the chick hatched from that egg. A good-sized but not abnormally large egg should be selected.

Shape is also an important consideration and those eggs that are exceptionally long, blunted or short are objectionable as well as any lopsided ones or those showing ridges in the shell.

Whole Milk Found Best Protein Feed for Chicks

Milk has been found to be a good preventive of white diarrhea; both sweet and sour being equally effective.

An experiment was carried on in Wisconsin comparing whole milk with other forms of protein feeds. They raised chicks to six months of age on whole milk alone. These chicks grew faster than the others getting skim milk, buttermilk or other protein feeds. While it is not practical to feed whole milk to chicks this way, it showed that whole milk comes very near being a complete ration. None of the forms of meat proteins such as tankage, meat scraps or fishmeal were found to be equal to skim milk protein. They are usually better, however, than the vegetable proteins.

Poultry Facts

An incubator room with a temperature about 68 degrees is satisfactory.

• • •

Geese are practically all raised on general farms in small numbers where the feeding cost is nominal.

• • •

Grass or pasture lands and low land with plenty of grass and water, are ideal conditions for geese.

• • •

Because white corn is deficient in vitamin A, which is an essential food property, yellow corn is a more desirable grain feed for poultry.

• • •

United States Department of Agriculture claims limestone omitted from the diet of the laying flock reduces egg production 50 per cent.

• • •

Many a back yard that is now given over to old tin cans and discarded shoes can be made to accommodate enough hens to supply the family with good fresh eggs.

An open shed is all the housing necessary for geese. Not more than four geese should be mated to one gander.

• • •

A little added care will bring the poultryman added dollars for his egg output. It is quality that counts with the egg consumer, and care will give quality.

PETER AND THE RISEN LORD

LESSON TEXT—John 20:1-10; 21:15-17.

GOLDEN TEXT—Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ which according to His abundant mercy hath begotten us again unto a lively hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Jesus Forgives Peter.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Jesus Forgives and Restores Peter.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—The Risen Lord Appears to Peter.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Fellowship With the Risen Lord.

I. Peter and John at the Empty Tomb (John 20:1-10).

John does not enter into a description of the resurrection of Christ or attempt a proof other than that the tomb was empty and that Jesus had repeatedly manifested Himself to the disciples after the tomb had been found empty.

1. How they came to know (vv. 1, 2).

The information was brought by Mary Magdalene out of whom Jesus had cast seven demons (Mark 16:9, Luke 8:2). Prompted by love for Him she went early to the tomb, "while it was yet dark," "she was last at the cross and first at the grave, she stayed longest there and was soonest here." Her love for Jesus was genuine, though her knowledge of His resurrection was defective. She could not rest till she had done her utmost for Him because she realized that great good had come to her from His hands. The reason we work so little for the Lord is that we have such a dim sense of His saving grace.

2. Their investigation (vv. 3-10).

The news of the empty tomb, which Mary brought with breathless haste, so moved John and Peter that they both ran to investigate. Upon arrival at the tomb John gazed upon it, but Peter entered it. John, with holy reverence, hesitates. Peter, with impulsiveness, enters the tomb at once. Their respective actions are not to be explained on the basis of degrees of love for the Lord, but to temperament. The investigation convinced them. The removal of the stone from the sepulchre, the arrangement of the grave-clothes all convinced them that it had not been done by an enemy.

II. The Charge of the Risen Lord to Peter (John 21:15-17).

Jesus put to Peter the thrice repeated question, "Lovest thou me?" Then He gave him a commission. This shows that supreme love to Christ is the one essential qualification for serving Him. Love is the spring from which all Christian activity flows. He asked, also, to show that there are three classes in the church which demand care and attention. These three classes need special care and food.

1. Feed my lambs. (v. 15.)

This first charge relates to those who are beginning the Christian life—the babes in Christ. The word "feed" means more than instruction. It means in addition to instruction that proper surroundings, influences and examples should be provided. As a Christian minister, Peter was to be an example, provide the proper surroundings and do the proper teaching for the young Christians, those just beginning the Christian life.

2. Tend my sheep (v. 16).

This charge shows a different class. It means to shepherd the sheep. It has application to the mature class of Christians. The duty enjoined therefore is to care for those who have passed out of their childhood into maturity. He must feed the sheep, give them proper instruction, guide them, lead them and discipline them. For this ministry the essential qualification is love.

3. Feed my sheep (v. 17).

The implication here is that Peter was charged with the responsibility of caring for aged Christians. The word "feed" is much the same as in the first case. It means that for the aged Christians the instruction ought to be such as will be suited to their needs. This needs special emphasis today because much attention is given to the young people, but in many instances the old people are neglected.

III. Follow Me (vv. 18-23).

In verse 18 is given a clear prophecy concerning Peter's death. It was to be by crucifixion. Peter once shrank from the cross, but now the Lord holds it up before him. It is not the Lord's death on the cross, but Peter's own. He teaches here that the Christian's death is for the glory of God. Whatever may be before us, even the cruel cross, the Lord's command is to follow Him.

Our Hope

Our hope lies not in the absence of danger, but in the presence of Christ, who is able to control the storm. No church with Christ in it can be wrecked or lost. More of the living Christ, more of His love, of His teaching.—Western Recorder.

Costs Self-Denial

To keep in good grace with one's own self often costs self-denial, but it pays a mighty dividend.—Herald of Gospel Liberty.

TWO HOMES MADE HAPPY

By Women Who Used Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

"I have taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and I think it is the most wonderful medicine I ever tried," is the statement made by Mrs. Goldie Shoup of St. Joseph, Illinois. She declares that after taking the Compound she is in better health than before.

Mrs. J. Storms of 29 Lane Street, Paterson, N. J., writes: "I cannot speak too highly of your medicine and I recommend it to all my friends."

These statements were taken from two enthusiastic letters which tell of the help that has been received from using the Vegetable Compound. Both Mrs. Shoup and Mrs. Storms were in a run-down condition which caused them much unhappiness. When women are suffering from lack of strength and from weakness their own life and that of their family is affected. When they feel well and strong and are able to do their housework easily, happy homes are the result.

The Croupier's Rake

Charles M. Schwab, at a dinner on the eve of his departure for Europe, discussed his recent pronouncement in praise of speculation.

"Speculation," he said, "isn't gambling. While speculation benefits business, gambling benefits nothing and nobody except the gambling house."

Mr. Schwab laughed.

"An American family wintering in Nice," he said, "took their colored nurse to see the gambling at the casino. For half an hour or so the old woman watched the croupiers gathering in the cash; then she turned to her mistress and said:

"'Ah tells yo' what 'tis, Miss Abby. De only way to beat dish year game is to git yo'self one o' dem li'l rakes.'"
